Khelif and double world champion Lin were disqualified by the International Boxing Association (IBA) from the 2023 World Championships, with the body saying at a press conference during the Paris Games that a gender test had ruled them ineligible.

The International Olympic Committee (IOC) is using boxing eligibility rules in Paris that were applied at the 2016 and 2021 Olympics and which do not include gender testing.

The volume went up several notches to ear-splitting level when Khelif entered the arena on Friday in her red trunks and shirt for the last bout on a suffocating Parisian evening, the only breeze coming from the hundreds of flags being waved.

"Imane, Imane, Imane!" the crowd chanted and screamed.

Following yet another straightforward victory, the crowd cheered as Khelif's corner carried her on their shoulders to the end of the stadium.

Khelif's win even sparked wild celebrations back in her poor, rural hometown Biban Mesbah in Algeria, with her father, Omar Khelif, claiming his daughter's triumph as 'Algeria's victory' and crowds invading the city centre of the capital Algiers to celebrate the victory with fireworks and a chorus of car horns.

Spain cherish 'unbeatable summer'

AFP, Paris

Spain star Fermin Lopez described his summer as "unbeatable" after he starred on their run to Olympic football gold having also played a part in their triumph at Euro 2024.

"We have had a great tournament. We deserved this and I am really proud of the team," said the 21-year-old Barcelona midfielder after scoring twice in a classic Olympic final on Friday, in which Spain beat France 5-3 following extra time at the Parc des Princes.

"The truth is that this summer has been unbeatable. I am so proud and really happy with everything I have experienced."

Lopez was included in Spain's squad for the European Championship in Germany after an outstanding breakthrough season with his club.

He made one appearance for Luis de la Fuente's team at the Euros, in which Spain beat England 2-1 in the final in Berlin.

Lopez then joined up with Santi Denia's Olympic squad, in which he was the outstanding performer with six goals, including five from the quarterfinals onwards.

Only Morocco's Soufiane Rahimi, with eight, finished the tournament with more goals.

Lopez scored twice and Alex Baena, another member of Spain's Euro squad, added a free-kick as their team came from behind to lead 3-1 at half-time in Friday's final.

France fought back to level at 3-3 and force extra time, in which Sergio Camello scored twice to seal victory for Spain, and their first Olympic men's football gold since 1992.

"We found ourselves in a difficult position on two separate occasions but the team fought so hard. I think we have a great team, a great family and you could see that on the field," added Lopez.

"The European Championship and Olympics are the first two titles I have won and I am so happy."

Barcelona kick off their season next weekend but, having been away on international duty for more than two months, Lopez admits he needs a short break.

"I always want to play, but a little week's holiday won't do anyone any harm. But just a week, and then I'll be back."

All cases filed to quell protests will be withdrawn

Law ministry decides, sets up hotline for victims

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The interim government has said it would withdraw all cases filed with the intention of suppressing the recent mass uprising of students and the people, which resulted in the ouster of Sheikh Hasina's government last week.

The decision was made during a meeting between law adviser Prof Asif Nazrul and law ministry officials at the ministry's conference room yesterday, according to a press statement.

The ministry has decided to take steps within three working days to withdraw all the cases filed between July 1 and August 5 against innocent protesters.

Arrangements will be made within the next three working days to release juveniles from correctional facilities who were arrested in cases filed to harass them.

Additionally, through the Law and Justice Division's hotline number, 16430, the ministry will offer support to those who have been the victims of false cases.

During the meeting, the ministry also decided to swiftly hold trials against those involved in the killings during the protests.

The ministry said it would also take steps to withdraw the cases filed under the Anti-Terrorism Act and the Cyber Security Act.

Protests go on across country

STAR REPORT

Members of the Hindu community and others yesterday took to the streets in the capital and at least seven other districts to protest the attacks on their houses, shops and temples since the fall of the Awami League government.

In Dhaka, they blocked the Shahbagh intersection for the second consecutive day to press for an eight-point demand, including the formation of a minority protection commission.

Other demands include the formation of a separate ministry for minorities; the enactment and strict enforcement of laws to prevent all forms of attacks; and allocation of 10 percent of parliamentary seats for them.

Khaleda will run in polls if able

Says Fakhrul

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir has said party chief Khaleda Zia will run in the polls if she is fit.

"If she's physically fit, she will definitely contest the election," he told NDTV in an interview yesterday.

"She's very sick. She's in the hospital. She's suffering from multidisciplinary diseases. Her treatment was not going well in this country and we requested the judiciary as well as the government several times to send her abroad, but that didn't happen... Doctors say she's not fit to travel right now and we will have to wait for some time before taking her outside the country," he said.

The BNP leader said while his party is ready for polls at any point, the interim government would need more time to conduct them.

"The entire election machinery has become totally polluted and they are not in a position to hold a free-and-fair election. So, they will have to bring some reforms to the election system as well."

The BNP leader also said he believes that the Bangladesh army will not interfere in the political process going forward and also claimed that no extremist elements were involved in the protests.

Police not on the ground

Guarded by army, ansar personnel, cops in casuals perform office work in most stations

STAR REPORT

Five days after an uprising toppled the Sheikh Hasina administration, police have not yet resumed their work to ensure public security.

Officials who reported for duty in their stations, with the assistance of the army, have limited their work.

Some police stations are only recording general diaries and handling internal tasks, while others remain deserted with the policemen leaving after just marking their attendance.

"We're reporting to our stations but not going to the field out of fear of violent reprisals from the public as many of our colleagues had opened fire indiscriminately to kill protesters during the uprising," said an inspector who preferred anonymity.

Amid this situation, the Police Headquarters yesterday issued directives to form civic committees and resume police work at the stations to maintain law and order.

Yesterday, 538 out of 639 police stations in the country partially resumed operations with the assistance of the armed forces and Border Guard Bangladesh, according to the PHQ.

However, they refrained from patrolling the streets or managing traffic.

Speaking to The Daily Star yesterday, over a dozen police personnel cited this absence of the law enforcers as a key factor behind plunderers targeting the public, especially members of minority communities.

This correspondent visited Kafrul, Shah Ali, Pallabi and Bhasantek police stations in Dhaka yesterday. Several police personnel were found in Shah Ali, where no general diary (GD) was filed in the past two days.

"We're living in fear. Our families don't even want us to leave the house. But I still come to the police station because I'm a government service holder," said a sub-inspector of the station.

Withdrawal of cash from banks capped at Tk 2 lakh

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Bangladesh Bank yesterday ordered commercial banks not to allow cash withdrawal of more than Tk 2 lakh per customer this week because of a lack of security, a senior official of the central bank said.

It also instructed the banks to monitor cheque transactions and block any suspicious transfer of funds.

"Due to security problems of transporting cash to the bank branches, please do not allow withdrawals of cash more than 2 lakh in the upcoming week," the Bangladesh Bank said in a letter to the banks.

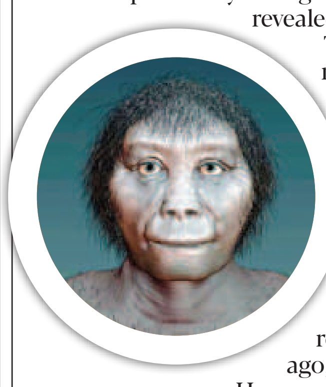
The directive comes as the law and order situation remains unpredictable since police have not resumed work following deadly attacks and clashes during the uprising that led to the fall of Sheikh Hasina on August 5.

The BB asked the banks, if possible, to stop disbursing cash among branches amid the weak security.

Smallest human species were even smaller than thought: study

INDEPENDENT.CO.UK

Homo floresiensis, a species of humans dubbed "Hobbits" for their short stature, were even smaller than previously thought, a new fossil study has revealed.



The species, related to modern humans, was first discovered in 2003 at the Liang Bua cave on Indonesia's island of Flores, after which they are named.

Archaeologists found that the small-brained people lived on the island as recently as 50,000 years ago, when our own species, Homo sapiens, was already long established in Australia to the south.

Initial fossils suggested that individuals of the species grew up to about three feet six inches tall with small brains and large teeth for their tiny size. The origin of the species remained a mystery, however, due to the rarity of their fossils.

It was initially believed that Homo floresiensis was a dwarfed descendant of the early Asian populations of human ancestor species Homo erectus.

Some researchers speculated that the "Hobbits of Flores" were a late-surviving remnant of a more ancient small-statured human ancestor species from Africa predating even Homo erectus.

BNP expels 44, cites role in violence, other reasons

SAJJAD HOSSAIN

BNP and its associated organisations have taken strict action against some of their party men for their involvement in the recent violence and violation of organisational discipline.

Over the last five days, at least 44 leaders and activists from 17 districts have been expelled. Of them, 27 are from Jubo Dal, 10 from Chhatra Dal, six from BNP, and one from Swechhasebak Dal.

Additionally, show-cause notices have been served on at least 42 leaders and activists of the BNP and its associated bodies in three districts.

Speaking to The Daily Star yesterday, Chhatra Dal General Secretary Nasir Uddin Nasir stressed the need for maintaining discipline within the student organisation.

"After the fall of Sheikh Hasina's government, some Chhatra Dal leaders and activists got involved in a few isolated incidents.

All contractual appointments to be scrapped

Interim govt to draw up list of those hurt during protests, bear treatment cost

MOHIUDDIN ALAMGIR

The interim government yesterday decided that all contractual appointments of the administration will be terminated in phases.

The decision was taken at a meeting of advisory councils of the interim government held at State Guest House Jamuna.

A list of all contractual appointments is being prepared, said two advisers of the interim government asking not to be named.

While some of the disputed and controversial contracts will be immediately terminated, the rest will be done in phases, they said.

In recent years, Awami League-aligned officials were appointed on a contractual basis. These create dissatisfaction among the administration.

After the fall of Sheikh Hasina's government on August 5 in the wake of a mass upsurge led by students, the contract of IGP Chowdhury Abdullah Al-Mamun was terminated on August 7.

On the same day, the former Prime Minister's Principal Secretary Md Tofazzel Hossain Miah's contract was cancelled.

At present, Md Mahbub Hossain, cabinet secretary; Abu Hena Md Rahmatul Muneem, chairman of the National Board of Revenue; Lokman Hossain Miah, executive chairman of the Bangladesh Investment Development Authority, are serving on contractual appointments, among others.

At the meeting, the advisory council noted the attacks on religious minorities in some places with grave concern.

Metro rail service to resume on August 17

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Metro rail operation is set to resume on August 17, nearly a month after the suspension amid violence centring the quota reform protest.

However, the operation of two stations, Kazipara and Mirpur-10, which were vandalised on July 19, will remain suspended until those are repaired.

The advisory council of the interim government yesterday made the decision.

Bangladesh Railway (BR) restarts services with the operations of freight trains from today and the full train services will resume from Thursday.

Besides, the operation of the Dhaka Elevated Expressway resumed formally yesterday with the authorities collecting tolls from vehicles.

Gunfire, clash at Islami Bank

Protests in banks controlled by S Alam Group, Salman F Rahman

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Clash and gunfire erupted in front of the Islami Bank head office in Motijheel yesterday while six individuals were injured by gunfire, a rare incident in banking history.

The incident occurred when officials appointed by the S Alam Group, which forcefully took over the Shariah-based bank in 2017, tried to enter the bank's headquarters.

Since 2017, the Chittagong-based conglomerate appointed about 14,000 officers and employees, mostly without following the proper recruitment process, according to people with knowledge of the matter. Most come from Patiya, an upazila of Chattogram from where Alam hails.

Cops call off strike, set to join work today

Home adviser says their uniform to be changed soon; 599 police stations resume operations partially

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Police members have called off their strike and are to report to their stations today.

They made the decision after a meeting with Home Affairs Adviser Brig Gen (retd) M Sakhawat Hussain and top police and Rab officials yesterday.

After the meeting, the home adviser told The Daily Star that many of the demands made by the policemen were logical, and he promised to consider them. Some demands can be met now while some will take time.

"Police uniform and logo will be changed at the quickest possible time. Their hearts are heavy with grief. They [police] do not want to go out in this uniform," he said.

"If the police are not there, the citizens are not protected. So, don't harm the police. If you have problems, tell the senior officers," Sakhawat said, adding that students told him that they have no enmity with the police.

The adviser said those at the political level and issued commands were more to blame for the way police were used during the protests. "I have asked them [pointing to the IGP sitting beside him] to take necessary measures.

"I personally think there should be a police commission. Police will function under the commission, not under any political party. Political parties misuse the police," Sakhawat said.

He said those who ordered excessive force were at the political level and no wrongdoers would be spared. There will be an investigation and the wrongdoers

Political parties must abide by relevant act

Says home affairs adviser, threatens to close down media outlet if it turns to sycophancy

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Home Affairs Adviser Brigadier General (retired) M Sakhawat Hussain yesterday said political parties must operate in accordance with "the political party act".

"If you [political parties] want to do politics in the country, you have to abide by the political party act whether you like it or not. As long as I'm around, I'll make it happen," he told reporters before taking charge at the home ministry in the afternoon.

"You will become a dictator -- that is not going to happen."

About the "political party act", he said, "I have prepared a draft [of the act]. There will be discussions [on it]. [But] if you are a political party, you have to register. You will form a political party and indulge in extortion -- that will not happen."

With an oblique reference to the Awami League, the home adviser said, "Look at the state of a political party today. Such a big and traditional party, whose name is associated with the independence of Bangladesh, its

Chief justice, 2 more advisers sworn in

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The new chief justice and two advisers to the interim government were sworn in at the Bangabhaban yesterday.

Justice Syed Refaat Ahmed was sworn in as the 25th chief justice at a ceremony at the Darbar Hall of the president's official residence around 12:45pm.

Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus, other advisers to the interim government, and distinguished personalities attended the event.

Justice Refaat, who was the most senior judge of the High Court Division, was first appointed as a judge of the Appellate Division and then appointed as chief justice, Law Secretary Golam Sarwar told The Daily Star.

The previous chief justice, Obaidul Hassan, resigned on Saturday amid demonstrations on Supreme Court premises.

Later, five more judges of the Appellate Division resigned.

Bidhan Ranjan Roy Poddar and Supradeep Chakma also took oath yesterday as advisers.

President Mohammed Shahabuddin administered the oaths at the same venue.

ATTACKS ON MINORITIES

BBC, dismislab debunk fake news

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

While it is undeniable that the aftermath of the ouster of the Awami League government was marked by violence against the Hindus, fake news is also being spread with abandon in social media in India.

This was found by BBC Verify, the fact-checking unit of the British broadcaster.

BBC Verify found that a photo of the arson attack on the house of cricketer Mashrafe Bin Mortaza is being shared as that of cricketer Liton Das's house. Mortaza was an Awami League lawmaker.

This piece of fake news was being spread from India by ultra-right wing influencers, found BBC Verify.

A report published by BBC said that a social media intelligence or "social listening" platform, also mined X, formerly Twitter, for trending hashtags pertaining to violence on minorities in Bangladesh and found that the most viral posts were generated from India.

A video of Chattogram's Nobogroho Temple in Laldighi Par allegedly being set on fire was making the rounds on social media.

BBC Verify inspected the footage and found that the temple was not the target, but rather an Awami League office situated right behind the temple was attacked.

A Bangladeshi fact-checking organisation called dismislab also found the truth to this.

Two suspected robbers beaten to death

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Dinajpur

Two people, including a teenage boy, were beaten to death by a mob while they reportedly attempted to rob a battery-run autorickshaw in Dinajpur Sadar upazila early yesterday.

The incident took place at Nawshan Dighi (Ramsagar) village under the upazila's Auliapur union shortly after Saturday midnight.

The deceased were identified as Shuvo Meraz, 20, son of Sabbir Hossain of the town's Neemnagar Balubari area and Md Tareq, 17, son of late Md Jewel block-4 of the Newtown area.

Farid Hossain, officer-in-charge of Sadar Police Station, quoting locals, said, "Shuvo and Tareq stopped an autorickshaw at Ramsagar around midnight on Saturday and tried to rob the vehicle at knifepoint. At one point, they stabbed the driver and tried to get away with the vehicle."

Later, locals caught and beat them, leaving both injured critically, the OC said.

They were brought to Dinajpur M Abdur Rahim Medical College Hospital, where doctors declared them dead on arrival around 3:20am, said Md Mortuza Rahman, a physician at the hospital.

Video clip of Yunus' motorcade stuck in traffic goes viral

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The motorcade of Prof Muhammad Yunus, the chief adviser to the interim government, was spotted in the capital stuck in traffic.

Usually, the motorcade of the head of the government gets the full VIP treatment -- a clear path to his destination without any traffic on the street, not even pedestrians on pavements or people on footbridges.

A video taken by a commuter of the stuck motorcade has gone viral on social media.

It was not immediately clear when the video was taken.

The footage shows the motorcade stuck in front of the Jibon Bima Tower in Motijheel.

The car's licence plate read, "Prime Minister".

His car was flanked by Special Security Force personnel who got out of their vehicles and encircled the car.

As people attempted to get a closer look, an SSF officer with a megaphone told people not to approach the vehicle that had tinted windows.

Previously, the prime minister and the president would opt for seamless journeys by completely blocking and emptying the road they would be travelling on without prior notice.

For the duration of the VIP movement, pedestrians would not be allowed on the pavements or on the footbridges. Even street hawkers had to close their shops and leave.

"Chief Advisor Muhammad Yunus will immediately sit with the representative bodies and other concerned groups to find ways to resolve such heinous attacks," said another adviser.

The advisory council of the interim government also decided that a list of all injured protestors would be prepared at the earliest and their treatment would be funded by the government.

The health ministry will instruct all hospitals accordingly. The government will also support the families of the deceased protestors.

More than 400 people, including students and police personnel, were killed in the violence centring the protests on quota reforms for government jobs. Several thousands were also injured.

The ministry of foreign affairs will immediately start consultation for the release of the 57 Bangladeshis arrested and sentenced by the UAE authority for protesting in support of the Bangladeshi students and people.

"If needed, the chief adviser himself will talk to the concerned government," said an adviser.

The interim government has also accepted the resignation of Bangladesh Bank Governor Abdur Rouf Talukder and Bangladesh Securities and Exchange Commission Chairman Shibli Rubayat-Ul Islam.

The governor of Bangladesh Bank will be appointed soon, while a three-member search committee has been formed to recommend appointments for the vacant posts of deputy governors.

The advisory council decided that the supply of all essentials shall be ensured.

Operations of metro rail, suspended since July 18, will resume from Saturday. The train, however, will not stop at the damaged stations of Kazipara and Mirpur until repair works are complete.

Dismislab said that an X account called Daily Latest Updates first shared that video along with the hashtags "#AllEyesOnBangladeshiHindus" and #SaveBangladeshiHindus". The account is run from India, said dismislab.

They found that the video was even run on an Indian channel called RepublicTV.

Similarly, Factwatch, the fact-checking wing of University of Liberal Arts Bangladesh, found that an old video of a shop on fire was being shared as evidence of arson attack on Hindu establishments.

"The post says that the video shows that Hindu shops are being set on fire in Lakshmipur's Maju Chowdhury's Haat. Whereas this is an old video from July 11, 2024, of when the market caught on fire," said Factwatch.

Dismislab debunked the same video and found that it was primarily posted by an Indian X account, along with the hashtag #AllEyesOnBangladeshiHindus.

The video was also carried by Sudarshan News, an Indian news channel.

Dismislab also found that a fake photo is being shared as evidence of a Hindu woman getting raped in Bangladesh. The photo stems from an incident of sexual assault and trafficking in Bangalore in India from 2021.

However, the photo is primarily being carried by an X account from India.

Bangladesh Hindu-Bouddha-Christian Oikya Parishad and Puja Udjapan Parishad recorded 205 incidents of violence against minorities in 52 districts.

Over 400 people, including 42 policemen, were killed and many injured during the student mass movement that eventually forced Sheikh Hasina to resign and flee.

Sakhawat said they had decided to take action against those involved in the Rangpur shooting and killing of Begum Rokeya University student Abu Sayed.

A probe has begun and the officer-in-charge who filed the FIR and "framed a 12-year-old boy" has been suspended.

Asked about many policemen accusing their commander of ordering the shooting of protesters, the adviser said, "I cannot respond immediately. But those in command also have their higher command. What did the man sitting here [at the ministry] do? I will blame the man sitting here, before blaming others."

Replying to a query, the adviser said they would discuss the probe in this regard at the cabinet. "I am not a dictator. I will make a decision now."

Coordinators for the protesting policemen Inspector Zahidul Islam and Constable Shoaib Ahmed announced the withdrawal of the police strike after meeting Sakhawat.

They were assured that most of their demands would be met.

Formation of a police commission and a change in uniform were two of the 11 demands made by the policemen.

Earlier in the day, Sakhawat said all police personnel have to report to their stations by this Thursday or else they would be considered "unwilling to be in the force any more".

Talking to reporters at his secretariat office, Sakhawat said, "Police's morale is very low now."

As of yesterday, 599 out of 639 police stations in the country resumed partial operations with assistance from the armed forces and Ansar members.

Most of the stations were not fully staffed. General diaries were being filed, and some office tasks were being carried out.

Police were yet to start patrolling as of last night.

Sakhawat yesterday also visited the Central Police Hospital in Dhaka and enquired about the health of the injured police personnel.

Talking to reporters there, Sakhawat said, "Police have been given lethal weapons. I was surprised to see 7.62 [7.62mm rifles] in the police's hand ... Police should not be given these weapons.

"I am saying clearly, whether politicians like it or not, it will be difficult to do politics now. You can't use police like killers and henchmen any more.

"Our society cannot function without police. I am receiving reports of robberies every day," he said, adding that what the army is now doing is not their job. But they are still doing it. They were even attacked in Gopalganj.

The protesters are demanding the cancellation of appointments made after 2017 without following the proper recruitment process and the reinstatement of persons illegally terminated after 2017, said Anisur Rahman, an Islami Bank official.

The protesters decided not to allow any executive who joined after 2017 to enter the bank.

Most of the officials who joined the bank after 2017 did not come to office after the resignation of Hasina, including the bank chairman, managing director, additional managing director and deputy managing directors, according to people familiar with the matter.

But yesterday, a group of officials appointed after 2017 gathered around the head office at around 10.30am and tried to enter the office. Protesters blocked their way, which later transformed into clashes.

Six of the protesters were wounded by gunshots, they said.

Last week, Muhammad Qaisar Ali, additional managing director of Islami Bank, was forced to resign.

Once one of the most robust banks in Bangladesh, Islami Bank's financial health started deteriorating after S Alam Group took control.

There is an allegation that the conglomerate took out huge amounts of money from the bank in the name of loans.

The Islami Bank recently faced a huge liquidity crisis and its current account with the central bank faced a deficit for a long time.

On the other hand, the central bank is providing liquidity facility to the lender in a special arrangement.

Mohammed Monirul Moula, managing director of the bank, could not be reached for comment.

Meanwhile, a group of employees of Social Islami Bank, where S Alam Group owns significant stakes, are demanding the dissolution of the existing board.

The officials, all of whom were appointed before S Alam Group took over Social Islami in 2017, placed their demands from a human chain in front of the National Press Club in Dhaka.

At the programme, they alleged that S Alam Group seized control of the bank in 2017 by taking hostage the then board of directors at gunpoint.

Since then, the group along with its associates and with the direct support of the Awami League government has embezzled thousands of crores from the bank's stakeholders and laundered the money abroad, the demonstrators said.

The employees urged the current interim government to dissolve the existing board and establish a new one composed of the bank's original owners and founding entrepreneurs, to "free the institution from the grip of money launderers".

Also yesterday, sacked IFIC officials gathered in front of the head office around 10:00am demanding their jobs back.

They also demanded exemplary punishment for the bank's chairman Salman F Rahman, a Sheikh Hasina loyalist, and former managing director Shah Alam Sarwar.

Meanwhile, the central bank yesterday instructed banks to refrain from undisciplined work at banks.

Such actions could cause depositors to lose their confidence, and these activities are punishable offences under the Bank Companies Act, the notice said.

Metro rail service to resume

Operations of the metro rail and passengers' trains have been suspended since July 18.

METRO

MAN Siddique, the managing director of Dhaka Mass Transit Company Ltd, yesterday said they have begun preparing to resume operations.

They were expecting to start trial runs within a day or two, he told The Daily Star yesterday.

Asked about the two vandalised stations, he said the committee formed to assess the damage and all other technical issues was yet to submit a report.

"We are hoping the committee will submit the report soon, and we will move forward on the basis of the report."

Attackers vandalised the two stations on July 19 and authorities at that time said it would take at least one year to make the stations operational.

Over three lakh commuters used to travel on the metro rail daily.

RAIL SERVICES

BR will resume railway operations from today, after more than three weeks.

The operations will restart with freight trains while mail, express, local, and commuter trains will start services from Tuesday and intercity trains from Thursday.

Tickets for intercity trains will be available online from 5:00pm today.

However, operation of Parabat Express and Jamalpur Express trains will remain suspended, Nahid Hasan Khan, director (public relations) of BR, said in a press release yesterday.

Operations of passenger trains were suspended on July 18 amid the violence. Some freight trains continued to run for one or two days after July 18.

In another development, the authorities of the Dhaka Elevated Expressway formally resumed its operation from 3:00pm yesterday, said an official.

However, entry ramps at Banani and Mohakhali and an exit ramp near the FDC gate (Karwan Bazar) will be closed.

"We have resumed formal operation of expressway by starting toll collection from vehicles at the airport ramp," Captain (retd) Hasib Hasan Khan, manager (operations and maintenance) of First Dhaka Elevated Expressway Company Ltd, which operates the expressway, told The Daily Star yesterday.

Attackers torched the Banani toll booth on July 18 and the Mohakhali toll booth the following day amid unrest centring the quota reform protest. Toll collection had been suspended since then.

After the fall of the Sheikh Hasina-led government on August 5, people started using the expressway without paying tolls as the toll collection mechanism was absent.

Hasib said they closed the two entry ramps at Banani and Mohakhali as the toll booths were torched. They also closed the exit ramp near the FDC gate as one of the expressway pillars there was set on fire. "We are checking the pillar ... ."

The first elevated expressway was opened to traffic partially from the airport area to Farmgate in September last year, and the FDC exit was opened early this year, giving much relief to the city commuters.

On average, over 50,000 vehicles used the expressway daily.

BUS SERVICES

Long-route bus services resumed last week.

However, the number of passengers is very low, Mosharraf Hossain, general manager of Hanif Paribahan, told this correspondent yesterday.

He said they were operating 50 to 60 percent of buses in their fleet.

foreign ministry officials yesterday, he shared the priorities of the interim authorities.

He said the interim government condones all such attacks, whether for religious or political identity.

Chief Adviser Muhammad Yunus is likely to meet the leaders of the minority communities today, Touhid said.

He also requested the media to factcheck before publishing news reports.

About the India-Bangladesh relations, he said there is no doubt the two governments had a very good relationship in the past, adding that the interim government will try to ensure the relationship is not only between the governments, but also between the two peoples.

"The people are very important in this relationship. They should feel that the relationship with India is very good ... We want to take it forward and seek India's support in this regard."

About the deals Sheikh Hasina signed during her recent visit to India before her ousting, Touhid said, he is yet to look at them.

The foreign adviser also said the international community has expressed its readiness to work with the interim government, which is also committed to work with all for the best interest of Bangladesh.

About the UN's willingness to deploy a fact-finding mission to probe recent killings and violence, he said they can certainly be involved in this regard.

Today, Touhid will hold a meeting with foreign diplomats based in Dhaka and give a briefing about the country's latest situation while also seek their support. The issue of restarting visa issuance will also come up.

He also said the government will maintain the policy of anti-discrimination in all spheres of life, and especially emphasise on the welfare of the more than 10 million Bangladeshis abroad. "We want to ensure they get better services."

Chief Adviser Yunus himself will speak to the high authorities of the UAE to release over 50 Bangladeshis, who were jailed for holding rallies in solidarity with the students in Bangladesh.

Regarding former Hasina's son Sajeeb Wazed Joy's claim that Hasina has not resigned, he said he has confirmation that her resignation letter was sent to the president.

A seven-member committee has been formed to investigate the internet shutdown during the recent protests that led to the fall of the Sheikh Hasina government.

This comes after Nahid Islam, adviser for Posts, Telecommunications, and Information Technology, sought an explanation as to why the internet was shut down during the protest and who was responsible, with a report within 24 hours.

AKM Amirul Islam, an additional secretary at the Posts and Telecommunications Division, was appointed as the head of the committee.

"We are now working on it," he told The Daily Star.

Earlier, while speaking to journalists at the secretariat, Nahid said action will be taken against the officials involved in the internet shutdown.

Nahid said access to the internet is a right, and disrupting or shutting down internet services is a violation of human rights.

Wave of resignations hits universities

UGC chairman, at least 13 VCs and top officials quit over a week

MOHIUDDIN ALAMGIR

Most of these resignations took place following the ouster of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina in the wake of a mass upsurge led by the students.

A wave of resignations has swept through the nation's higher education sector, as an unprecedented number of vice chancellors from the public universities are stepping down from their positions.

At least 13 VCs have so far resigned from their official positions.

"We are fearing that the number will increase in the coming days," said a University Grants Commission top official.

There are 42 public universities in the country that are teaching students. Besides there are five public universities that are yet to enrol students, five medical universities and two affiliating universities and one open university.

A UGC member said in most cases, these VCs are stepping down citing personal reasons, but they are actually doing it in the face of pressure from students and teachers.

Most of these resignations took place following the ouster of prime minister Sheikh Hasina in the wake of a mass upsurge led by the students.

All the VCs' were appointed by the previous Awami League government.

UGC CHAIR STEPS DOWN

University Grants Commission Chairman Prof Kazi Shahidullah resigned from his post yesterday citing illness. In his resignation letter to the education ministry's Secondary and Higher Secondary Division, Shahidullah said he has been in Australia for medical treatment since August 20 last year.

The letter said based on advice from Australian doctors and due to his health condition, he is unable to continue his duties.

He joined as the UGC chairman for a second term on May 28 last year. Earlier in May 2019, Shahidullah was appointed the UGC chair.

Shahidullah is a brother of Awami League leader Kazi Zafarullah.

UGC member Prof Muhammed Alamgir said he will remain in charge as UGC chairman until the next chairman takes charge.

Yesterday, the UGC appointed Mohammad Fakhrul Islam, director of the research support and publication division, as its new secretary, replacing Ferdous Zaman.

HC division also needs reform

Says Attorney General Asaduzzaman

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court Division of the Supreme Court needs to be reformed like the Appellate Division, said Attorney General Md Asaduzzaman yesterday.

Speaking to reporters at his Supreme Court office yesterday, he expressed optimism that the newly appointed Chief Justice, Syed Refaat Ahmed, would soon enhance the judiciary's role in upholding the rights of the people of Bangladesh.

"The government has taken initiatives to reform the Supreme Court. With a new chief justice in place, I am confident that this institution will quickly evolve to better serve the people," said Asaduzzaman, who was appointed on August 8, even before the interim government took oath.

His remarks come in the wake of significant changes in the judiciary, including the resignation of former chief justice Obaidul Hassan and five other Appellate Division judges on Saturday, amid widespread student protests.

On the same day, Justice Syed Refaat Ahmed,

Families of such enforced disappearance victims formed a human chain in front of the Central Shaheed Minar yesterday. The demands are unconditional and immediate release of their loved ones, trial of those state force members involved in enforced disappearances, and a commission for the victims and their family members under UN supervision. RMG workers seek reforms

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh Garment Workers' Solidarity presented an 11-point demand to the newly formed interim government, calling for improvements for garment workers and other key labourers vital to the country's development.

At a meeting titled "Garment Workers' Expectations from the Interim Government" held at the Jatiya Press Club in the capital, the organisation demanded justice for the murder of garment worker Shubho Sheel and six others, urging state honours for all workers killed during clashes centring the quota reform movement, appropriate compensation for their families, and proper treatment and rehabilitation for the injured.

The group also called for the immediate withdrawal of all repressive cases filed during the 2023 wage increase movement and the release of 57 expatriate workers imprisoned in the UAE in connection with the protests.

Taslima Akhter, the organisation's president, emphasised the need for a reform to the minimum wage board and a reconsideration of the demand for a minimum wage of Tk 25,000.

She highlighted the need for unions, proper daycare centres for workers' children, extension of paid maternity leave to six months, and the creation of anti-sexual harassment complaint cells

Dainik Dinkal gets permission to resume publication

Tarique Rahman its publisher

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Dainik Dinkal, a broadsheet Bangla language newspaper, received permission to resume its publication yesterday.

Dhaka District Magistrate Anisur Rahman gave the temporary permission to the pro-BNP newspaper in an official order.

The newspaper's publisher is Tarique Rahman, the acting chairman of the BNP.

The Dainik Dinkal, halted its publication in February 2023, a day after Bangladesh Press Council rejected an appeal against its cancellation order.

Rashedul Haq, a news editor of the newspaper, told The Daily Star yesterday, "The previous government halted the publication of the newspaper because its publisher was out of the country and had been convicted."

"After that, the press council upheld the suspension order. However, after reapplying, we have now received permission to resume our publication," he added.

SADPASHA-MUROICHHARA ROAD

Potholes all along

MINTU DESHWARA, Moulvibazar

A seven-kilometre stretch of road from Sadpasha in Prithimpasha union to Muroichhara in Karmadha union in Moulvibazar's Kulaura upazila has long been in a dilapidated state.

The bitumen surface and bricks have been eroded from the road at numerous places due to a lack of renovation for prolonged period. There are hundreds of potholes on the road, some being 30-50 feet wide.

Residents, including students, from around 20 villages under the two unions, including 12 Khasi punjees, use the road daily for commute. The road connects several educational institutions including Longla Modern Degree College, and Ali Amjad High School and College, among others, in the area.

"The road was last renovated in 2017-18 fiscal year. Since then, it went through a lot of wear and tear, including damage from rain and flood, and is now in a terrible shape. It has become very risky and accident-prone for vehicular movement. The locals repeatedly called upon the authorities concerned to repair the road, but to no avail," said Muhibul Islam Azad, chairman of Karmadha union parishad.

Jasim Uddin, a driver of CNG-run auto-rickshaw, said, "The road surface is severely damaged. The entire seven-kilometre stretch has hundreds of potholes of different shapes. Some are so wide and deep that whenever it rains, water accumulates in those potholes to resemble a ditch. Driving vehicles on the road has become very risky and turbulent, and accidents can happen any time."

Locals Yunus Mia and Noor Mia echoed him.

Jimiur Rahman Chowdhury, chairman of Prithimpasha union parishad, said he had raised the issue of repairing the road several times in the monthly meeting of the Kulaura Upazila Parishad.

"The upazila engineer gave assurance that initiative will be taken soon to repair the road," he added.

Contacted, Tarek Bin Islam, upazila engineer of LGED in Kulaura, said, "A proposal has been sent to the higher authorities for repair work of 20-km road network in the upazila, including the Sadpasha-Muroichhara road. If approved, the repair work of the road will begin after the tender process."

yesterday afternoon.

Speaking at the event, Shujan Secretary Badiul Alam Majumdar demanded punishment for those who have committed injustices, criminal offences, and corruption in the financial sector in the past.

"We believe there are long-term steps that need to be taken for reform. We need to build a new political arrangement in consultation with political parties and civil society," he said, calling for the formation of a citizen's charter by political parties.

Zakir Hossain, assistant secretary of Shujan, said the recent mass movement for reform was not a revolution.

"In the past, certain individuals created a reign of power in various areas, and MPs created their domains. This situation must end. We want to build institutions. We believe that if there is a change in the structure, and if the political culture changes, everyone will benefit and the country will move forward," he said.

Shujan executive member Prof Shahnaz Huda said past corruption has left a lingering impact on people's minds, making it difficult to break the cycle.

"Sculptures have been vandalised in isolated places, which is highly condemnable," said Shahnaz, who is also a teacher at Dhaka University.

Another executive member, Prof Robaet Ferdous, said the revolution the country witnessed in 2024 has also become a social movement.

"The interim government did not ensure representation of all sections of society. Structural change must be transformed into cultural change. A surveillance framework must be established to prevent the emergence of another autocratic structure."

Prof Robaet, also a DU teacher, added that the tenure of the interim government needs to be specified.

Shujan's central coordinator, Dilip Kumar Sarkar, presented a keynote paper at the event, highlighting five urgent tasks that the interim government needs to address immediately.

These tasks include: bringing the law-and-order situation under control quickly, creating a list of the victims of violence in July-August, providing assistance and compensation to their families, protecting religious institutions from attackers, and initiating a UN-led investigation to identify and punish those responsible.

Additionally, Shujan presented 18 proposals, including constitutional changes, institutional reforms, electoral system changes, and amendments to election laws for state reform.

Other proposals include establishing a non-partisan caretaker government, reconstituting the Election Commission, enhancing the effectiveness of parliament, and ensuring the independence of the judiciary.

the senior-most judge of the High Court Division, was appointed as the 25th chief justice of Bangladesh.

Addressing concerns about alleged syndicates within the HC, Asaduzzaman said, "I am unaware of any syndicates in the High Court. If any such activities are reported, swift action will be taken."

Regarding the recent resignations of several law officers, including additional attorney generals, deputy attorney generals, and assistant attorney generals, Asaduzzaman assured that the issue would be resolved promptly.

Commenting on the irregularities within the judiciary, he reaffirmed his commitment to combating corruption. "The people are standing against irregularities and lawlessness. I am hopeful that the interim government will advance the cause of establishing the rights of the people," he said.

The government shut down mobile internet services on July 17 amid widespread violence over the quota reform protests.

A day later, on July 18, broadband internet was blocked, severely affecting public life and a wide range of economic activities, including utility bill payments, online banking, digital communications, digital commerce, and the clearance of goods from ports.

Mobile internet was restored on July 28, while social media platforms were unblocked on July 31.

However, mobile internet users were unable to access their Facebook and Messenger accounts for approximately seven hours on August 2. Mobile internet and Facebook were blocked again on August 4.

On August 5, both mobile and broadband internet were blocked again for a few hours.

The internet was fully restored after 2:00pm, when Hasina resigned from the post of prime minister and fled the country.

Zunaid Ahmed Palak, then state minister for ICT and Telecom, maintained that the internet was shut down due to a fire in the data centres in Mohakhali.

However, The Daily Star found no evidence of fire upon visiting these data centres. Officials of these data centres also confirmed that there were no instances of arson.

"We have been deprived year after year," said Babul Sarkar, an Ansar member.

"Our jobs have never been regularised. We have no benefits other than our regular salary, and our pay is based on our work. If we miss a day's work, we don't get paid," he added.

"If we want to take a holiday, we have to bribe the officers. If we want to withdraw our rations, we have to pay a bribe. When we rejoin the office after a six-month forced leave, we have to pay a bribe upon returning to the officers," he claimed.

Additionally, he alleged that each Ansar member has to pay Tk 100 to the thana officers. "In every step, we are forced to pay bribes," he alleged.

Abul Kalam, an Ansar commander, said, "We are sent for six months' forced leave from our jobs every three years. Then, we have to remain idle for about six months to a year. There is no way to earn during this time."

He added there is no job stability in Ansar and VDP, which is why they have taken to the streets to press for their one-point demand of job regularisation.

Maj Gen AKM Aminul Haque, director general of Ansar and VDP, went to the scene to hear their demands. Aminul urged them to remain disciplined and not to create chaos on the road.

"I am here to listen to your demands. I assure you that I will present your demands to the ministry. I request you to form a committee which will meet with the officials concerned with written demands."

He warned them not to create unrest by taking advantage of the new government and urged them to assist the government.

The Ansar chief also requested them to clear the road, but the protesters refused to clear it immediately.

They finally cleared the road over half an hour later, at 5:00pm, and a 10-member team went to the DG's office to submit their demands.

Ansar members also staged a demonstration in front of the Chattogram Press Club yesterday over the same demand.

Meanwhile, the Ansar chief after a meeting with 10 coordinators of the protests took three days to fulfill their demand, said Md Nasir Miah, chief coordinator of the protests.

PHULBARI UPAZILA

Students, locals join hands to repair damaged road

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Lalmonirhat

A group of students have joined local people to repair a damaged road in Phulbari upazila of Kurigram to enable vehicular movement for the time being until extensive renovation can be made to it.

Visiting the road along Helipad area in Phulbari Sadar union, this correspondent saw sand-filled geo-bags were being dumped on the damaged portions of the road to prevent further damage. The work has been continuing since Saturday noon.

The road sustained significant damage due to heavy rains two weeks ago, said locals.

Several thousand people from some 10-12 villages in the vicinity use the road to communicate to the upazila headquarters. Since the road got damaged, no initiative was taken to repair it from the authorities concerned despite repeated requests from the locals.

"Around 18-20 students are working on repairing the damaged parts of the road alongside local people. The effort will continue till all the damaged roads in the area are repaired to make those passable for pedestrians and vehicles," said Shafiqul Islam, a student engaged in the effort.

Mobarak Ali, 65, a local farmer, said, "The students have been working tirelessly to repair the collapsed road even though there is no government allocation for the repairs. We are also working with them."

"If the students remain dedicated to the welfare of the people, the country will progress rapidly," he added.

100 AL men sued over killing of students

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Pabna

More than 100 activists of Awami League and its affiliated organisations have been sued on charges of killing two students during their anti-government movement in Pabna on August 4.

Md Dulal Uddin, father of one of the deceased, filed the case yesterday, said Sadar Police Station Officer-in-Charge Md Rawshan Alom.

However, the OC declined to disclose the names of the accused for the sake of investigation.

"We are investigating the incident and trying to nab the culprits," he said.

The students brought out a procession in Pabna on August 4. Suddenly, the AL men opened fire on them at Traffic Intersection, leaving two students -- Md Jahidul Islam, 19, and Md Mahabub Hasan Niloy, 14 -- dead and many others injured, said sources.

ACC sues 4 over Tk 5.37cr graft

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

The Anti-Corruption Commission (ACC) has filed a case against four individuals on charges of attempting to misappropriate Tk 5.37 crore by creating forged documents and bills from the public exchequer.

The case was lodged yesterday by Assistant Director Enamul Hoque of Chattogram ACC Integrated Office-1, accusing Munsi Farrukh Hossain Mintu, Munsi Sazzad Hossain, Mukit Mandol, and Mohammed Furkan.

Among the accused, Furkan is the accountant at General Hospital in Andarkillah, while the others are employees of MS Ahmed Enterprise.

The case statement said in 2013, the hospital authorities under the Chattogram Civil Surgeon Office invited tenders for purchasing MRS, ICU beds, ICU ventilators, and other equipment worth Tk 5,32,25,000.

MS Ahmed Enterprise won the tender and supplied the equipment, but the items were found to be substandard, prompting the authorities to request their return.

Despite this, from 2019 to 2022, the accused allegedly attempted to withdraw the tender bills by forging documents and the then civil surgeon's signature.

Only 31mm rain inundates port city

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

All it needed was some 31.4mm of rain to submerge many areas of the port city yesterday, once again exposing the dilapidated state of the city's drainage system.

The downpour, recorded between 6:00am and 9:00am, led to vehicle shortages in low-lying areas, forcing many residents to wade through flooded streets to reach their destinations.

Key areas like GEC, Katalganj, and Chawkbazar went under ankle to knee deep water following the rain.

Nizam Uddin, a resident of Katalganj, was forced to walk a kilometre to reach Agrabad due to a lack of available vehicles. "I had to avoid my usual route through Chawkbazar to escape the worst of the waterlogging," he said.

The waterlogging also caused traffic jams at several busy intersections. However, the situation improved by noon.

Residents expressed their frustration over the persistent waterlogging issue, which has plagued the city every monsoon for years.

"We face this problem every year, despite the government spending crores on multiple projects," said Zahid Bin Hossain, a resident of Katalganj. Abdus Sabur from Halishahar echoed the sentiment, questioning how much longer they would have to endure the situation.

Despite ongoing efforts by various government agencies, including the Chattogram Development Authority (CDA), Water Development Board (WDB), and Chattogram City Corporation (CCC), residents have yet to see substantial relief. The four major projects, worth a combined Tk 14,388.74 crore, have been in progress for several years but have not delivered the expected results.

The CDA's "mega project" to address waterlogging, initiated in 2018 at an initial cost of Tk 5,617 crore, has seen its budget balloon to Tk 8,626.62 crore, with the deadline extended to June 2026.

Despite claims from Lt Col Ferdous Ahmed, the project director, that the project has improved water flow in the city's canals, residents remain unconvinced.

Work on the other three projects -- two by CDA and WDB initiated in 2017 and 2019, and one by CCC since 2014 -- continues, but the completion remains uncertain.

ALLEGATIONS OF VIOLENCE

BNP leader expelled in Patuakhali

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Patuakhali

Humayun Kabir alias Naiya Kabir, the president of the BNP's Baufal town unit in Patuakhali, has been dismissed from his post due to his involvement in violent activities.

The dismissal, effective from August 10, follows accusations of vandalism, looting, and issuing threats in various parts of the upazila.

This decision was confirmed in a letter signed by district BNP convener Abdur Rashid Chunnu Mia and member secretary Snehanshu Sarkar Kutti.

According to BNP sources, after the fall of the Awami League government on August 5, specific allegations against Humayun Kabir came to light.

He was also issued a show-cause notice on August 8.

The district BNP found his responses unsatisfactory, which led to his dismissal.

Efforts to reach Humayun Kabir for comment were unsuccessful as he did not respond to phone calls.

However, his son, Imamuzzaman Anik, who is the BNP student affairs secretary in the municipality, said, "My father is a victim of political conspiracy."

"There is no evidence to support the charges against him," he told The Daily Star.

ARSON ON BCC BUILDING

Vaccination, anti-mosquito drives halted for six days

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Barishal

The vaccination of newborns under Expanded Program on Immunisation (EPI), as well as anti-mosquito drives of Barishal City Corporation have remained halted for the past six days after the BCC building came under arson attack on August 5.

According to sources, the annex building of BCC was completely burnt down by miscreants on August 5. All the machinery, equipment and important files, computers and medicines of the EPI and mosquito control departments located in the building were also damaged.

Since then, all the activities of these two departments have been completely halted.

BCC officials, however, said these facilities will be available soon.

Sources at EPI department said at least 10,000 children were scheduled to be vaccinated, according to roster. The ice boxes, freezer, and about one lakh vials of medicines for 154 centres across the city were all burnt to ashes in the arson attack.

As a result, vaccination and vitamin programmes for around 5 lakh children are currently suspended.

Rebeka Sultana, a resident of the city's Katpatti area, said, "As the vaccination centre at Ashwini Kumar Town Hall is not operational, I am unable to get my child vaccinated. An official told us to get the vaccination done from hospital."

Dr Pallabi Sultana, acting chief health officer of BCC, said residents of BCC area can get vaccination for their children from Sher-e-Bangla Medical College Hospital and Barishal General Hospital.

BNP leader Salahuddin

government, Salahuddin paid respects to BNP founder Ziaur Rahman at his grave in the city's Chandrima Udyan.

Speaking to reporters there, Salahuddin called for meaningful reforms to the country's democratic structures to build a "truly democratic state".

"We must make this victory meaningful," he said, referring to the outcome of the recent uprising.

The BNP leader urged everyone to be patient and restore discipline so that the people can enjoy the benefits of freedom and democracy.

"If we can establish the rule of law, create a state governed by the rule of law, and allow all constitutional and democratic institutions to function independently and impartially, its benefit will reach every home of the 18 crore people."

He vowed to protect the country from external enemies and internal conspirators.

"This country did not achieve independence under the leadership of a single person. The country was liberated through the participation of all the people."

"Independence cannot belong to any single party, nor can it belong to any individual. This liberation and victory belong to all of us, and we must protect this country," he added.

After being missing for 62 days, former state minister Salahuddin was found in Shillong, the capital of the northeastern Indian state of Meghalaya on May 11, 2015.

He was arrested for entering India without valid documents and charged under the Foreigners Act. Later, Shillong police pressed charges against him in the case.

The BNP alleged that Salahuddin was abducted from his home in Uttara, Dhaka, on March 10, 2015, by people posing as police detectives.

On October 26, 2018, a Shillong court acquitted him of the charges related to illegal entry.

A higher court upheld the verdict on February 28, 2023, and directed the Indian government to arrange for his return to Bangladesh.

of 10 percent of parliamentary seats for members of minority communities and the enactment of a minority protection law.

In Sylhet, several thousand people from all walks of life protested against vandalism, arson, attacks, and looting of Hindu houses and temples in different parts of the country.

As part of the nationwide programme, a rally was held in front of the Sylhet Central Shaheed Minar premises.

"The main goal of the recent uprising was to establish a society without discrimination. But in the present context, it is evident that minorities are being oppressed all over the country. We strongly protest it," said Himadri Shekhar Roy, a professor at Shahjalal University of Science and Technology.

In Narayanganj, several hundred people from the Hindu community brought out a protest procession for the second consecutive day.

The protesters started the procession around 4:00pm from the Shahid Minar area followed by a sit-in at the Chashara intersection.

Meanwhile, Bangladesh Udichi Shilpigoshthi, a prominent cultural organisation, also held a rally in the Shahid Minar area.

In Barishal, a protest rally was held in front of the Ashwinikumar Hall area which was joined by around a thousand members of the Hindu community around 3:00pm.

Later, they brought out a procession from the area which marched through different major streets of the city.

In Lalmonirhat, defying the heavy rain, several thousand people from the Hindu community formed a human chain at the Mission Mor in the town at 10:30am.

In Patuakhali, two separate programmes were held under the banners of "Sanatan Nagorik and Students" and "Bangladesh Hindu, Buddhist, Christian Unity Council".

Sanatan Nagorik and Students formed a human chain in front of Patuakhali Central Shaheed Minar around noon. They later submitted a memorandum to the deputy commissioner demanding an end to communal violence.

Meanwhile, the district unit of Bangladesh Hindu, Buddhist, Christian Unity Council brought out a procession from Patuakhali cremation grounds around 3:00pm.

In Pabna, over a thousand people from the Hindu community brought out a protest procession from the Joy Kalibari Temple area and paraded through the major streets in town.

In Joypurhat, around 4,000 people staged demonstrations and formed a human chain protesting the attacks on Hindu properties across the country.

They gathered at the Zero-point area of the town around 11:00am, where they formed a human chain.

In Cumilla, around a thousand people held a rally in the Town hall field area of the city as part of the nationwide protest programme to end violence against minority communities.

At the velodrome, Dutch star Harrie Lavreysen surged to the men's keirin for his third gold of the Games, ending British dominance of the event they had won at every Olympics since 2008.

New Zealand's Ellesse Andrews blasted to the women's sprint title to add to her keirin gold, while American cyclist Jennifer Valente won the women's omnium.

In men's water polo, Serbia won their third straight Olympic gold with a 13-11 victory over Croatia at La Defense Arena and pulled their coach into the pool in the celebrations.

As the sport ends, attention turns to the closing ceremony and the next Olympics in Los Angeles in four years.

"On August 11, the Olympic Games will be over, and the Olympic flame will be extinguished," said Thomas Jolly, who masterminded the unique opening ceremony along the River Seine.

"That moment will remind us just how precious are these Olympic Games," added Jolly, whose opening ceremony sparked outrage in some quarters with a scene that appeared to parody the Last Supper.

Political parties must abide by relevant act

members have to be on the run now."

Warning all the political parties, Sakhawat said, "Now, if you think you'll take control of the markets and resort to extortion, you can go ahead and do it for a while. But I have requested the army chief to break your legs ... I don't care, go to hell.

"I am neither the public nor a politician, I come from a military background. I'll do what I say for as long as I stay."

Sakhawat, a former commissioner of the Election Commission, urged all to refrain from extortion.

"Whoever resorts to extortion -- no matter what party you are associated with -- I would ask the people to give them a beating. Those who extort, catch them on the spot. We'll do what needs to be done. We'll restore law and order. The country cannot run like this. We cannot lease out the country."

Saying that 30 lakh people made the supreme sacrifice for the country's independence, he added, "Aren't you ashamed of getting involved in extortion and doing politics, sitting on their blood? Don't do it. I warn you [political parties]. Take care of your men. Or else, you have seen how it doesn't take long to fall."

He said over a thousand people, including police officers, had to shed their blood. "You have to pay the price."

About the previous government's ban on a particular party, Sakhawat said, "It's a political matter. It will be discussed."

Regarding the mobs storming the Gono Bhaban and Jatiya Sangsad Bhaban, he said, "Any destruction is bad. These are state assets, I condemn those [the destructions]. A mass uprising as such in any country in the world does not happen with limits or discipline. Similar incidents occurred during the Arab Spring ... ."

About the attacks on minorities, he said it is the responsibility of every citizen to deter such attacks.

He called upon all to come forward to save the minority communities.

"It is the sacred duty of the majority ... We're going through turbulent times. I request the majority of the society to protect the minorities and the oppressed."

Earlier, speaking to reporters after visiting the injured police members at the Central Police Hospital in Dhaka, the home adviser threatened to shut down media outlets if they turn to sycophancy.

"I saw what happened in the country through BBC. But our media said nothing had happened. If the media had played an objective role, police would not face this situation. Shame on you. Shame on the media owners.

"A country drowns when the media does not speak the truth and publish false information."

About the culture of politics in the country, he said "The politics of Bangladesh is the politics of sycophants. We didn't make politicians, we made sycophants. There is so much flattery that even when people are dying, they will say nothing happened. Such sycophants can't do politics."

On the extent of corruption, he said, "A peon owned Tk 400 crore! I can't even think beyond Tk 1 crore! ... Such a plunderer! They [the plunderers] have amassed no less than Tk 4,000-5,000 crore and have 10-12 homes abroad."

He also said he will be submitting his own wealth statement soon.

"A state can't be run according to one's whims, no matter who or what they are. Bangabandhu has of course contributed, but thousands of people fought and 30 lakh people were killed to liberate this country. The state is not anyone's personal property... ."

Criticising dynasty politics, he said, "Power has been consolidated [through dynasty politics]. They want to stay in power even after killing thousands of people. It's very sad."

Prof Yunus acquitted in graft case oath after the resignation and departure of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina in the face of a mass upsurge led by students on August 5.

Judge Md Rabiul Alam of the Special Judge's Court-4 of Dhaka yesterday acquitted Prof Yunus, Nurjahan, and 12 others accused after the ACC applied with the court, seeking withdrawal of prosecution of the case under Section 494 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, Amir Hossain, an ACC official working in the court, told The Daily Star.

Earlier in the day, the anti-graft watchdog approved the withdrawal of the persecution of the case after scrutinising an application submitted by the case investigating officer and other case records, Amir added.

A day before his oath on August 8, Prof Yunus, also chairman of Grameen Telecom, and its directors -- Ashraful Hassan, M Shahjahan and Nurjahan Begum -- also got acquittal in a labour law violation case in which they were sentenced to six months imprisonment and fined Tk 30,000 each on January 1.

On June 12, Prof Yunus, Nurjahan, and 12 others were indicted in the ACC case filed over the misappropriation of about Tk 25.22 crore of Grameen Telecom Workers' profit participation fund. The court was also scheduled to record the statements of the witnesses.

On February 1, Investigating Officer Gulshan Anwar Prodhan, a deputy director of the ACC, placed the charge sheet before the Metropolitan Senior Special Judge's Court of Dhaka.

On April 2, the Metropolitan Senior Special Judge's Court of Dhaka accepted the charges pressed against the 14 accused.

On that day, the court also transferred the case to the Special Judge's Court-4 of Dhaka for the next course of action.

The 12 other accused are Grameen Telecom Managing Director Nazmul Islam, Directors Ashraful Hassan, Naznin Sultana, Parvin Mahmud, M Shahjahan and SM Huzzatul Islam Latifee, Sramik-Karmachari Union President Kamruzzaman, General Secretary Firoz Mahmud Hasan and representative Mainul Islam, Jatiya Workers Federation Office Secretary Kamrul Hasan, and lawyers Zafrul Hasan Sharif and Yusuf Ali.

On May 30 last year, Gulshan Anwar filed the case with the ACC's integrated district office in Dhaka.

FDC has now become a grazing field: Uzzal

"The previous government has inflicted wounds on every part of the state, and BFDC (Bangladesh Film Development Corporation) is no exception," remarked veteran actor Uzzal. He has spoken to The Daily Star about various issues, including the censor board, the grant committee, and his expectations from the new government.

Some people say that the FDC of the past no longer exists.
Just as the former ruling party had destroyed the state, they also ruined all the institutions related to the arts and literature of the country by politicising them. BFDC has now become a grazing field. The floors of BFDC have been demolished, even though it was possible to develop the place, while keeping the floors intact. We have countless memories associated with each of these floors. The film industry has been heavily factionalised.

What do you think about the grants received all over these years?
Many undeserving artistes have received grants over the years. There has been politicisation here as well. Why have films been made by various ministries? This has led to a waste of public money.

Despite your illustrious career in the film industry for over five decades, you haven't been awarded a lifetime achievement honour or the Ekushey Padak.
If I wanted, I could have received major awards during the BNP government, but I did not. It is not in my nature. However, the previous government did not do so. There has been lobbying in grants, the censor board, national film awards, Ekushey Padak, and Independence awards. Yet, it was martyred President Ziaur Rahman who introduced the National Film Awards.

Could you elaborate on the establishment of the National Film Awards?
Probably in 1978, during the presidency of Ziaur Rahman, he was scheduled to visit the BFDC. Everyone was a bit surprised since there was no preparation or decoration for his visit. Shamsul Huda Chowdhury, who was then a minister, asked me to arrange a later event. However, we found out that the President was already on his way.

He arrived and on that very day announced the National Film Awards. He also made announcements for the support of distressed artistes and grants. However, the previous government did not remember this. At no point during the National Film Awards was his name mentioned.

> There is significant inequality in Bangladesh. It is this inequality that led students to protest and achieve success. Just as the youth desire an egalitarian Bangladesh, I also want the same. The students have shown the way forward. Discrimination was the reason Bangladesh was created from Pakistan, at the cost of much bloodshed.

Besides being a cultural personality, you have direct involvement with politics. What kind of Bangladesh do you want at this moment?
There is significant inequality in Bangladesh. It is this inequality that led students to protest and achieve success. Just as the youth desire an egalitarian Bangladesh, I also want the same. The students have shown the way forward. Discrimination was the reason Bangladesh was created from Pakistan, at the cost of much bloodshed. There was a disparity in political, social, cultural, and economic spheres. I do not want that inequality anymore. I want to see a beautiful Bangladesh free from inequality.

The students aimed to end quotas and give merit its rightful place. Many young people, including Abu Sayed, lost their lives for this cause. In the new Bangladesh, I hope that the talented can fully develop their abilities.

What are your expectations from the new government?
We are fortunate to have a Nobel laureate as the head of the interim government. He has global acceptance. The students brought about a significant revolution by ending autocracy. After that, the new government, referred to as the interim government, has taken charge. They are expected to bring about reforms and then hand over power to a government elected by the people through a fair election. I am optimistic about the new government, and hope they will deliver a free and fair election.

Widespread violence has been occurring throughout the country. What do you have to say about this?
For the last 15 years, there has been politicisation and repression. This has become known internationally, which has led to a strong stance in international politics. The police have not been on duty for some time, and some individuals are taking advantage of the situation, engaging in vandalism, arson, and looting. We do not support such actions. Our party has clearly warned against it. I want peace to prevail regardless of religion or ethnicity. We are all Bangladeshi.

Shah Rukh Khan honoured with Lifetime Award at Locarno

Last Saturday (August 10), Bollywood superstar Shah Rukh Khan captivated Piazza Grande in Locarno, Switzerland, as he received the prestigious Lifetime Achievement Award, known as the Pardo alla Carriera or Career Leopard, at the 77th Locarno Film Festival.

On stage, while accepting the award, Khan expressed gratitude for his career and fans, saying, "For 35 years, I've had the chance to be a villain, a champ, a superhero, a zero, a detective, and a resilient lover. I usually don't attend events like this. I'm not great at interacting with people, just at acting a little — not too much."

As per The Hollywood Reporter, Locarno organisers said the Lifetime Achievement Award honours his "outstanding career in Indian cinema, including over 100 films across diverse genres."

Ongoing unrest casts doubt on Farin's upcoming film

In early August, it was revealed that Bangladeshi actress Tasnia Farin is set to co-star with Kolkata's megastar Dev. The actress shared her excitement about this new project titled Pratiksha, to be directed by Atanu Roy Chowdhury.

The future of the Dev-Farin starrer project has become uncertain following the recent change in the Bangladeshi government, brought about by a successful student movement.

Due to the current political climate, visas to India have been temporarily suspended too. This has raised concerns about Farin's ability to travel to India for the film's shooting.

Speaking about her upcoming film with Dev, Farin recently shared, "I've finalised a project titled Pratiksha where I'll be acting opposite Dev. The shoot is set to begin in November. However, the current situation of the country has led the Indian government to indefinitely suspend visas."

The actress further added, "I have no idea when the visa process will resume. This has made the entire film project uncertain. It feels like luck isn't on my side right now."

Ilias Kanchan commends students for traffic management

For nearly a week, the streets of Dhaka have been operating without the proper traffic police force. In their absence, students have taken it upon themselves to manage traffic regulations across the capital, earning widespread praise from the city's residents. Among those joining the students in this effort is the renowned actor and chairman of the Nirapad Sarak Chai (NISCHA), Ilias Kanchan.

"I've observed that none of the students are sitting idle, even for a moment," said Kanchan. "They have taken to the streets with a commitment to ensuring the safety of the public. Everyone should love and respect the work they are doing."

Kanchan also noted that while traffic chaos is often observed even with traffic police present, the streets have remained orderly under the volunteering students' supervision.

"I've also noticed that drivers are strictly following the students' instructions. They do so out of respect," Kanchan remarked.

Meanwhile, the actor himself took to the roads to control traffic as NISCHA has announced that in this time of national crisis, with traffic police absent, they are supporting the students' efforts. The organisation has also launched simultaneous traffic management initiatives through its branches across the country.

'AWAAZ UDA-KOTHA KO'
Chobir Hat reopens after a decade

TASRIFA TRISHA

Chobir Hat, a longstanding hub for students and progressives, reopened after a decade-long closure, symbolising much more than a physical space—it embodies a cultural spirit. The inaugural concert of the "newly independent Bangladesh", titled Awaaz Uda-Kotha Ko, has recently taken place at Chobir Hat in Suhrawardy Udyan.

The concert was organised by students and cultural activists on Saturday (August 10).

Closed during the former prime minister Sheikh Hasina's regime, Chobir Hat regained life following widespread student protests demanding quota reform, leading to the resignation of Sheikh Hasina on August 5. This cultural revival culminated in the Awaaz Uda-Kotha Ko concert.

Commencing at 4pm, the open platform welcomed musicians, poets, filmmakers, photographers, artists, and liberal-minded individuals, enriching the event's atmosphere. The programme opened with Tulkalam band's rendition of Mone Pore Jay, honouring martyrs of the anti discrimination student movement. Faria, from Tulkalam and an event organiser, highlighted their commitment to rebuilding Bangladesh. She emphasised the need for societal justice and well-being.

The newly formed band, HO3DiVE, performed Janis Joplin's Me and Bobby McG, celebrating student sacrifices and freedom from the dictatorship's grip.

Jahir Rayhan's band presented Pakhi Ure, echoing student-government tensions, advocating for free speech and rights in the digital age. Rapper Hannan captivated the crowd with his rebellious anthem Awaaz Utha, reflecting on his recent imprisonment for speaking truth to power. Shezan followed with Kotha Ko, another stirring anthem.

Musician and photographer Avishekh Bhattacharjee, invoking Inquilab Zindabad, praised Generation-Z for their resilience during the protests, shifting his perceptions and affirming their vital role in shaping Bangladesh's future.

Popular singer Ahmed Hasan Sunny, along with R Bashar Lisan, Akil Ashraf, and Muiz Mahfuz, also graced the stage, each adding their unique voice to the concert's powerful message.

Syeda Nilima Dola, one of the event organisers of Awaaz Uda-Kotha Ko", emphasised to The Daily Star the importance of preserving Chobir Hat as a cultural beacon, advocating for an inclusive Bangladesh free of discrimination.

Can we overcome the deficit in public health expenditure?

On June 11, 2024, the CSO Forum for Strengthening a Sustainable SRHR Ecosystem in Bangladesh, in collaboration with The Daily Star, organised a roundtable titled "Public Health Expenditure: A Critical Challenge in Ensuring Healthcare in Bangladesh." Here, we present a summary of the discussion.

CSO
The Daily Star
ROUNDTABLE DISCUSSION ON Health Expenditure: A Critical Challenge in ensuring health care in Bangladesh
Date : June 11, 2024.
The Daily Star Centre, Dhaka

Dr. Sayed Rubayet, Convener, CSO Forum and Country Director, Ipas Bangladesh

According to Article 15 of our Constitution, the fundamental responsibilities of the state under the provisions of necessities include food, clothing, shelter, education, and medical care. Article 18.1 states, "The state shall regard the raising of the level of nutrition and the improvement of public health as among its primary duties."

The revised budget for FY 2023-24 for health was Tk 29,783 crore, which is substantially lower than the proposed budget. This year's budget is Tk 41,407 crore which means that the per capita healthcare allocation is $20.6 through this budget.

Looking at the last 25 years, in 2000 the government per capita expenditure on health was $8, in 2010 it was $13.7, in 2021 it was $25.9, and this year it has been proposed to be $20.6. We have always seen that the allocation decreases in the revised budget for the health sector. The data for 2021 is used in this entire presentation as most countries' data is available up to 2021. The World Health Organization's (WHO) Global Health Expenditure database was updated on April 15 this year. According to this information, in Bangladesh, the government spent $26 per capita on health expenditures in 2021. In Myanmar, this expenditure was $48, positioning it just after Bangladesh. Following Myanmar are Pakistan, Nepal, India, Sri Lanka, and the Maldives.

The WHO included 192 member countries in the list, identifying the 20 countries with the lowest per-capita government health expenditures. Bangladesh is ranked 19th lowest in per-capita government health expenditure. The Asian country closest to Bangladesh is Afghanistan. The rest of the countries are either in Africa or in war zones.

In the year 2000, the percentage of GDP used for health expenditure was 0.51 percent, then a few fluctuations occurred. It has been observed that since 2017, it has been repeatedly declining, and in 2021 it became 0.4 percent in a linear trend.

I have compared three timeframes with our neighboring countries from 2000, 2010, and 2021 so we can understand the trend. For Bangladesh, the government health expenditure is going down. In Bhutan, it is also going down but is in a better condition in comparison to GDP. In India, it has gradually improved, being 2.5 times higher than Bangladesh. Even though Sri Lanka is battling its own challenges, the country's government health expenditure is 4 times higher than Bangladesh's. No country is near Bangladesh at 0.4 percent. Except for Pakistan and Bangladesh, no country has less than one percent in health expenditure. Currently, Bangladesh holds the lowest position in the region.

If we look at the data from 212 countries regarding the proportion of GDP allocated by the government for health expenditure, Benin has the lowest health expenditure, followed by Bangladesh in the second position, then Haiti, Cameroon, Nigeria, and Togo. This image is not a promising one.

Among developed countries, Cuba tops the list in terms of government healthcare spending as a proportion of its GDP. The top ten also include countries such as France, Austria, USA, Sweden, Germany, and the UK. These countries are spending 9.3 to 12.6 percent of their GDP on their health expenditure.

In our political priorities and discussions, the health sector is the most neglected one, even in the media as well. The out-of-pocket healthcare expenditure is increasing day by day. In 2000, the expense was Tk 6 out of Tk 10, which has increased to Tk 7.4, meaning now the out-of-pocket expenditure stands at 74 percent.

The list of countries with the highest out-of-pocket healthcare expenditure is topped by Armenia at 79 percent. Bangladesh holds the sixth position due to substantial medical costs, an insufficient government health budget, and a near absence of financial protection for health-related events. Among neighboring countries, Myanmar and Afghanistan are in similar positions.

However, Nepal, India, and Sri Lanka have progressed substantially Bhutan and the Maldives are far ahead of us, spending only 19 percent and 14 percent, respectively.

In Bangladesh, catastrophic health expenditure (CHE) is increasing day by day. The government has committed to reducing out-of-pocket expenditure to 32 percent by 2030, in line with universal health coverage and SDG commitments.

Catastrophic health expenditure in Bangladesh has serious consequences. 24.6 percent of the Bangladeshi population spends 10 percent of their total expenditure on health, and this proportion increases to 61.7 percent if at least one household member utilizes an inpatient service.

In Bangladesh, 52 percent of people with at least one household member utilizing a public facility spend more than 10 percent of their total expenditure on health. This proportion increases to 65 percent among those using private facilities. Additionally, 11 percent of people spend 40 percent of their income on health, excluding food costs. If a household has a chronically ill member, this figure rises to 18 percent of the population. For families using inpatient services, 29 percent of the population spends 40 percent of their income on health. For those using public facilities, the proportion is 25 percent, and for private facilities, it rises to 32.6 percent of the population. This is driving people into poverty.

According to the 2016 National Survey on Household Income and Expenditure, 4.5 percent of the population fell below the poverty line due to health expenditures. This affected 8.6 million people. Consequently, the government has to invest significantly more in poverty alleviation programmes to help these people rise above the poverty line.

Due to poor health investment, our health system is becoming unable to meet the needs of the people and provide quality health services, causing many to seek healthcare services abroad. In 2019, 54 percent of medical tourists to India came from other countries, with one-fourth from Bangladesh for medical treatment. In contrast, the Maldives has made constant investments in health. Comparatively, 57.5 percent of Maldivians visiting India did so for medical purposes, which has reduced to 7.3 percent. We must ask ourselves: Can our citizens escape this insufficient investment?

Golam Mortaza, Editor, The Daily Star Bangla

In a recent newspaper article, I read about a significant shortage of medical technologists. While we need around 84,000 technologists, we currently have only about 24,000, with over 31 percent of government positions in this field remaining vacant. For the past 15 years, there has been no recruitment. Recently, around 800 people were hired , but due to severe financial constraints, they have not received any salary for the past 1 to 2 years, according to the Directorate General of Health Services (DGHS).

Health and healthcare budgets are absent from the election manifestos of our country's political parties. Additionally, the mass media and civil society have failed to take an adequate critical stand against our policymakers seeking medical treatment abroad. As a result, this practice has become accepted as normal, despite its implications for our healthcare system. The national budgetary allocation for our healthcare sector decreases annually. This decline is partly due to our policymakers not taking this issue seriously, as they themselves do not use the health facilities within our country.. Instead of addressing the root causes, we often blame doctors for the shortcomings in our health sector. While we have excellent doctors, we lack proper medical management and infrastructure. It's crucial that we focus on improving these areas. We must continue to discuss these issues to influence our policymakers. The mass media should take a much more critical stance on such matters to drive necessary changes in our healthcare system.

Dr. Mohammad Mainul Islam, Professor, Population Science, University of Dhaka.

I would like to discuss the Perspective Plan (2021-2041), where the government aims to invest 2 percent of GDP in the health sector and 4 percent in the education sector by 2041. However, I believe investing now will bring us greater benefits sooner specifically before 2036-2037. Health and education are sectors that need major investment to turn the unskilled population into human capital benefiting the entire country.

Over time we see the money allocated for specific demographics gradually reducing proportionately. We have not even reached 1 percent growth and are currently at 0.7 percent. This is not being addressed according to the rising number of children, adolescents and older population.

Upon reviewing the budget, I found a lack of useful or in-depth data regarding these issues. If we look at public health, we see a demographic shift and an epidemiological transition where chronic diseases are overtaking and infectious diseases increasing personal expenditures. As time passes, the elderly population grows and many die from chronic illnesses. The degrading climate affects the quality of life and health of the population. Health indicators are deteriorating day by day with child mortality rising and maternal death rates not decreasing as expected. Data collection on these issues is also less effective than before.

The budget's ineffectiveness in the health sector stems from several issues: inadequate financial management, a complex procurement system and tendering process, delays in disbursing the last quarter of the budget, lack of leadership, absence of need-based budgeting practices, insufficient training for health workers, lack of educated health staff, and disparate procurement processes for capital expenditure.

Systematic improvement in the budget allocation, procurement and actualisation of government projects is crucial. The investment ratio in health and education should increase sooner to achieve faster benefits. We need to enhance managerial efficiency, delegate financial power, and reduce the complexity of the procurement process. Health should be viewed as human capital.

Kishwar Imdad, Country Director, Marie Stopes Bangladesh

I worked at a renowned private hospital for some time, and there I witnessed the staggering extent of out-of-pocket expenditure and the lengths to which people will go, regardless of their socioeconomic background. To lessen the suffering of these people and ensure equitable healthcare for everyone, there was supposed to be a pilot project focused on health insurance, which the health secretary also mentioned. However, it ultimately did not come to fruition. Countries like Canada have implemented healthcare programmes that deduct a certain portion from the paychecks of every job holder, which then funds healthcare for them and the masses. Taxpayers also contribute a portion of their taxes allocated specifically to the healthcare system. This model could be adapted in Bangladesh as well.

I firmly believe that a broader approach to tackling these challenges might not be as effective as focusing on specific facets of the problem one at a time and diligently addressing them.

I have worked at Marie Stopes, and I have firsthand experience with issues regarding reproductive rights and the benefits received by women. We have observed that the under utilisation of funds can occur due to protracted and complex procurement and tendering processes. We collected relevant data, submitted comprehensive reports, and made recommendations on how to tackle these situations. However, the lengthy evaluation process hindered the effectiveness of these initiatives. There are many factors to consider, but these two should be our foremost priority in ensuring a brighter future for the population: transforming the populace into human capital, and providing quality healthcare for all.

Dr. Ahmed Ehsanur Rahman, Scientist, icddr,b

Major portion of the out of pocket expenditure is spent for drugs; this is extremely difficult for the poor people particularly for chronic diseases like diabetes. There are instances where poor people ration medicine instead of taking regularly for chronic illness. While public hospitals handle deliveries and operations, private hospitals significantly outnumber them in service provision; 2.5-3 times more deliveries, 4 times antenatal care, and 12 times more operations take place in private hospitals in contrast to public facilities. The government faces challenges in regulating and supervising the vast number of private facilities. There is an urgent need to increase budget allocation not only for public healthcare facilities but also to collaborate effectively with private providers to ensure accessible and quality healthcare for all. Ministers, political leaders, and senior government officials should utilize the country's public health facilities for their own healthcare needs. This may help improve the quality of services at these facilities.

Ikhtiar Uddin Khandakar, Director, Health and Nutrition, CARE Bangladesh

A major underlying problem is a lack of trust in the healthcare system, particularly in public healthcare. New positions need to be created and existing vacancies need to be filled to ensure adequate human resources. Investment in technology is paramount.

One such area is improving service quality. Another pressing shift is the rising prevalence of non-communicable diseases, each imposing significant financial burdens on patients and their families due to required operations and medications. It is essential to identify specific areas where investment can yield optimal results. Primary healthcare must be a focal point, emphasizing family planning, nutrition, WASH, and other related services, which require systemic investment to meet local healthcare needs and reduce out-of-pocket expenses.

Developing accountability mechanisms through public representatives, in parallel with a centralized system, will enhance service quality.

Shishir Moral, Journalist, Prothom Alo

A civil society movement in favour of reducing the prices of medicines is crucial to reducing out-of-pocket expenditure in the healthcare sector. We also need to strengthen Essential Drugs Company Limited (EDCL) because if the government starts producing essential drugs, the prices are bound to go down, ultimately reducing out-of-pocket expenditure. Simultaneously, corrupt officials who are still dealing with the healthcare sector need to be removed from their posts.

Dr Shams El Arifeen, Senior Director and Senior Scientist, icddr,b

I don't think having our policymakers treated here at home will solve the issues in our healthcare system. In our country, the "VIP culture" takes precedence over everything, so those in important positions will be prioritised over the common people. Ultimately, they will never get to realise the struggles these people have to face while trying to access healthcare.

We need to revolutionise and reform our healthcare system from within. Unfortunately, we don't see healthcare being discussed in political discourses. Bureaucracy will never get the system to change, that is a job for political leaders.

Samia Afrin, Project Director, Naripokkho

We need to strengthen our monitoring mechanisms and ensure accountability to make our healthcare system work. Hospital management committees usually have a wide array of representation of public representatives at all levels. However, they do not prioritize the issue of healthcare. The common people need to be involved to hold our institutions accountable.

In every five-year plan, there is usually a huge chapter on healthcare the timely and effective utilization of the allocations are in need to be ensured with close monitoring and the expenditure should be reviewed by civil society instead of increasing the budgetary allocation in the sector, so that the learnings can be incorporated into the next plans.

Kaosar Afsana, Professor, James P Grant School of Public Health, BRAC University

We need a proper review of public expenditures right after the budget proposals every year. Our healthcare system is not only about the doctors. We need to work as a team, including other healthcare workers as well.

Our government should invest more in science policy interfacing so we can identify the gaps in our system, research how we can address the gap and compare our situation with other sectors. We can engage in dialogue with members of parliament to discuss health issues and involve them. The essential drug policy is an important agenda that needs more focus to reduce out-of-pocket expenses.

SM Shaikat, Executive Director, SERAC Bangladesh

We must realise the difference between need and right. Since healthcare is not recognised as a fundamental right in our Constitution, we cannot ask for legal help if we are denied medical treatment. The state can only try to make it more accessible for us, but it does not have a liability to ensure access to healthcare.

Our politicians also need some more literacy when it comes to health issues. They need to focus on policies that aim towards making people healthier rather than building infrastructures.

Sharif Mostafa Helal, Executive Director, BWHC

I agree that health service would improve if political leaders , MOH officials and other VIPs started availing the services offered to the common people from the public health facilities. Unfortunately, that is not how things work in our country. Recently I saw the news that a VIP went to a government eye hospital to seek treatment. While we were busy applauding the move, we conveniently forgot to address how common people seeking treatment at that facility might have been deprived of necessary medical assistance at the time the VIP was there. The reality is that the institutions active at the grassroots levels don't have adequate human resources to treat every patient.

Prof. Dr Sameena Chowdhury, Past-President,OGSB

Hospitals must provide appropriate and necessary facilities and create an enabling environment to encourage women to seek services. The lack of quality in hospital services often discourages recipients from seeking care. Improving service quality requires not only equipment and medicines but also changes in the overall system and in the behavior and practices of service providers.

Service providers should treat recipients with due respect and dignity, promptly providing necessary treatment. Recipients must be informed of all essential information in a timely manner, enabling them to make informed decisions and express their preferences regarding their treatment. Government initiatives are necessary to ensure 'women-friendly' services and to encourage recipients to seek care from public health centers, thereby reducing out-of-pocket expenses. Additionally, the government should allocate the necessary budget to support these initiatives.

Dr Esrat Jahan, Regional Inclusive Health Specialist - South Asia, Handicap International

In Bangladesh, chronic illness accounts for 51 percent of the current mortality rate, and 42 percent of persons with disabilities suffer from chronic illness. Consequently, out-of-pocket expenditure is higher for persons with disabilities than for other groups, with most living below the poverty line and facing unmet healthcare needs three times greater than the general population. Chronic illness is closely linked to life expectancy, with persons with disabilities having a life expectancy 10-20 years shorter than others. They often cannot access health centres, private health facilities are unaffordable, and government facilities are inaccessible. Service providers are not trained to meet their needs.

RECOMMENDATIONS

- » Increase Budgetary Allocation: The budgetary allocation by the government for the healthcare sector needs to be increased to meet the growing demands and ensure adequate resources.
- » Ensure Efficient Utilization: Proper and timely utilization of budgetary allocations for healthcare must be ensured to maximize impact and efficiency. The management capacity for budgeting, implementing health programs, ensuring accountability and delegating authority to local level is key for effective utilization of resources.
- » Reduce Out-of-Pocket Expenditure: Efforts should be made to lower out-of-pocket health expenditures for individuals, making healthcare more affordable. Prices of essential drugs need to be reduced; EDCL needs to be strengthened to reduce.
- » Universal Health Insurance: The government should provide universal health insurance coverage to ensure that all citizens have access to essential health services.
- » Improve Data Management: Proper management and accessibility of health data from both public and private sectors should be ensured for better decision-making and policy formulation.
- » Address Climate Change: Climate change issues should be integrated into the upcoming health budget to address the health impacts of environmental changes.
- » Gender-Sensitive Budgeting: Health budgeting needs to address issues from a gendered perspective, ensuring equitable access and addressing specific health needs of all genders.
- » Support for Persons with Disabilities: The health budget should adequately address the needs of persons with disabilities, ensuring they have access to necessary health services and support.
- » Civil society and mass media must push for a review of development plans and budgetary allocations for the healthcare sector.

Our proposed health budget lacks information on facilities for persons with disabilities. Moreover, there is no health insurance policy for them, and pregnant women with disabilities do not receive their allowances. We need to ensure a multidisciplinary approach to create an inclusive health budget.

Farhana Jesmine Hasan, Senior Technical Advisor, SGBV, Ipas Bangladesh

Gender budgeing is addressed at the policy level in our country's health budget,but the current infrastructure and system are not gender friendly. The health budget is divided into four categories: empowerment, participation, access, and public service, but the allocation is heavily skewed towards public service. We need to enhance the monitoring system from a gender perspective to ensure better public service for women.

Dr. Imran Ahmed Chowdhury, Programme Head, BRAC

Looking at the last 20 years, significant achievements have been made in the health sector. However, in recent years, major health indicators have stagnated. Investment in the health sector has also been stagnant for the past 10-15 years. To improve the health sector and align with both the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) and our national plan, the government must increase efficiency in resource utilization and boost budgetary contributions to healthcare Without these changes, the maternal mortality rate (MMR) won't drop from 194 to 70 by 2030, and out-of-pocket costs won't fall to 30%.

The private sector plays a crucial role in the health sector. It's time they are brought under government regulations and laws. This will help to ensure quality control, define their roles, and guide their operations. It can also help partially control costs , and reducing out-of-pocket expenditures. The reluctance to collaborate between the Directorate General of Family Planning (DGFP) and the Directorate General of Health Services (DGHS) must be overcome. Their budget allocation and utilization have been decreasing, as seen in past budget and health expenditure analyses. To address this issue, alongside the government's initiatives, the government should also play a significant role in the planning phase and in utilizing additional funding in the health sector for strengthening the health system through bilateral agreements within the development sector. The right skill mix must be considered. It's not just about increasing the number of nurses or doctors; it needs to be ensured that we have the pipeline to meet our targets. Investment in this area is crucial. Nationally, there are approximately 12-12.4 health related professionals per 10-12,000 people. This number decreases in rural areas and even more in hard-to-reach areas like Char and Haor. We need to move beyond just talking about "leaving no one behind" without a comprehensive plan for the well-being of these communities. This demand should not remain at the planning level; there are opportunities to raise this demand from the community itself. Lastly, with 41 districts now climate-vulnerable, compared to 19 coastal areas five years ago, there is a significant opportunity to address climate and health issues together, as health issues in these vulnerable areas will become more severe in the coming days.

Ayesha Akhter, Legal Specialist, Gender Justice & Women Empowerment Cluster, Blast

BLAST in a public interest litigation, highlighted a statistical report indicating that 95 percent of doctors at upazila-level Health Complexes do not stay at their workstations and instead reside in cities, primarily Dhaka.

Therefore, increasing the number of doctors and facilities is no enough, raher strong monitoring and accountability is required. Article 18.1 of Bangladesh Constitution focuses on public health necessitates giving importance to various components, paricularly food and nutrition being critical among them. However, the general trend among the lower middle class in our country is to allocate a larger portion of their budget to medical expenses, often at the expense of their food and nutritional budget. As both medical and food costs continue to rise, this approach is unsustainable unless we balance these two essential areas.

Mayisha Kabir, Executive Board Member, RTMI

Addressing both communicable and non-communicable diseases simultaneously presents a significant challenge. Many medical students from neighbouring countries study here and contribute to their own countries, indicating that our problem is not rooted in education. Solutions from abroad are unlikely to apply to our unique health sector challenges; instead, we need to develop our own strategies to address these issues.

Santa Islam, Project Officer, Ain O Salish Kendra

The 5 percent budget allocation for health has remained unchanged for over a decade, and its utilisation is not being effectively managed. Civil society can play a crucial role in properly monitoring the health budget, particularly in hard-to-reach areas and at the upazila level. We need to engage in evidence-based advocacy at the policy level, which requires accurate and comprehensive data.

The private health sector has grown significantly, but the lack of data from this sector creates a persistent gap in health sector discussions. After Covid-19, we anticipated emergency funds and preparations to handle future health crises, but a critical review of our health budget is needed to see if it meets these expectations.

Dr Wahida Siraj, Director -Heath, Ipas Bangladesh

Our health system's workforce structure is not proportionate to the demand for health care. We need to evaluate whether our system is prepared to meet this demand. While our infrastructure, from the central to the community level, is excellent compared to neighboring countries, our workforce and support team are not sufficient in number and simultaneously lacks the necessary skills to effectively utilize resources and carry out their functions.

Currently numerous programmes being implemented in the upazila and higher-level health facilities. . However, the management workforce has remained the same at the Upazila and district level since the British era. It is difficult to manage and supervise with this limited workforce and more personnel should be allocated for effective management. Otherwise unrealistic expectations can hinder progress.

I pose this question to the media and civil society and other stakeholders who have grave responsibilities: Instead of solely scrutinising doctors for healthcare quality, how conducive are the infrastructures and health management systems in place for them to succeed in providing quality services at minimum cost?

Dr Makduma Nargis, Vice-President, Bangladesh Mohila Parishad

Despite many intended healthcare reform projects, bureaucratic obstacles and inefficiencies persist, hindering our system's efficacy. If these fundamental issues are not addressed, our healthcare delivery will never reach its full potential.

During my tenure as joint secretary at the health ministry, I have noticed the continued existence of bifurcated service delivery and family planning systems in Bangladesh. This approach contributes to duplication and inefficiencies. Given our constrained health sector budget, maximising resource utilisation is paramount. This requires cohesive collaboration among all healthcare professionals, from doctors to primary caregivers, within a unified framework.

Secondly, decentralisation is often discussed but centralised decision-making remains dominant. This causes delays and gaps in addressing local issues promptly, impacting service delivery. Another crucial issue is the absence of policymakers in our current discourse. While grassroots and mainstream sectors engage in vital conversations, the absence of policymakers undermines the effective implementation of proposed solutions.

I have encountered situations where evidence-based studies compiled were overlooked by policymakers who wield the authority to act. Conversely, those implementing policies lack decision-making authority despite having immense knowledge of the issue derived from experience. This disconnect perpetuates unresolved issues.

Budget shortages are a reality, yet over-budgeting on certain programmes is also prevalent. During my tenure at a community clinic, significant funds remained unspent despite project completion, highlighting inefficiencies in budget utilisation. Pragmatic budgeting could mitigate such discrepancies and optimise resource allocation effectively.

As hypertension and diabetes rates surge in our country, timely provision of medicines in community clinics is crucial. However, interruptions in training due to conflicting government priorities have hindered progress. Effective integration of supervision, monitoring, and training across all levels is essential for improving service delivery and health outcomes.

In conclusion, addressing workforce limitations and enhancing training programmes are critical steps. Realistically, achieving comprehensive healthcare reform requires overcoming systemic challenges and aligning resources efficiently. Given the current state of our workforce and the practical constraints of our training programmes, I must realistically say that achieving this goal is not feasible at the moment.

Today, we discussed a critical issue: health expenditure. Drawing from my extensive experience across various medical colleges during my government service, I reflect on who typically relies on public hospitals—the most vulnerable population who have no other options. The dedicated service provided by doctors in these institutions often goes unnoticed on a broader scale.

To address medication costs, it is crucial not only to reduce prices but also to ensure their widespread availability. For instance, coordinating a comprehensive care plan for pregnant women over nine months could optimise medication usage, aligning specific needs with each trimester. Regarding community clinics, while impressive infrastructure exists at various levels, coverage gaps remain. Although doctors are required to serve in rural areas for two years post-MBBS, there should be provisions for promotion to encourage sustained commitment to these underserved regions.

To enhance service quality, we must focus on robust planning and training for healthcare providers. While many essential medications are now accessible, gaps persist in availability, for instance, leading to substitutes like Magsulf, a very simple medication. Addressing out-of-pocket expenses for patients, especially for essential surgeries, is crucial and it becomes so difficult for ordinary people to pay such hefty amounts.

It is important to note that efforts to minimise operation costs are essential, ensuring affordability without compromising quality. By optimising budget allocations and refining service delivery strategies, we can bridge these gaps in our healthcare system effectively.

Syed Abdul Hamid, Professor, Department of Health Economics, University of Dhaka

For budget allocation, we are supposed to receive 12-15 percent, but instead, we only get 5.2 percent. This is nearly 10 percent less than what is needed. Why is it so low? Why can we not spend the allocated amount effectively?

The finance ministry sets a budget ceiling for each ministry, typically a 5-10 percent increase from the previous year. The health minister cannot exceed this ceiling unless an emergency, such as Covid-19, arises. This macro-level budgeting process means that the actual needs of patients and doctors are not fully reflected or met. Despite the Medium-Term Budgetary Framework (MTBF) process, where projects are supposed to be planned and budgeted for over three years, this ideal scenario often does not match reality.

Another issue is that budget requests must be tied to specific items. In the health sector, we have a high demand for human resources, including doctors, nurses, and technologists, down to the supporting staff. Timely recruitment in the health ministry is essential, yet it involves multiple layers of approval from DG Health, public administration, and finance. This bureaucratic process often delays recruitment and hampers budget allocation.

Critical sectors such as maternal care, neuroscience, and cancer care are severely understaffed. For instance, we have around 200-250 oncologists when we need approximately 1,500. By creating positions and recruiting more professionals in these vital areas, we can justify higher budget allocations. Additionally, many clinical centres need upgrades, we lack dedicated medical stores, and facilities are often inadequate. Addressing these deficiencies requires a bottom-up approach and comprehensive improvement plans.

Why can we not spend the budget effectively? There are three main reasons. First, factors like finance, procurement, and audit processes are often beyond the Health Ministry's control. Second, internal issues within the health ministry itself contribute to inefficiencies. Third, poor communication between facilities and DG Health exacerbates these problems.

A significant issue is the lack of training for facility managers and administrators. We have repeatedly advocated for a dedicated training programme for these roles, focusing on procurement, accounting, and finance from day one in the BCS. Proper training would bridge knowledge gaps and improve efficiency.

Our current procurement system is flawed, designed more for engineering and construction than health. Addressing these malpractices and managing procurements effectively is crucial for improvement in the health sector. Only by tackling these fundamental issues can we hope to see substantial progress.

Tanjim Ferdous, In-Charge, NGOs & Foreign Missions, Business Development Team, The Daily Star

Today's discussion will shed light on the budget allocation for the health sector of this fiscal year, which is Tk 41,407 crore out of a total budget of Tk 7,97,000 crore. We will try to identify the areas within the health sector where this allocation is being directed, assess the efficient usage of the allotment, and determine what can be done to make the usage more efficient. Additionally, we will discuss how the current scenario supports the effectiveness of the sexual and reproductive health and rights (SRHR) ecosystem.

GOVT FORMATION IN IRAN

Pragmatist picked as top diplomat

REUTERS, Dubai

Iran's new president yesterday presented his cabinet to parliament for a vote of confidence, state media reported, proposing seasoned pragmatic diplomat Abbas Araqchi as foreign minister at a time of heightened regional tensions.

President Masoud Pezeshkian is shaping his cabinet at a time of an increased risk of escalation of the conflict in Gaza into a broader regional war, after the recent killings of Palestinian Islamist group Hamas' leader Ismail Haniyeh in Iran and of Hezbollah military commander Fuad Shukr in Beirut drew threats of retaliation against Israel.

Following the death of hardline President Ebrahim Raisi in a helicopter crash in May, Pezeshkian won a snap election last month by promising to improve ties with the world, promoting a pragmatic foreign policy, and to ease social restrictions at home.

Pezeshkian's proposed cabinet lineup requires lawmakers' approval and parliament speaker Mohammad Baqer Qalibaf said that parliamentary commissions will start reviewing his candidates today.

Araqchi, 61, who was Iran's ambassador to several countries, including Japan, played a key role in negotiating Tehran's 2015 nuclear agreement with six world powers, which then-US President Donald Trump exited in 2018 and re-imposed sanctions on Iran.

Araqchi later led Iran's negotiators during multilateral efforts - ultimately unsuccessful - to revive the pact via indirect diplomacy with Washington before he was replaced by hardline Ali Bagheri Kani in 2021.

The president's powers are limited in the Islamic Republic by those of the Supreme Leader, who is commander-in-chief of the armed forces, appoints the head of the judiciary and has the last say on major policies.

Abbas to visit Russia today

AFP, Moscow

Palestinian Authority President Mahmud Abbas will visit Moscow next week to discuss the Gaza war with Russian President Vladimir Putin, a Palestinian envoy said.

Russia's state-run TASS news agency cited the Palestinian ambassador in Moscow as saying Abbas will arrive on Monday and meet Putin tomorrow.

Abbas heads the Fatah Palestinian movement.

Ambassador Abdel Hafiz Nofal said the two leaders would discuss events in Gaza since the October 7 attacks on Israel. "They will talk about Russia's role, what can be done."

He added: "We have a very difficult situation, and Russia is a country that is close to us. We need to consult each other."

Moscow for years tried to balance relations with all major players in the Middle East -- including Israel and the Palestinians.

But since the Israel-Hamas war and Russia's own offensive on Ukraine, Putin has moved closer to Israel's foes, Hamas and Iran.

'Children torn apart'

Israel strike rains hell on Gaza dawn prayers

AFP, Gaza City

White body bags littered the floor and mourning filled the air after a school housing displaced Palestinians was struck with Israeli missiles Saturday -- a horrific and increasingly common sight in the Gaza war.

Dawn prayers were shattered by the early morning triple air strike from Israeli warplanes, which gutted Al-Tabieen religious school and mosque in Gaza City.

In the hellish aftermath, body parts were strewn around the rubble and charred, bloodied bodies slumped in the wreckage of the two-storey complex.

Grim-faced volunteers piled corpses in blood-stained blankets into an ambulance, as seriously wounded men lay groaning on the ground.

Gaza's civil defence agency said at least 93 people were killed, 17 of them women and children, making it one of the war's deadliest strikes.

Israel's military disputed the death toll, saying the school was targeted with "precision munitions" because it "served as an active Hamas and Islamic Jihad military facility".

Such incidents have become a pattern in recent weeks. According to an AFP tally, at least 14 schools sheltering Gaza's displaced have been hit since July 6, killing more than 280 people.

"Peaceful people -- women, children, and youths -- were performing the Fajr prayer as usual when suddenly a missile hit them," said Abu Wassim, who lives nearby and came to survey the scene.

"They were reduced to remains. Children were torn apart, and women were burned. What can we say or do? What is in our power?"

As the sun climbed and mourners gathered, one man stroked the face of a dead child shrouded in a plastic body bag.

"They dropped a missile on them while they were just praying. Fear God, people! Fear God, Arabs!" a woman wailed over the body.

Another man looked lost as he held a small corpse wrapped in a blanket. Nearby, six body bags lay on the ground, three of them children. Tattered Qurans were piled on a window ledge.

"We woke up before dawn to the sound of a strike," said Sakr, a resident from the neighbourhood who gave just one name.

"We headed to the site and found body remains of civilians who were peacefully performing prayers. We found bodies of children scattered in the street."

Another man said: "You can't even recognise the bodies, there were scattered remains.

"The ones who were struck are displaced people taking shelter in a school. What's their fault? What have they done wrong?"

Mohammad Al-Mughayyir, director of the supply and equipment department of Gaza's civil defence service, told AFP that six schools in Gaza City had been targeted in the past week alone.

Israeli military spokesperson Lieutenant-Colonel Nadav Shoshani said that about 20 Hamas and Islamic militants were operating from the Al-Tabieen complex.

Later on Saturday, Gaza civil defence agency spokesman Mahmud Bassal told journalists that the strike "directly targeted" two floors of the school.

The strike hit "the upper floor housing women and children and the ground floor that was used for prayers by the displaced people," he said.

Since October 7, Israel's military campaign in Gaza has killed at least 39,790 people, according to the health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza, which does not give details of civilian and militant deaths.

China backs Iran's right to defend its 'dignity'

REUTERS, Beijing

China supports Iran in defending its "sovereignty, security and national dignity", Chinese foreign minister Wang Yi told Iran's acting foreign minister in a phone call yesterday, according to a statement by China's foreign ministry.

In the phone call, Wang repeated Beijing's denunciation of the assassination of Hamas chief Ismail Haniyeh in Tehran on July 31, saying the strike had violated Iran's sovereignty and threatened regional stability.

Iran and the Palestinian Islamist group Hamas have accused Israel of carrying out strike that killed Haniyeh.

Israel has not claimed or denied responsibility for the killing, which has fueled concern that the war between Israel and Hamas in the Gaza Strip was turning into a wider Middle East war.

Iran has vowed to "harshly punish" Israel over the assassination.

Tensions between Iran and the West have also increased over Tehran's fast-advancing nuclear programme.

BRAZIL PLANE CRASH

All 62 victims body recovered

REUTERS, Vinhedo

Brazilian emergency crews has recovered the remains of the 62 victims aboard an airliner that plunged to the ground in the town of Vinhedo, near Sao Paulo the day before, killing all on board.

The bodies of most of the victims - 34 males and 28 females - had already been moved to Sao Paulo's police morgue for identification. The bodies of the pilot and co-pilot were identified earlier in the day, said Dario Pacheco, mayor of Vinhedo.

Four people with dual citizenship were among the victims, three Venezuelans and one Portuguese woman, said regional carrier Voepass, which operated the aircraft.

On Friday Voepass said the plane was carrying 57 passengers and four crew, but on Saturday the firm confirmed another unaccounted-for passenger had been on the flight, putting the number of casualties at 62.

The plane's so-called "black box" containing voice recordings and flight data was undergoing analysis.

The plane, an ATR-72 turboprop, was bound for Sao Paulo from Cascavel, in the state of Parana, and crashed around 1:30 p.m. (1630 GMT) in Vinhedo, some 80 km (50 miles) northwest of Sao Paulo. Despite coming down in a residential area, no one on the ground was hurt.

How to spot online fake news?

England mulling review of national curriculum in primary and secondary schools

AFP, London

The UK government said on Sunday schools in England could teach children how to spot extremist and online content spreading "putrid conspiracy theories", under planned changes to the national curriculum.

Education Secretary Bridget Phillipson said she was launching a review of the curriculum in primary and secondary schools to introduce critical thinking across multiple subjects.

It follows recent disorder in more than a dozen English towns and cities following the Southport knife attack, which officials say were fuelled by misinformation online and far-right agitators.

The stabbing spree, allegedly carried out by British-born Axel Rudakubana, who was aged 17 at the time, left three children dead. Police have not disclosed a suspected motive for the attack but said it is not being treated as terrorism.

Online speculation in the immediate aftermath of the tragedy falsely claimed Rudakubana was a Muslim immigrant.

"It's more important than ever that we give young people the knowledge and skills to be able to challenge what they see online," Phillipson told the Sunday Telegraph newspaper.

"That's why our curriculum review will develop plans to embed critical skills in lessons to arm our children against the disinformation, fake news and putrid conspiracy theories awash on social media."

Under the envisaged changes, students would analyse newspaper articles in English lessons to help spot fabricated clickbait, while computer classes would include analysing statistics in context.

However, the review is not set to report its findings and recommendations until next year, meaning reforms would not come into force until the school year starting in September, 2025, according to the Telegraph.

The moves are set to be combined with tougher regulation of social media sites and online content, with Prime Minister Keir Starmer suggesting imminent action on Friday.

Five pro-Iran fighters killed in Syria strike

AFP, Beirut

Five Iran-backed fighters were killed yesterday in a drone strike in Syria's east, near the Iraqi border, a war monitor said, adding it was not clear yet who was behind the attack.

"Five pro-Iranian fighters were killed and others were injured, some severely... after an unknown drone targeted the military vehicle they were in... near the Syrian-Iraqi border," said the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights.

The strike occurred in Syria's eastern Deir Ezzor province, where Iran wields significant influence and which is regularly targeted by Israel and the United States, according to the Britain-based monitor with a network of sources inside Syria.

In June, three pro-Iran fighters, including at least two Iraqis, were killed in an overnight air strike in eastern Syria near the Iraqi border, the Observatory had reported at the time.

MAJOR UKRAINIAN INCURSION

Thousands of troops 'trying to destabilise' Russia'

Moscow says hit Ukraine units 30km into Russian territory

AGENCIES

Russia yesterday acknowledged Ukrainian forces had pierced deep into the Kursk border region in an offensive that a top official in Ukraine said was aimed to "destabilise" Russia and "stretch" its armed forces.

Kyiv has deployed thousands of troops to the surprise operation, a Ukrainian security official told AFP, seizing the battlefield initiative after months of slow Russian advances across the east.

"We are on the offensive. The aim is to stretch the positions of the enemy, to inflict maximum losses and to destabilise the situation in Russia as they are unable to protect their own border," the security official said on condition of anonymity.

The shock assault, now in its sixth day, appeared to catch the Kremlin off guard, with Moscow's army rushing in reserve troops, tanks, aviation, artillery and drones in a bid to quash the incursion.

But it's army yesterday appeared to concede that Ukraine had been able to penetrate its territory by up to 30 kilometres (20 miles) in places.

In a daily briefing on the situation in the western Kursk region, the defence ministry said it had "foiled attempts" by Ukraine's forces to "break through deep into Russian territory" using armoured vehicles.

But it said some of those forces were located near the villages of Tolpino and Obshchy Kolodez, which are around 25 km and 30 km from the Russia-Ukraine border.

The Ukrainian official also said Russia's claims that Kyiv had deployed 1,000 troops were a serious underestimation.

"It is a lot more... Thousands," they said.

After days of official silence, President Volodymyr Zelensky acknowledged the offensive for the first time in his nightly address on Saturday, saying that Kyiv was "pushing the war into the aggressor's territory".

Russia invaded Ukraine in February 2022 and has waged an unrelenting campaign, occupying swathes of the east and south and subjecting Ukrainian cities to daily missile and drone attacks.

After re-capturing large areas in 2022, Kyiv has largely been on the back foot, increasingly struggling with manpower and arms supplies.

The assault on Russia's western Kursk region has been the largest and most successful cross-border offensive by Kyiv so far -- and the most significant attack by a foreign army on Russian territory since the Second World War.

Russia has used air power, artillery fire and drones in a bid to quash the advance.

It said Saturday that more than 76,000 civilians had been evacuated from border areas, with more leaving on Sunday.

Russia's rail operator has put on emergency trains from Kursk to Moscow, around 450 kilometres away, for those looking to flee.

An overnight Ukrainian missile strike on a residential building in Kursk city, around 80 kilometres from the fighting wounded 15, Russian officials said.

Ukraine's Sumy region has also come under retaliatory fire, and authorities there plan to evacuate some 20,000 people from the border zone.

SOUTH CHINA SEA DISPUTE

Actions of China air force 'reckless'

Says Philippines

REUTERS, Manila

Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos Jr. yesterday condemned Chinese air force actions in waters of the South China Sea claimed by both countries, calling the actions "unjustified, illegal and reckless".

Manila and Beijing accused each other on Saturday of disrupting their militaries' operations around the Scarborough Shoal in the first incident since Marcos took office in 2022 in which the Philippines has complained of dangerous actions by Chinese aircraft, as opposed to navy or coast guard vessels.

The Philippine military on Saturday condemned "dangerous and provocative actions" when two Chinese aircraft dropped flares in the path of a Philippine aircraft during a routine patrol around the shoal on Thursday.

The Chinese military's Southern Theatre Command countered that the Philippines had disrupted its training, accusing Manila of "illegally intruding" into its airspace.

On Sunday, Marcos urged China to act responsibly both in the seas and in the skies.

The Scarborough Shoal is one of Asia's most contested maritime features and a flashpoint for flare-ups over sovereignty and fishing rights.

End the UK riots

Parents of murdered girl urge

REUTERS, Southport

The parents of one of three girls murdered at a Taylor Swift-themed event in northern England last month called for an end to the nationwide rioting that followed their deaths at an emotional funeral for their young daughter.

Alice da Silva Aguiar, 9, and two other girls died and eight were injured after being stabbed in an attack at the event at the seaside town of Southport two weeks ago.

Days of riots followed in Southport and in towns and cities across the United Kingdom, triggered by false online posts wrongly identifying the suspected killer as an Islamist migrant. A teenager, born in Britain, has since been charged and police say the incident is not being treated as terrorism.

changed', they will have to be changed," he said.

Yunus has said he wants elections "within a few months", but Joy warned of risks if they were delayed.

"It's in their best interest to hold elections... to have a return to a legitimate government that has the legitimacy of the people and true authority," he said.

"Otherwise, it's just going to devolve into chaos."

Hasina swept the January elections but only after a poll denounced as neither free nor fair and boycotted by genuine rivals after a crackdown during which thousands of opposition party members were arrested.

Members of Hasina's millions-strong Awami League have gone into hiding since she fled. There have been reprisal attacks against them and party offices have been torched.

But Joy said the party was critical to the political future of the South Asian nation of some 170 million people.

"We have tens of millions of followers; they're not going anywhere," he said.

"You're not going to be able to establish democracy in Bangladesh without the Awami League. It will never be accepted by half the people of the country at least."

"It's going to be between the BNP and the Awami League," Joy said. "We need to work together."

He sought to divert blame for his mother's ouster onto others in government.

"Were mistakes made? Of course," he said. "They were made by people at the bottom, or in the chain of command... Blaming my mother for it is unfortunate."

While accepting that police officers who fired on protesters had gone too far, he argued that there was violence on both sides.

"Some of the police used excessive force but there were attacks on the police too -- police members were killed as well. The violence wasn't one-sided," he said.

"And then as it escalated further, the protesters started attacking police with firearms, weapons."

He alleged unidentified foreign forces had supported the protests, a claim for which he provided no evidence.

"I believe, at this point, it is from beyond Bangladesh," he said.

The statement also mentioned that Sheikh Hasina is well, and she requested all to hold peaceful programmes.

In another development, Gopalganj AL General Secretary GM Sahab Uddin Azam, at an emergency meeting, requested party leaders and activists not to consider the army as an opponent.

The meeting also decided to observe the National Mourning Day on August 15 in a befitting manner, said meeting insiders.

Locate and release disappearance victims

Their families deserve answer, justice, and closure

For over a decade, hundreds of families in Bangladesh have lived with the unbearable pain of not knowing the fate of their loved ones. These individuals—mostly critics and political rivals of Awami League—disappeared during its 15-year rule, allegedly abducted by state agencies. The government's fall has now reignited the hopes of their families, but it is a tragic reflection of our times that there is still no end date on their never-ending misery. According to a report, over 100 such families formed a human chain on Saturday, demanding information about the whereabouts of their loved ones. They held up photos of their missing sons, husbands, and fathers, some of whom disappeared as far back as 13 years ago.

These families deserve answers, justice, and closure. Unfortunately, they are yet to have the chance to move in that direction. Although the Directorate General of Forces Intelligence (DGFI) authorities already said that there are no detainees in their Dhaka facility, popularly known as "Aynaghor", the release of some former prisoners has raised hope that many of the disappeared could still be alive in other secret internment centres of the security forces. The DGFI reportedly promised to form a joint commission to inspect 23 other facilities across the country to see if the victims of enforced disappearance were there. The question is, how many detention-cum-torture cells are there, really? How many of the prisoners held illegally over the years are still alive? How many perished in obscurity?

In a report in 2021, the Human Rights Watch said there was no trace of nearly 100 out of the 600 people who had disappeared during Hasina's rule. The number of the disappeared could be more than 700, according to Odhikar, which says some 150 are believed to remain missing. Clearly, because of the cloak of secrecy in which those behind the illegal operations wrapped themselves, there remains a huge information gap which could complicate any future effort to shine a light on all such cases and indeed to pursue justice for the security officers and services responsible.

Besides enforced disappearance, the Awami League regime had also been regularly accused of allowing extrajudicial killings and custodial torture, and so the interim government must start the process of establishing justice for all such activities. The immediate priority, of course, will be to locate and release all enforced disappearance victims. For too long, these people and their families have endured unimaginable suffering, which must come to an end. The authorities should also set up an independent justice mechanism with the UN's support to investigate each of the incidents, and put the perpetrators on trial. After Sheikh Hasina's ouster, the nation finally has a chance to unearth the full horrors of enforced disappearance and rectify the state machinery involved.

Urgent bank reforms are crucial

Recover bad loans, punish those who exploited the sector

Since the fall of the Awami League regime, there have been several chaotic incidents in the banking sector—from the resignation of Bangladesh Bank (BB) governor and other top officials to the conflicts between rival groups at the Motijheel branch of Bangladesh Islami Bank yesterday—sending out an alarming signal. These incidents are but an indication about how quickly a sector, long lying on the edge of the precipice, can unravel when push comes to shove.

A recent report by Prothom Alo sheds light on what led to the woeful state of this sector. It talks about the BB's questionable steps taken during the erstwhile government to keep several failing banks afloat by providing liquidity support without collateral; alleged unethical connections of the BB governor and deputy governors with top loan defaulters; and the change of ownership forced on several banks including the Islami Bank, creating an environment of mistrust. Moreover, the BB's choice of lending foreign currency loans from the reserve to various influential businesses through the export development fund, without proper evaluation, also resulted in many classified loans. Just think: 20 local businesses currently owe BB about $70 million taken out of the foreign currency reserve!

The default loan amount reported by BB—Tk 1.822 trillion—is also under scrutiny. Experts estimate that the actual figure would be close to four trillion, considering rescheduled and bad/written-off loans and those currently under legal dispute. Meanwhile, depositors of the failing banks, many of which were forced to change ownership, cannot withdraw their savings. Yet, the owners of the banks are taking out loans under different names.

While some of these irregularities were mentioned in the BB's own reports, several central bank officials allege that many such activities have remained out of BB's and Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit's regulatory radar. This raises serious questions about the responsibility and ethics of top officials of not just the central bank but also the governing bodies of several private and public commercial banks. There is no doubt that political appointments in the banking sector, incorrect or manipulative accounting practices, nepotism, and lack of transparency in the lending process brought the sector to its current state.

It is, therefore, imperative that the interim government urgently launches an investigation to find out the actual amount of default loans, and identify and bring to book the big defaulters along with officials who aided these questionable borrowings. Also, the government must prioritise depositors' interests and prevent any further withdrawal of money by the unholy nexus of unscrupulous owners, borrowers, and defaulters that are bleeding the sector dry.

Phonograph was invented

On this day in 1877, American inventor Thomas Alva Edison made perhaps his most original discovery, the phonograph, and his early recordings were indentations embossed into a sheet of tinfoil by a vibrating stylus.

The fall of a dictator should not give rise to another

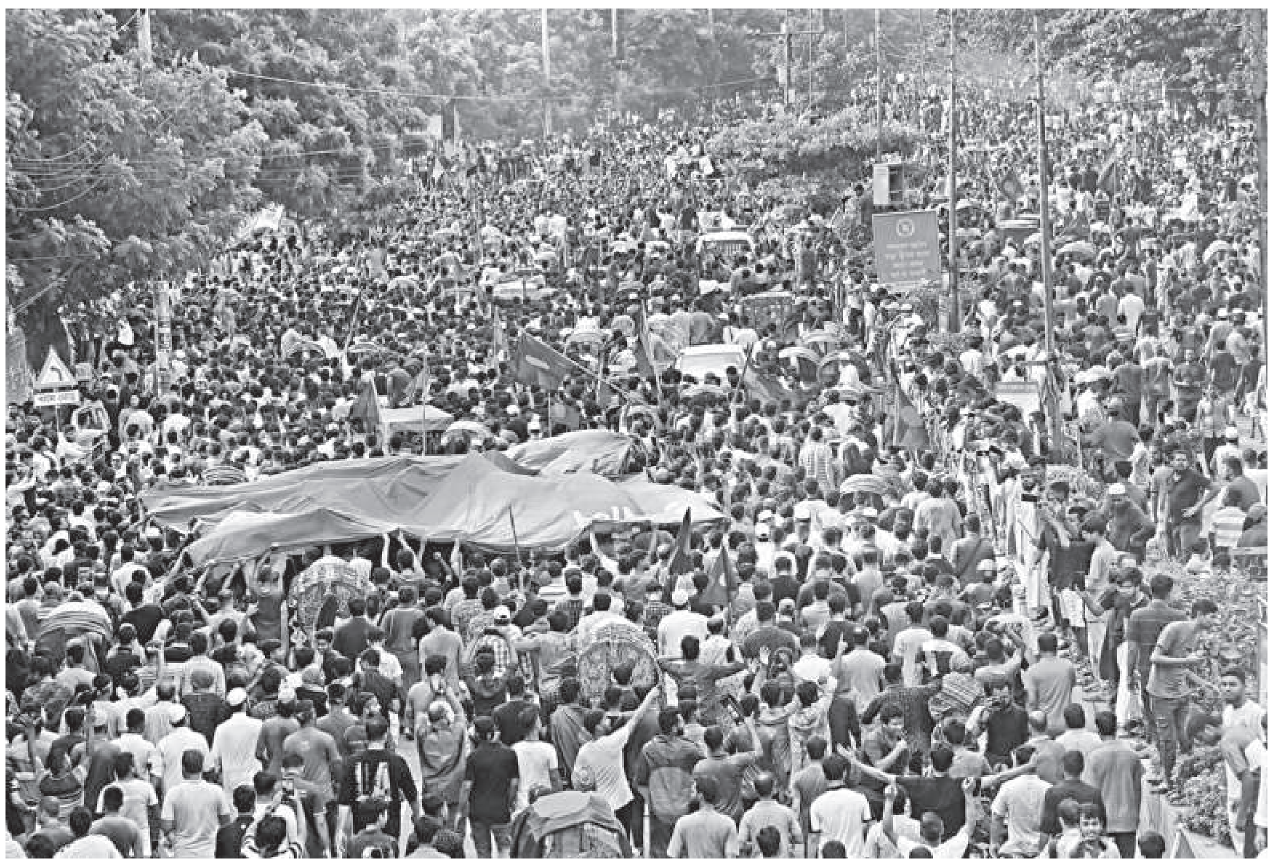
The new administration under the leadership of Nobel laureate Dr Muhammad Yunus has the aspirations of many entrusted upon him to deliver justice, create the space for a functioning economy and democracy, establish rule of law, and a transparent and accountable government. The recent violence and history of coups and staged elections give an eerie feeling that the country is not completely out of danger.

The blood and sacrifice of hundreds of people freed Bangladesh from the tyrannical leadership of former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina. It is even more important now that Hasina and those in the command responsibility during her time in the government are not let off the hook and are brought to justice and accountability for the unlawful killings, detention and torture of hundreds of people in the country. More than 500 people were killed in 23 days since July 16, according to Prothom Alo. The violence against minorities after Hasina's exit must also be subject to investigation.

The interim government of Bangladesh has the opportunity to do this by proactively inviting the United Nations to establish a commission of inquiry and extending its full cooperation with the procedure. UN High Commissioner for Human Rights Volker Turk has reiterated his office's support for a comprehensive investigation. The international community must press for the same to uphold global justice and accountability under the rules-based international order.

Justice and accountability do not begin with Sheikh Hasina and her government only. The political parties that have ruled the country before her time, too, have committed serious human rights violations and promoted a culture of impunity. There is both fear and frustration that the traditional political parties will exploit this moment to return to power and make matters worse, given their competing track records of corruption and crimes.

For the longest time, the people have shown tremendous resilience to put up with corruption, politicised judiciary, and repressive laws and law enforcement that resulted in egregious human rights violations including torture, enforced disappearances, and unlawful killings. The crimes under the leadership of Sheikh Hasina must not subside those committed by her predecessors.



The young generation that has led the movement for systemic change deserves nothing short of a leadership that breaks away from the ugly legacy of the traditional political parties. FILE PHOTO: AMRAN HOSSAIN

The young generation that has led the movement for systemic change, and was subsequently joined by the wider population, deserves nothing short of a leadership that breaks away from the ugly legacy of the traditional political parties. The fall of a dictator should not give rise to another. The Yunus-led government must ensure that Bangladesh does not fall back on the dictatorial aspirations of political parties and ideologies that undermine cultural, political and religious freedoms.

The young generation must be afforded with safe and secure environment, free of intimidation and oppression, to come up with new ideas, leaders and political parties that are representative of gender, age, ethnic, religious and socioeconomic diversity. A gender-balanced leadership is indispensable in this process to ensure diversity, inclusivity, and representation. Reforms should be considered in the electoral process to ensure representation of the people.

Constitutional reforms will be required to ensure free and fair elections and reinstate the function of an interim government to administer the transition to a democratically elected government in the future. A national referendum can guide some of these decisions as the basis for public consensus. Institutional reforms will be required throughout the administration to develop systems for transparency and accountability in the process.

The interim government must immediately scrap all repressive provisions under laws such as the Cyber Security Act (CSA), drop the charges against all those accused under the problematic provisions of the law as well as its predecessors—the Digital Security Act (DSA) and the Information and Communication Technology (ICT) Act. New laws and constitutional reforms must be drafted in line with international human rights law and standards and should be adopted through wider public consultation.

It is a relief to see that some of the people have been freed from the secret detention facilities of the security agencies—some after nearly a decade of their enforced disappearances. Their release in the middle of the road with eyes blindfolded are attempts by the perpetrators to evade criminal responsibilities. The detention facilities must be dismantled and those who were in charge of the facilities must be investigated and brought to justice.

The economist in Muhammad Yunus is now most required to stop the free fall of the economy and recover the state at a time when even the global economic and political orders are extremely chaotic.

The interim government must be afforded the time to make foundational changes that are inevitable for a smooth transition to a democratically elected government and for the country to move forward. This cannot be an indefinite period. The interim administration must set a deadline for itself. The success of the new leadership will depend on the trust and confidence it is able to build with the people.

It's time to look forward with our fashion partners

MOSTAFIZ UDDIN

In the aftermath of the former prime minister's resignation, the country is now ready to put the challenges of the last few weeks behind it. The nationwide curfews had been withdrawn on August 6, and since then, banks, schools, factories, etc. have been re-opened and people have started their normal daily lives. The apparel factories of the country have resumed production on August 7.

So, what does all this mean for our country? The focus of this article is from a business perspective. However, the people of Bangladesh can attest to how the past few weeks of civil unrest have certainly taken their toll on an emotional level as well.

My overriding message, as somebody who lives and works in Bangladesh, is that our garment manufacturing sector remains very much open for business. But first, we need to look at what the business community needs from our state and non-state institutions to help Bangladesh regain the confidence of its international business partners.

As stated earlier, it has been a very challenging time, but I believe that the resignation of the former prime minister and the installation of the army chief might help to restore stability. It is time to start looking forward.

Bangladesh gained its independence from Pakistan in 1971, meaning that we are still a relatively new country and the path to development has been a bumpy road. However, Bangladesh's recent problems are part of a larger historical pattern of political and social challenges. Thus, the country's history of overcoming adversity and its commitment to economic development should provide a foundation for optimism.

Over the years, the garments industry of Bangladesh has established itself as one of the key powerhouses in the country, bringing in vital export earnings. In the fiscal year 2022-23, garment exports from Bangladesh earned $47.38 billion and the value is expected to grow year-on-year.

Despite the recent political unrest, Bangladesh's garment industry still remains a cornerstone of our economy. The industry accounts for more than 80 percent of the country's export earnings and provides employment to millions of people, particularly women.

Let us also not forget the sector has played a crucial role in lifting millions out of poverty and improving living standards. There are ambitions to increase exports well beyond US$50bn and, in doing so, lift many millions more people out of poverty.

But in order to achieve those goals, we need the support of the international community, and the backing of international fashion buyers.

> Going forward, our leaders need to own the conversation. Historically, public relations have not been one of Bangladesh's strong suits. However, how we project ourselves to the international community is vital given the present situation.

It goes without saying that the international community may have read newspaper reports or even seen video footage of the political unrest that has occurred over the last few weeks, and have developed concerns about placing their orders here. Therefore, we simply cannot assume that the support from the international community will be readily available—it must be earned.

To maintain or regain the trust of the international business community, I believe three things need to happen over the coming weeks.

The first is that our country's new leadership needs to outline a clear roadmap for how Bangladesh will avoid further disturbances moving forwards. What safeguards do they have in place, which actors will be involved in bringing all parties around the table, and how can we ensure the unrest of the past few weeks does not happen again?

Secondly, we need transparency and openness. We cannot keep the international business community in the dark about developments in our country. Silence on these key issues can have a negative impact, as it creates a vacuum. This can lead to the spread of rumours and mistruths, which has happened in the past few weeks.

Going forward, our leaders need to own the conversation. Historically, public relations have not been one of Bangladesh's strong suits. However, how we project ourselves to the international community is vital given the present situation. Clear, authoritative, and unambiguous messaging will be key from this point onwards.

Finally, we need a unified voice—we need solidarity. Partnership and collaboration are in all of our best interests right now. We need to present a united front and disagreements must be sorted out swiftly for the greater good.

My concluding message to clothing buyers is to stand by us at this critical juncture and to continue placing orders with confidence as we head into the vital Christmas order season. Your partnership and support are more vital than ever.

After the fall of former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina last week, Bangladesh was thrown into a critical state of instability and uncertainty. There was no government till Dr Muhammad Yunus took oath as the chief adviser of the interim government on August 8. During this period, the country saw an outburst of violence and crime, which was the outcome of both pent-up political frustration against the ruling party of 15 years and the result of some bigotry, and the machinations of bad actors trying to take advantage of the lawlessness for personal gains. One of the most dangerous situations that can happen in a country is the chaos, crime, and destruction that take place after an authoritarian force is forced to abdicate. Unfortunately, Bangladesh is in such a situation.

However, this issue is not just a domestic phenomenon. Several influential groups inside Bangladesh's largest neighbour have taken the initiative to create a narrative that this momentary lawlessness caused by the thoughtless abdication of the former prime minister is the prelude of a Bangladesh where bigotry and religious fundamentalism are going to flare up.

It almost feels like, with the fall of Sheikh Hasina, some elements in India are behaving as though India has suffered a great loss. It is my humble opinion that, instead of immediately choosing to take the easily monetisable culture-war talking points, the enlightened Indian cultural leaders should first push for a democratic Bangladesh where actual political discourse can take place without fear of getting killed or disappeared by security forces.

The main platform where such notions are being sensationalised at the moment is X, formerly known as Twitter. Many verified accounts on X are reporting rumours as actual news and sometimes just outright propagating fake news. What's worse is that this propagation of fake news has also been noted in Indian mainstream media, as well as among popular Indian social media personalities.

It is true that there have been concerning reports of violence against minority communities. Bangladesh Hindu Buddhist Christian Oikya Parishad reported 205 incidents of persecution of members of minority communities across 52 districts. Gobinda Pramanik, general secretary of Bangladesh National Hindu Mahajot, recently made a video statement about the matter, in which he said that, after Sheikh Hasina's resignation on August 5, the Hindu community in Bangladesh thought they would be attacked in a massive way and there would be incidents of arson. According to the general secretary, houses of some Hindu leaders of the Awami League who were very active, as well as those of some Muslim leaders, were attacked. He also stated that some opportunistic people attacked a few local temples. Coordinators of the anti-discrimination student movement called for protection of the minority communities, which was answered by many. Leaders of BNP, Jamaat and other parties, too, instructed their functionaries to ensure that Hindu homes were not attacked and temples were protected.

But against this backdrop, we saw Republic TV from India spreading rumours and making strange claims.

The West Bengal Police, in a statement posted from its official Facebook page, stated that the way some local TV channels are reporting on the current situation in Bangladesh is clearly communally inflammatory and against the norms of the Press Council of India. The West Bengal Police urged viewers to exercise their own judgement when viewing this type of coverage and keep in mind that the authenticity of the footage shown by the channel is not verified by any neutral third party. They requested people not to fall into the trap of one-sided, hateful and misleading propaganda.

The sudden upsurge in misinformation and disinformation on Indian social media coincidentally aligns with a seemingly coordinated rise in criminal activities and vandalism all over Bangladesh. Inside the country, some people are also taking to social media and calling this another attempt by pro-AL forces in India, as well as RAW, to fabricate a narrative of communalism in order to plunge Bangladesh into further unrest and instability. Needless to say, there is no evidence for any of this. Rumours beget rumours. This kind of misinformation treadmill needs to be stopped immediately lest it leads to further instances of violence, and makes the people-to-people divide between Bangladesh and India even worse.

Although it seems the Indian authorities have overtly asked for people to stop propagating fake news regarding what is happening in Bangladesh, there are many in India who firmly believe that Bangladesh is about to fall under a fundamentalist rule the moment the next general elections are held. It almost feels like, with the fall of Sheikh Hasina, some elements in India are behaving as though India has suffered a great loss. It is my humble opinion that, instead of immediately choosing to take the easily monetisable culture-war talking points, the enlightened Indian cultural leaders should first push for a democratic Bangladesh where actual political discourse can take place without fear of getting killed or disappeared by security forces. The people of Bangladesh don't need to be kept "in check" by a convenient autocrat. That is the narrative of a now-disgraced political party that has proven to lie repeatedly to the people and the world to keep power. The people of India must not fall for this narrative ever again.

India must realise the shortcomings of its foreign policy regarding Bangladesh. These should be fundamental lessons from history. Never trust a dictator to keep power. A robust and mature democracy is the only reliable international partner. Right now, India needs to revamp its approach towards Bangladesh entirely. Now is the time for genuine track 2 diplomacy. It is time for genuine people-to-people relations to ensure long-term, sustainable friendship with its most significant geostrategic partner. And this kind of change must start at home.

Can the government govern itself?

The importance of institutions in democratisation and good governance is a Boston-based Bangladeshi writer. She works at Harvard Kennedy School and is currently pursuing a micro-master's in data and economics from Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT).

Sarzah Yeasmin

SARZAH YEASMIN

Party interests and national interests have seldom aligned in the history of Bangladesh, and because of the "party-archies" there is an acute dearth of strong and credible institutions in the country that can create a landscape for fairer politics. It is still premature to say that the public have won without there being any concrete agenda for correcting the historical wrongs. Institution-building and institutionalisation of best practices are a decades-long process; so regardless of the promise this transitional moment holds in the history of the country, we should tread forward with some caution. The question is, can the government govern itself? In Bangladesh's case, that is a clear no. There is engagement, enthusiasm, and energy around the issues of substance, but the political vacuum might lead the country in a regressive direction if, ultimately, we have to turn towards the vanguard of old leadership. No work has been put into developing party institutions. The problem with parties in Bangladesh is that their activism relies on backward-looking and person-centric politics and revolves around a single leader. Cultish attitudes such as pledging allegiance to one leader over the state are performative, and such performance is normalised in Bangladeshi politics.

The reason why robust political institutions have not been built during the country's lifetime is because the state apparatus is used to serve the party in power, not the people. This is a part of the broader political culture, and it will be a difficult journey out. People do not want to replace dictators with dictators. Tangible liberation is only possible when Bangladeshis can meet their full potential, when minorities do not need special protection, when people can express their views without the fear of backlash; we are not there yet. In a democratic, free and fairer Bangladesh, Bangladeshis can be pro-any social or political party, pro-any brand, and advocate for their ideologies without repercussions. The political bifurcation and polarisation in the country is murky because it is not based on differences of any substantial policy issue between the opposing parties. Each party, while in power, has depleted the state of its resources to cater to the top leadership's and party's goals at the expense of national interests. They have broken and bent their own laws without remorse and have blamed the opposition and mysterious third-party actors for failure and unrest.

Students fought for equality and justice. Valorising looting and misogynistic language takes away from the strong ethical ground on which the student movement is established. While the former ruling government was in power, there were many unsubstantiated claims that the movement had been hijacked by the opposition and "miscreants," but there is more danger of misappropriating the goals and the language of the movement now that it has accomplished a tangible political outcome. The iconoclastic nature of desecrating the founding father's statue is deeply disturbing—denying the founding narrative of the nation because we seem not to see beyond the euphoria of this moment. Regardless of Awami League's atrocities, Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman has his own indelible place in the birth of this nation.

The public display of disdain does not bode well and is not conducive to creating a culture where democracy can flourish. We need to come out of our culture of belittling, shaming, looting, and euphoric mob violence if we really want good and reliable leadership, because at the end of the day, leaders are the reflection of their people, and vice versa. A dictator cannot be a dictator without support. We need a radical change in how we envision good and effective leadership and build institutions that can allow good leadership. A strong leader is not one who projects power through terror. A strong leader knows how to initiate institutions, how to adapt, listen, delegate, how to activate people to meet their potential, and take a back seat when it is necessary. The country could go in any direction, although the participation of students and civil society in creating a framework for the interim government shows promise.

So, what should be the expectation from the interim government? The country is in shambles as it grapples with significant economic and political challenges further intensified by the current vacuum. The interim government needs to prioritise institution-building since it is only an interim government, so that the country can be ready to be handed over to good leadership. It needs to prepare the country for a democratic and fair government and simultaneously create a political culture that fosters good leadership through setting precedents of collaboration. The country cannot move forward without addressing regulations that allow political parties to drain state resources and use terror to secure party interests. Establishing good governance and effective public service delivery should be the interim leadership's prime goals. We are in a moment of negative peace—an undesirable government has been ousted—but that does not mean that historical wrongs will be addressed adequately. Nothing guarantees progress unless we implement measures of accountability and build institutions that are capable of being fair, transparent, non-partisan, and impartial in fulfilling their functions regardless of which party takes power.

Nothing guarantees progress unless we implement measures of accountability and build institutions that are capable of being fair, transparent, non-partisan, and impartial in fulfilling their functions.

In a study exploring democratisation in 15 post-conflict societies that include countries like Bosnia, Cambodia, Liberia, and Timor Leste, it was found that the design of the interim governments is foundational in determining the democratisation prospects and processes of countries after a period of conflict or shock. Factors such as inclusion of conflicting parties and diverse actors in the transitional government, putting institutional constraints on the executive and decentralisation of power and governance to local levels have led to higher successes in democratisation, as power-sharing de-escalate risks of subsequent conflicts. Delegation of power provides more definite channels for transparency and accountability and more chances for civic participation. The point about conducting a fair election soon has been mentioned repeatedly, both by military and political establishments and movement actors. However, the template of a fair election assumes that there are credible processes, institutions, options, and state capacity in place to conduct and sustain a fair election. Premature elections can lead to an outcome with non-democratic actors and unfair power-grabbers. Election is the end point of the interim government; therefore, much more work needs to be put into this major assignment that would determine the success of this transitional moment.

Bangladeshis do not want a transfer of power from criminal regimes to criminal regimes, so the choices that voters have at the ballot box would be most important. Choice should not be limited to the lesser of the two evils. As Sarjis Alam, one of the leaders of the anti-discrimination student movement, aptly says, the movement is against the system of oppression, not a particular oppressor. The purpose of a democratic election would fail if it is used to elect an undemocratic leader.

The meetings that the army chief had with different political parties and civil society representatives to ponder on the future of the country are the kinds of meetings that should be part of the regular political practice. Governments should consult with the opposition and the public, work on laws, regulations, and national strategies collectively so that they can align with national interests. Practices of finding common ground and collective participation should be instilled in institutional mechanisms and processes for decision-making. There should be opportunities for civic engagement and scope for compassionate and smart leadership so leadership can be efficient in its response to the public—so that being in the streets is not the only way to get the country moving. Historically, Bangladesh has had vibrant student movements, but that has not translated into a vibrant democracy so far. The interim government, along with sustained efforts from students, will be instrumental in creating the landscape for effective democracy during this post-conflict phase.

The model of the transitional government often determines what comes next. One likely political challenge for the upcoming transitional government will be containing oppositional and retaliatory forces and bypassing episodes of unrest that curb chances of establishing an effective democracy. The point of the anti-discrimination movement is to break away from the vestiges of the old regimes and build an independent nation where public dignity is protected, where people's potential is met. This transitional moment will be vital in fashioning an effective succession—a legitimate, viable and a fair one, so that the mass atrocities that have been normalised throughout our political history are never repeated. Bangladeshis need institutions that they can trust, a system in service of the people, a government that can govern itself.

Utpal Dutt and Postcolonial Political Theatre

Utpal Dutt differentiated between fact and truth by focusing on their connection with social conflict and argued that fact remains mere bourgeois truth when abstracted from the context of continuous social conflict between the haves and the have-nots and conversely that fact can become a revolutionary truth when it intertwines the realities of conflict, and sides unerringly with the have-nots.

MALLARIKA SINHA ROY

The inspiration for decolonization, as a philosophical term, writes Achille Mbembe, was the 'active will to community' which can be translated as something like 'to stand up on one's own and create a heritage'. The impetus for decolonization in theatre, as it moved from re-instituting indigenous traditions in place of colonial modernity, to retrieving indigenous systems through 'provincializing Europe' as Dipesh Chakrabarty aptly defines, came from different quarters. The Cold War context provided a range of influences, from western European and north American theatre experiments to socialist realisms and socialist internationalism, as well as the inter-cultural practices emerging from Asian-African alliances. The modern Indian theatre drew on these multiple modernities. The outcome was a significant shift away not only from traditional forms of folk theatre and classical Sanskrit drama, but also from the modern colonial theatre in terms of canon formation, actor training, circulation of texts and performances, reception, patronage, and criticism. Institutionally, as part of the 'will to community', a new cultural bureaucracy, often functioning closely with the administrative one, sustained this shift from the local to the national level.

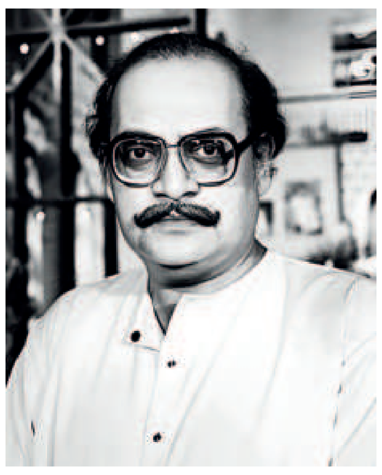
Utpal Dutt (1929-1993) embodied this shift. With the exception of direct involvement in cultural bureaucracy, he straddled the process of decolonization, forging a political theatre of the postcolonial contemporary for modern India. When he emerged as a promising theatre-maker and performer in the city of Calcutta in late 1940s, the Indian People's Theatre Association (IPTA henceforth), as part of the communist movement in India, had already established itself as a formidable force in cultural politics and the idea of progressive political theatre had started to gain ground. Before his inevitable shift towards IPTA in 1950-51, Dutt was a member of British thespian Geoffrey Kendal's touring Shakespeareana International which, performed Shakespeare's plays in metropolises and mofussil towns across India. Theatre critic Samik Bandyopadhyay notes that the democratic nature of this travelling theatre troupe was crucial in shaping Dutt as an artist. After touring with Kendal, Dutt started his own English theatre group in Calcutta, The Amateur Shakespeareans, and won critical acclaim for modernised productions of Romeo and Juliet (1948) and Julius Caesar (1949).

Dutt's acute sense of the need to engage with the process of decolonization was the reason behind his abandonment of English theatre even after such bravura productions. English theatre in Calcutta was a decidedly elite practice and he turned away from it to begin his stint with IPTA, joining the central Calcutta squad of IPTA as a director and actor and performing in different productions like Tagore's Bisarjan (performed in 1952) and Ritwik Ghatak's Dalil (1951) as well as in various street-corner plays like Bhoter Bhet (1951).

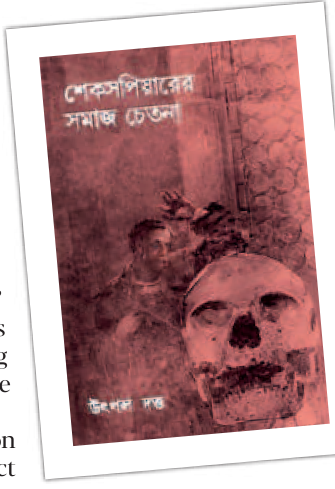
The experience of making theatre with IPTA while engaging with communist politics and Marxist philosophy, though short-lived, became foundational in Dutt's subsequent journey as a political theatre artist. He created his 'Little Theatre Group' (LTG) and, in 1953 leased the Minerva theatre in Calcutta as its permanent home. LTG began with classic Tagore plays, translations of Shakespeare and Russian theatre, and social farces by the nineteenth-century playwright Michael Madhusudan Dutt. Their production of Macbeth (1954) became particularly successful and received invitations for performances even in remote villages, smaller towns and working-class areas. LTG finally found its feet on the Bengali stage with Dutt's Angaar (1959), a play about the lives of coal miners that culminates in a mining disaster and references a recent catastrophe in the Baradhemo coal mine. Angaar became hugely popular not only for its intensely political theme but also because of the sophisticated scenography, sound and lighting design employed. The climax of Angaar, an exemplary feat of stagecraft depicting the despair of seven miners trapped underground waiting to be drowned, is described by Bharucha as an 'epiphany of grief' in which the spectacle of a calamity becomes a source of entertainment and is applauded. Dutt, in his later assessment of his own work, was critical of Angaar because it could not represent the truth of miners' resistance, but was limited to displaying the facts of their huge exploitation.



Utpal Dutt (March 29, 1929 - August 19, 1993)

This tension between truth and fact shaped Dutt's vision of political theatre, which he called revolutionary theatre. He differentiated between fact and truth by focusing on their connection with social conflict and argued that fact remains mere bourgeois truth when abstracted from the context of continuous social conflict between the haves and the have-nots and conversely that fact can become a revolutionary truth when it intertwines the realities of conflict, and sides unerringly with the have-nots. His aim was to represent revolutionary truth because, in his view, presenting only impartial facts risked reifying bourgeois power, and he wanted his theatre to be an agent of change, and thus a factor in the revolution. This meant recounting as many instances of such change as possible, especially historical moments when exploitative regimes are challenged by the poor, the colonized and the 'native'. He aspired to portray the full complexity of power relations at intersecting points in the context of social conflict. This is the reason Dutt so often revisits histories of anti-colonial revolts against the British in India, revolts against other imperial powers in other geo-political contexts, and rebellions against experiences of domination. His stint in the Bengali folk theatre form Jatra, from 1971 to 1988, bears the same marks of revolutionary intent in highlighting historical moments of resistance against colonial/authoritarian regimes.

'One of the ironies of political theatre', observes Rustom Bharucha, 'is that it thrives during the worst periods of repression'. Discussions of political theatre, consequently, need to be continually informed by understanding of the nature of repression and period-specific details of each socio-political situation. In order to make sense of the cultural critique offered by political theatre, the critic has to engage with the defining characteristics of the postcolonial contemporary. This need becomes even more acute in the case of an artist like Dutt because he explicitly identified his project as a revolutionary theatre, that 'addresses these working masses and must adjust its pitch, tone and volume accordingly' in order to agitate for revolutionary social transformation. That his revolutionary theatre was dismissed by a large number of critics as communist propaganda did not dishearten Dutt, but rather he wore the term 'propagandist' as a badge of honour and declared 'to hell with the so-called critics who find our plays naive, melodramatic and loud'.



The recent revivals of his plays from 2018 to 2023 by various theatre groups, including People's Little Theatre that Dutt had created in 1971 after LTG dissolved, invite us to revisit the phase of interconnected histories from a different angle because the impetus to return to Dutt's plays adds another thread to the interconnected histories. This new thread intertwines twenty-first century experiences of the rise of the right-wing, the global south gig-economy, and the coming of a new generation of postcolonial intellectuals. Taken together these threads compel contemporary theatre-makers to bring Dutt's work back to the stage.

Let me list some of these revivals, with the caveat that this list is not exhaustive. I have already mentioned the revival of Titu Mir. Along with Titu Mir came Ghum Nei (1959), a play on the significance of the workers' union, which is now regularly performed by the theatre group Iccheymoto to warm receptions and has received awards for its sets, sound and performance. Sourav Palodhi, the director of the 2023 revival, has argued that this play has contemporary resonance because it underlines the importance of the workers' collective voice in sustaining the secular ethos of Indian democracy (Palodhi 2023). Similarly, Barricade (1972), which comments on the rise of authoritarianism against the backdrop of the rise of Nazism in Germany, was revived by the theatre group Chakdaha Natyajan in January 2022 to comment on the contemporary crises of religious fundamentalism and political violence in India. Another Dutt play Ekla Chalo Re (1989) which re-tells the history of Partition and the subsequent religious riots through the historical moment of Gandhi's assassination in 1948, was successfully revived by the group Swapna Sandhani in 2019.

Finally, Utpal Dutt's legacy remains dependent on and is shaped by these new interpretations of his theatre. His work created a reservoir of memory and his plays and his approach to theatre-making, provide a constant reminder of the importance of history in fashioning the present. The future, however, is being shaped here and now by a new generation of directors, actors and dramaturgs who are making Dutt relevant again, and interpreting his work in ways that facilitate better understanding of the conceptual and material spaces the new postcolonial generation occupies. The process of decolonization in the political theatre of Utpal Dutt, thus remains a vital part of an ongoing movement where every act of thinking and performing is revising, recreating, reinterpreting history. Instead of romanticizing the past, this movement is taking shape as a critical multi-dimensional re-looking at the past, as a working method for making sense of collective political and artistic struggles.

Shakib stays, Taskin returns for Pakistan tour

SPORTS REPORTER

Ace all-rounder Shakib Al Hasan was called up and pacer Taskin Ahmed returned to the Test fold after over one year's gap as Bangladesh named a 16-member squad for the upcoming two-Test series against Pakistan, scheduled to begin on August 21 in Rawalpindi.

Many fans on social media were vocal against Shakib and called for his ouster from the team following his silence during the students protests. However, the selectors decided to choose the 37-year-old for the tour.

"The emphasis was on picking our best players for this version. This is a well-balanced squad," chief selector Gazi Ashraf Hossain Lipu was quoted in a press release yesterday.

Shakib, who recently played in the Global T20 league in Canada, is expected to join the side directly in Pakistan ahead of the series.

Meanwhile, Taskin returns to red-ball cricket after having asked to opt out of Test assignments in February for the remainder of 2024 to manage his workload following a shoulder injury.

However, the right-arm pacer has been named only for the second Test in Karachi, starting on August 30, as the selectors first want to test the pacer's mettle in red-ball cricket in Bangladesh 'A' team's second four-day game against Pakistan 'A', beginning on August 20 in Islamabad.

"We have selected five pacers mindful of the fact that Taskin will only play the second Test. He hasn't bowled in a Test since June last year [against Afghanistan] and we have decided to include him in the 'A' Team for the second four-dayer against Pakistan 'A' to get him into the rhythm for longer version matches.

"Our attack has variety with bowlers who can bowl fast and also swing the ball and I am really looking forward to seeing them perform against world class batsmen," Lipu said.

Mushfiqur Rahim, who missed the last Test series against Sri Lanka at home due to a fracture on his right thumb, returned to the Test side and has already departed for Pakistan to play the first four-day game for Bangladesh 'A' from August 13.

Shahadat Hossain Dipu and Mushfik Hasan missed the cut from the last Test series.

Despite Bangladesh's poor record in Pakistan, Lipu was hopeful that this group of players can bring success.

"Pakistan are very tough opponents, especially in their home front and it will be a challenging tour for us. It is good that we will get additional time to prepare in Lahore. Also, some players who are in Pakistan already with the Bangladesh 'A' side, will join the national team for the Test series. Their experience of the conditions should come in handy."

No headway yet on Women's T20 WC hosting

SPORTS REPORTER

Asif Mahmud, the Youth and Sports Adviser of Bangladesh's newly formed interim government, informed the ministry will "address state-level matters" with both the Chief Adviser to the interim government, Prof. Muhammad Yunus, and seek guidance from the United Nations to facilitate the hosting of the upcoming Women's T20 World Cup.

Mahmud took office for the first time yesterday and met with Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) officials before addressing the media.

"We have talked to BCB about the Women's T20 World Cup. The most important thing is ensuring security, and to achieve that, there are state-level matters that need to be addressed," Mahmud told reporters at the Secretariat yesterday.

"We will have detailed discussions with Prof. Yunus. He is a sports-loving person, and of course, he will assist us and ensure security at the state level. We will also consult with the UN regarding their suggestions, as there are travel restrictions for a few countries," added the 26-year-old.

The International Cricket Council (ICC) has been monitoring the situation in Bangladesh following mass protests in the country that eventually led to the fall of the Awami League government.

Bangladesh is scheduled to host the mega event from October 3 to October 20, but there are significant concerns about security following weeks of unrest. In case the tournament needs to be relocated, ICC is reportedly considering alternative options, with India, UAE and Sri Lanka being the likely candidates.

The Youth and Sports Adviser has also asked BCB -- in presence of its Chief Executive Nizamuddin Chowdhury, along with seven directors -- to explore the possibility of appointing an interim board president under ICC's framework, given that BCB President Nazmul Hassan is currently absent.

Mahmud further informed, "For a federation to function effectively, all of its organs need to operate. The president holds an important responsibility. However, the BCB is an autonomous federation, and we cannot impose decisions on it but can exchange suggestions.

"We want to make the necessary changes, but at the same time, we need to follow due process."

'HOW IS THIS POSSIBLE?'

REUTERS, Paris

Dutchwoman Sifan Hassan sprinted through the finish of the marathon and straight into the pantheon of Olympic greats on Sunday, completing her astonishing Olympic agenda with a gold medal after taking bronze in both the 5,000 and 10,000 metres.

A hundred years on from Paavo Nurmi's five golds in Paris, the 2024 Games got the athletics hero they had been waiting for in Hassan, who became the first since Czech Emil Zatopek in 1952 to medal in those three events.

"Every moment in the race I was regretting that I ran the 5000m and 10,000m. I was telling myself if I hadn't done that, I would feel great today," she said.

"From the beginning to the end, it was so hard. Every step of the way. I was thinking, 'Why did I do that? What is wrong with me?' If I hadn't done it, I would feel so comfortable here."

Hassan stunned fans three years ago when she attempted a rare Olympic treble in the 1,500m, 5,000m and 10,000m - taking bronze in the shorter distance and winning the two longer races.

She earned headlines again this time around, signing up for those three events as well as the marathon for Paris.

Throngs of reporters tuned in to hear her announce which she would actually run, with few predicting she would really try the gruelling distance road run on top of the two longer track events.

"For anyone else this would be insane," retired sprint legend Michael Johnson declared. But not for Hassan, who has built a reputation as one of her sport's toughest fighters.

And 36 hours after the 10,000m wrapped up across town at the Stade de France, Hassan was on the starting line, becoming the first woman to attempt all three - and admitted she was scared to try it.

She battled with Tigst Assefa of Ethiopia and managed to shake her off in the last stretch, crossing the finish line in an Olympic record time of two hours, 22 minutes and 55 seconds.

All told, the two-time marathon major winner raced a total of 62.2 kilometres (38.65 miles) in Paris.

"When I finished, the whole moment was a release. It is unbelievable. I have never experienced anything like that. Even the other marathons I have run were not close to this," she told reporters.

"I couldn't stop celebrating. I was feeling dizzy. I wanted to lie down. Then I thought, 'I am the Olympic champion. How is this possible?'."

Hassan's outstanding grit has won over not only fans, but her rivals, too.

"She's just awesome. Who can do that? Who can come from track and win the marathon?," said Kenya's Sharon Lokedi, who finished fourth.

"I feel like I just want to be her."

LeBron 'super humbled' by third gold

AFP, Paris

LeBron James said his third Olympic gold felt the best of them all as the NBA's all-time leading points scorer helped the United States beat France 98-87 in the final on Saturday.

The Los Angeles Lakers superstar returned to the Olympics after a 12-year absence, notching 14 points, 10 rebounds and six assists as Team USA held off a battling France to make it five successive men's basketball golds.

"It's a big moment for USA basketball," said James. "I'm just living in the moment. I feel super humbled that I can still play this game and play it at a high level, play with 11 other great players, and a great coaching staff go out and do it for our country."

The US beat France for the second Olympic final in a row, with James back in the squad and four-time NBA champion Stephen Curry making his tournament debut.

"It was great. I think you wouldn't want it any other way to be able to face off against the host team. It was a great atmosphere," said James.

The 39-year-old won bronze as a teenager at Athens 2004 and was part of the "Redeem Team" four years later that took gold in Beijing. James appeared again at London 2012 but had not played at the Games since.

"It's the best one because it's the one that's right now," said James, suggesting it would be his final Olympics.

"I can't see myself playing in LA (in 2028). Although I also didn't see myself playing in Paris. But four years from now, I can't see it," he said.

Resignation of BFF's Salahuddin, Kiron demanded

SPORTS REPORTER

Defying inclement weather, members of Bangladeshi Football Ultras (BFU), a fan group of Bangladesh football, gathered at the Bangladesh Football Federation (BFF) headquarter in Arambagh yesterday, demanding the immediate resignation of BFF president Kazi Salahuddin and women's committee chairperson Mahfuza Akter Kiron.

Approximately 50 BFU members turned up as part of their 'March to BFF' programme braving the rain, chanting different slogans.

BFU has been campaigning for the resignations of Salahuddin, Kiron and senior vice president Abdus Salam Murshedy, who stepped down on Thursday soon after the resignation of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina in the face of vigorous protests.

BFU members now want Salahuddin and Kiron to follow Murshedy's footsteps and exit the federation.

"I want him [Salahuddin] to willingly resign from his post like Abdus Salam Mursedy," said BFU general secretary Mehedi Hasan Ovi in front of the main gate of the BFF House yesterday.

"Kiron time and again threatened the women's footballers and she is using the sentiments for the women's footballers to accumulate wealth for herself. We demand Kiron's resignation as well.

"They are trying to tag us as extremists, dangerous for football. But we are ready to counter the dirty games Salahuddin is playing, whom we respect as a legendary footballer but he has been a failure as an organiser," he added.

WE ARE ULTRAS

Though the BFU demanded the resignation of only Salahuddin and Kiron, former footballer and coach Shafiqul Islam Manik thinks the entire BFF executive committee needs to step down.

"I think the whole BFF executive committee should resign because no one can avoid their responsibility for the failure of the country's football," said Manik, who had once contested for the BFF president post.

Manik also added that every party should be wary of FIFA's regulations over government interference in football federations, a sentiment echoed by former footballer and coach Hasanuzzaman Khan Bablu.

"I think change in a systematic way is better because there is a FIFA binding. FIFA had suspended Bangladesh in 2001 after interference of the then government. We should not do anything that forces FIFA to ban Bangladesh," Bablu said.

"I think the interim government will form a dynamic leadership in a systematic way as the BFF election is approaching close."

Although the next BFF election set to take place in October, former footballer Ashraf Uddin Ahmed Chunnu thinks, "The entire BFF committee should resign before the election because it is a demand of the time."

Adviser of the youth and sports ministry in the interim government Asif Mahmud Sajib Bhuiyan has yet to comment on the matter but reiterated that the current government is determined to bring a systematic change everywhere.

"We want to reform the entire country. This reform is not about changing an individual from a position. We want to change the system."

USA pip China in medals table

AFP, Paris

The United States pipped China for top spot in the battle of medals yesterday as Paris prepared to bring the curtain down on one of the most successful Olympic Games in history.

In a thrilling finale that capped 17 days of spellbinding action, the United States women's basketball team squeezed past France 67-66 to clinch the last gold of the Games.

The win -- the eighth consecutive Olympic women's basketball won by the USA -- ensured the Americans finished level with China on 40 golds each as the games drew to a close.

The USA however finished on top of the overall medal table with a total of 126 medals, with China in second place on 91.

The final day began with a gripping women's marathon victory by the Netherlands' long-distance running star Sifan Hassan, who overhauled Ethiopia's Tigst Assefa to take gold by three seconds in an Olympic record of 2hr 22min 55sec.

Wrestling, weightlifting, water polo, volleyball, modern pentathlon, handball, and track cycling were the other sports to crown Olympic champions on the last day.

Hungary's Michelle Gulyas ran and shot to Olympic gold in the modern pentathlon, with home favourite Elodie Clouvel roared on to clinch silver.

In weightlifting, China's jubilant Li Wenwen lifted her coach into the air instead of the bar, having already secured gold.

STAR REPORT

Leaders of the minority organisations yesterday demanded the formation of special tribunals to expedite the trials of those who were involved in the attacks on minorities and compensation for the victims.

They placed the demands at the demonstrations that continued for the third straight day in the capital and elsewhere in the country, organised under the banners of Bangladesh Hindu Buddhist Christian Unity Council and Bangladesh Puja Udjapan Parishad.

In the capital, the central rally was held in front of the National Museum.

"This is our country. We were born here. We will give our lives, but we will not leave this country," said Basudev Dhar, president of the Puja Udjapan Parishad, while speaking at the rally.

Following the rally, the protesters brought out a procession, which ended at the Central Shaheed Minar premises, where another rally was held.

There, they placed several other demands, which included the allocation

Israel faces anger over Gaza school 'massacre'

More Gaza evacuations ordered; Palestinians and UN say nowhere in Gaza safe

AFP, Gaza City

Israel yesterday faced international condemnation for its strikes on a school in Gaza used for internally displaced people.

At least 93 people were killed in the attack. AFP could not independently verify the toll which, if confirmed, would be one of the largest from a single strike during 10 months of war between Israel and Palestinian militants since Hamas's October 7 attack.

The bombardment of Al-Tabieen religious school and mosque drew criticism from across the Middle East and beyond alongside calls for a ceasefire, after international mediators invited the warring sides to resume talks towards a long-sought truce and hostage-release deal.

- Israel issues massive evacuation order in Khan Younis
- Tens of thousands made to leave homes in darkness
- Palestinians and UN say nowhere in Gaza is safe

Civil defence rescuers in the Hamas-ruled territory said three Israeli missiles hit the complex in Gaza City while people were performing dawn prayers. The military confirmed it had used "three precise munitions".

Mahmud Bassal, spokesman for the civil defence agency, said 11 children and six women were among the 93 who died at the school shelter, "and there are many unidentified body parts".

"They dropped a missile on them while they were just praying," said one woman, mourning over a dead child shrouded in a plastic body bag.

Israel's military said it had "precisely struck" Al-Tabieen, later adding that intelligence suggested "at least 19 Hamas and Islamic Jihad terrorists were eliminated".

Hamas denounced it as a "dangerous escalation", while the Palestinian group's Lebanese ally Hezbollah called it a "horrific massacre".

Iran, which backs both militant groups and had accused Israel of wanting to spread war in the Middle East following high-profile killings in Tehran and Beirut, condemned what it called a "barbaric attack".

"Those who were inside the mosque were all killed," said local resident Abu Wassim. "Even the floor above, where women and children were sleeping, was completely burned."

Scientists invent new way to make Mars habitable

INDEPENDENT.CO.UK

Scientists want to sprinkle engineered dust particles across the Martian atmosphere, warming it up so that it could be made habitable.

The groundbreaking idea is one of a number of revolutionary ways that scientists have proposed to terraform Mars, so that it could be made more like Earth and perhaps even serve as a home for humans.

At the moment, the Martian surface is inhospitable: it is punishingly cold, blasted by deadly UV rays, the soil is salty, the air is thin, and there is no evidence that anything currently lives there.

The new method is more than 5,000 times more efficient than previous schemes, the scientists behind it say.

It makes use of resources that are easily available on Mars – rather than requiring us to transport materials from our planet, or digging them out of the Martian ground.

Researchers warn that the proposal would take decades to actually work. But many other proposals could be impossible because of the vast amount of work required to make them happen.

The first proposals for terraforming Mars started in the early 1970s. In the 50 years since, researchers have suggested a host of different ways of making it more like Earth, none of which have got off the ground.

Resignation statement news 'fake'

Says Joy about Hasina; 'mob rule being allowed'

STAR REPORT

Former prime minister Sheikh Hasina's son Sajeeb Wazed Joy yesterday doubled down on his earlier claim that his mother did not resign.

"The recent resignation statement attributed to my mother published in a newspaper is completely false and fabricated," he said in his verified X handle.

"I have just confirmed with her that she did not make any statement either before or since leaving Dhaka," he wrote.

Meanwhile, in an interview with AFP, he thanked New Delhi for "saving her life", accused the interim government of allowing "mob rule" and warned of chaos ahead without swift elections.

Hasina, 76, fled by a helicopter to longtime ally India in a culmination of a student-led uprising on August 5.

"Right now in Bangladesh, you have mob rule," Joy told AFP from Washington.

He pointed to the ouster of top officials, including the chief justice, central bank governor and police chief, following protesters' demands.

Gopalganj Awami League has asked leaders and activists of the party and its associate bodies not to hold any programme blocking roads and interrupting daily life.

It also asked them to hold peaceful events and not to carry any homemade weapons, said a press release yesterday.

The directives came a day after at least nine army personnel were injured and a military vehicle was torched during a clash in Gopalganj following an AL procession demanding the return of party President Sheikh Hasina to the country.

"Remember law enforcement agencies are not our enemy," said the press release, asking not to use any power against them.

Interim govt to get necessary time for polls

BNP, Jamaat, 5 other parties tell Yunus

SAJJAD HOSSAIN and RASHIDUL HASAN

Seven political parties, including the BNP and Jamaat, yesterday said Prof Muhammad Yunus-led interim government can take the time necessary for creating an atmosphere conducive to holding a free and fair election.

Along with the BNP and Jamaat, Amar Bangladesh Party, two factions of Gono Adhikar Parishad, Bangladesh Jatiya Party, and National Democratic Movement told Prof Yunus this at separate meetings in the state guest house Jamuna.

During the meetings, in which advisers Asif Nazrul, Adilur Rahman, Farida Akhter, Nahid Islam, and Asif Mahmud were present, the parties were asked if the National Day of Mourning should be observed and whether August 15 should remain a public holiday.

Sources who were present at the meetings said all the parties opined that August 15 should not be observed as a day of mourning, and the public holiday is not needed.

However, no decision was made in this regard, they said.

Sources who were present at the meetings said all the parties opined that August 15 should not be observed as a day of mourning, and the public holiday is not needed.

Emerging from the meeting, BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir, who led an eight-member delegation to the meeting, told journalists, "We have given this interim government the time required to create a proper environment for holding an election."

He said they did not discuss the election and that the BNP did not mention any specific time frame for holding the next election.

Fakhrul said his party was extending its full support to all the activities of the interim government.

Sources in the BNP said the party urged the chief adviser to have all the cases against its leaders, including those against party chairperson Khaleda Zia and acting chairman Tarique Rahman, withdrawn.

Jamaat Ameer Shafiqur Rahman, who led an 11-member delegation to the meeting, told the media that his party's discussions with the interim government focused on national issues, not party specifics.

"We are hopeful that the interim government will solve various problems within a reasonable time," he said.

Andaleeve Rahman Partho, chairman of the Bangladesh Jatiya Party (BJP), said, "The fall of the Awami League [government] occurred through a revolution, and it will take some time for the situation to stabilise.

"For the last 15 years, everything the Awami League government did was illegal. Now, it's time to repair the state. We don't want to rush to an election. Whatever good this government does, we will support."

Chairman Bobby Hajjaj of National Democratic Movement (NDM) said, "We urged the advisers to remove the representatives in local governments and appoint administrators.

Firearms looted from at least 22 DMP stations

Says commissioner

STAR REPORT

Firearms were looted from at least 22 police stations in the capital, and the number may increase after the end of the ongoing assessment, said DMP officials.

Dhaka Metropolitan Police Commissioner Mainul Hasan said those stations were completely damaged by vandals and arsonists.

"Many of the looted arms and ammunition were surrendered to the army, Rab, and Ansar officials. We're now assessing how many are still missing," he told The Daily Star last night.

A high official of the DMP, requesting anonymity, said there were instances where arms were taken away from police officials who were attacked while they were trying to return to duty or workplaces.

The DMP yesterday urged those in possession of illegal arms and ammunition to surrender to the nearest police station, adding that possession of those is a punishable offence.

Another 30 police stations had their gates either burned down or damaged in similar attacks.

Food inflation tops 14pc for first time in 13yrs

REJAUL KARIM BYRON and MD ASADUZ ZAMAN

Bangladesh's worsening economic crisis has spun off a price shock with food inflation crossing 14 percent in July for the first time in 13 years.

Part of the reason was a nationwide supply chain disruption caused by weeks of deadly protests that led to the fall of the Sheikh Hasina-led government.

The consumer price index that includes food and non-food inflation rose 1.94 basis points to 11.66 percent in July from the previous month, according to data released by the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics yesterday.

Moderate inflation is a fact of life, but higher inflation hurts fixed-income people badly. Consumers lose purchasing power faster at a higher rate of inflation. People are forced to chip away at precious savings.

"July was a month of turbulence and economic disruption. Supply chains broke down because of shutdowns, curfew, and internet blockage. These adversely affected the supply of goods in various markets," said Zahid Hussain, a former lead economist of the World Bank's Dhaka office.

The statistical agency published inflation data after Bangladesh formed an interim government following the end of Hasina's 15-year regime. Hasina fled the country in the

Bangladesh experiencing a student-led revolution

Says Prof Yunus

AFP

Bangladesh is experiencing a student-led revolution after the ouster of premier Sheikh Hasina, said interim government chief Muhammad Yunus.

"This is a revolution, a student-led revolution," the Nobel laureate told a news briefing on Sunday.

"There's no doubt about [that] because the business of the whole government collapsed."

Yunus, 84, arrived back in Bangladesh from Europe on August 8 after he was called by the student leaders of the protests that toppled Hasina and asked to steer democratic reforms.

"I said, 'I respect you, I admire you. What you have done is absolutely unparallelled'," he said.

Several banks are clinically dead: CPD

Several banks in Bangladesh are clinically dead but are being kept alive through bailouts, said Fahmida Khatun, executive director of the Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD).

Banks on the verge of collapse should be allowed to shut down, she said while presenting a paper at a media briefing yesterday.

Some third and fourth-generation banks that were awarded licences during Awami League-led government's 15 years in power are now ailing, Fahmida said.

"Additionally, several previously good banks have experienced an unfortunate decline in their performance after hostile takeovers by crony capitalists," she added.

'Let's begin anew from the ruins'

CJ urges colleagues to work without fear

Syed Refaat Ahmed

Newly appointed Chief Justice Syed Refaat Ahmed yesterday called for a fresh start from the ruins.

At a reception in the Supreme Court, he described the historic victory of the student movement as a golden opportunity for the judiciary to stand by the oppressed.

He urged his colleagues to work without fear and warned them against deviation, injustice or breach of etiquette.

"You are all aware of the reasons behind the student movement against discriminations that resulted in the mass uprising. At this moment, we are standing on a pile of rubble. Our sense and values of justice has been destroyed and distorted in the judicial process over the years.

Chief adviser asks top bureaucrats

Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus yesterday directed top bureaucrats to find out ways to utilise the power of the young people at different tiers of the government.

During a meeting with the senior secretaries and secretaries of 25 ministries and divisions, he also asked them to ensure that no official travels abroad "without special urgent needs", said meeting sources.

"All should work realising the young people's expectations regarding the changes they brought," a secretary quoted Yunus as saying.

The chief adviser holds the portfolios of the 25 ministries and divisions.

The meeting which lasted for one and a half hours began at 11:00am at the state guesthouse Jamuna.

A secretary who was at the meeting said the chief adviser ordered all government offices to start working in full swing.

PBI to probe the killing of Abu Sayed

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Dinajpur

The murder case of Abu Sayed, a student of Begum Rokeya University, who was killed in police firing during the anti-discrimination student movement in Rangpur, has been transferred to the Police Bureau of Investigation (PBI).

The case has been moved from Rangpur city's Tajhat Police Station to the PBI following an order from the Police Headquarters yesterday, confirmed ABM Zakir Hossain, superintendent of police at Rangpur PBI.

In the afternoon of July 16, Sayed, 23, was shot and killed during the quota reform protest near his university.

Video footage shows police shooting Sayed, who posed no physical threat to the law enforcers. He died soon afterwards.

But contradicting what is evident, the First Information Report (FIR) filed by police said Sayed was not a victim of police firing.

Troops to return to barracks once police resume normal duty

Says army chief

STAR REPORT

Soldiers will return to barracks once the police resume full-scale operation across the country, Army Chief General Waker-Uz-Zaman said yesterday.

He said this during a press briefing after inspecting the activities of the army's temporary camp at Sheikh Abu Naser Stadium in Khulna city around 4:00pm.

Prior to this, he exchanged views with the top government officials of the division and district.

The army chief said that things have improved in terms of law and order in the country and that things will soon return to normal.

"If the situation continues to improve, all regular forces will carry out their counter-terrorism operations," he said, reports UNB.

Regarding attacks on minorities, the army chief said around 30 instances of attacks on minority communities have been committed in 20 districts to date.

The majority of these crimes, he continued, were politically motivated and involved the looting and arson of temples.

In this context, he urged the political parties to put the interests of the people before violence.

Food inflation tops 14pc for first time face of mass protests led by students.

Elevated consumer prices have a long life in Bangladesh. Since March 2023, the overall inflation has stayed over 9 percent.

While economists blamed the price surge in July on the supply chain breakdown, they also raised questions over the statistical agency's past shoddy data that kept inflation relatively subdued. The actual data could be much higher. The economists have now urged the government to reveal the real inflation data as Hasina's rule ended.

The price spike came largely from food inflation in both urban and rural markets. Non-food inflation also increased, albeit at a much slower pace than food inflation.

Hussain said the increased uncertainty due to political turmoil may have created a "precautionary demand" for essential items.

"It is natural for people to try to stock up when they are not sure about the functioning of markets and the availability of goods even if markets are open. This may have created additional pressure on prices."

The "fearless disclosure of the truth" may be another reason for higher inflation, he said. "The BBS may have felt no inhibition in releasing the numbers without massaging under the changed political circumstances."

Prof Selim Raihan, executive director of the South Asian Network on Economic Modeling, concurred with Hussain and accused Hasina's government of manipulating inflation data.

"The statistical agency didn't publish the real data and showed the 'reduced value' to give political advantages to the government," Raihan said. "We raised the issue with the government as well."

He also pointed to the supply chain disruption since mid-July when student protests turned deadly. As a result, the low- and fixed-income people were the first to take a hit from a sudden price spike.

"'Because you ordered me to do this, I take your order'," Yunus said he told them.

Several top allies of Hasina, whose iron-fisted tenure ended with her abrupt resignation and flight to neighbouring India a week ago, subsequently stepped down.

Among them were the former chief justice of the Supreme Court and the central bank governor.

They had been issued ultimatums to quit their posts by students but Yunus said their resignations had been conducted legally.

"They want to have a new court," he said of the students. "So they went there and asked the chief justice to resign and put their pressure on him."

"I'm sure they will find the legal way to justify all of this, because legally... all the steps were followed," he said.

Hasina, 76, fled by helicopter as protesters flooded Dhaka's streets in a dramatic end to her long rule.

Her government was accused of widespread human rights abuses, including the extrajudicial killing of thousands of her political opponents.

"Finally, at this moment, the monster is gone," Yunus said.

However, despite the groundswell of public goodwill towards him, Yunus warned that his interim government faced difficult decisions ahead.

"The moment you start making decisions, some people will like your decisions, and some people will not like your decisions," he said. "Obviously, that's the way it works."

Yunus made the comments during an off-the-record media briefing on Sunday night at a state building being used as a temporary seat of government.

His office agreed to their publication on Monday evening.

Yunus won the Nobel Peace Prize in 2006 for his pioneering work in microfinance, credited with helping millions of Bangladeshis out of grinding poverty.

He took office as chief adviser to a caretaker administration made up of all civilians except a retired brigadier-general.

He said last week that he wanted to hold elections "within a few months".

According to sources, at least 15,000 bullets were plundered from a police station in Uttara alone.

Another DMP official said a similar incident occurred at Badda Police Station.

According to various police sources, many police stations outside the capital suffered the same fate.

MORE COPS JOIN WORK

The Police Headquarters yesterday said that 628 of the 639 police stations across the country were operational.

In a press release, it also said that 108 of 110 police stations in metropolitan areas resumed work, while 520 of 529 police stations in districts began functioning again.

However, the presence of traffic police was still thin, while many cops remained absent from their stations and other units despite their strike being called off.

At some 11 stations, necessary logistics, furniture, and equipment were destroyed, and those couldn't start operations, the PHQ said, adding that it would take two to three days for those to become functional.

Police personnel refrained from discharging their duties following attacks on them after the violence centring the anti-discrimination student protests, which led to Sheikh Hasina's ouster on August 5.

Many cops were killed during the attacks, while video evidence shows them shooting unarmed people at point-blank range.

Mohammad Mohsin, officer-in-charge of the capital's Tejgaon Police Station, said that while most of their officers joined the station, only those on duty wore their uniforms.

Till 5:30pm yesterday, 21 general diaries filed by service seekers were registered with the police station, but no case was filed.

He also said they started patrolling the main roads on a limited scale yesterday for the first time since August 5.

Visiting Tejgaon Industrial Area Police Station, this correspondent found many officers in plainclothes.

The station's OC ABM Moshiur Rahman said all their officials joined on Sunday but many are too traumatised and afraid to wear the uniform.

Meanwhile, a limited number of traffic police, along with student volunteers, Ansar members, and firefighters, were seen controlling traffic in the capital and elsewhere.

In Narayanganj, five out of the seven police stations began operations, with 70 percent of their officers joining the workplace.

Amir Khasru, an additional superintendent of police in Narayanganj, said traffic police began duties on a limited scale after 2:00pm.

In Sylhet, cops returned to duty as law and order was restored. Some traffic police personnel returned to the streets and were being assisted by scouts and Bangladesh National Cadet Corps members.

In Dinajpur, only six out of 20 traffic police were on duty on different roads yesterday, while all the stations in the district began operations.

In Munshiganj, five out of seven police stations resumed operations.

A traffic sergeant said people appreciated seeing them back on the roads.

Our correspondents in Bogura, Gazipur, Patuakhali, Kushtia, Mymensingh, Dinajpur, Brahmanbaria, Pirojpur, and Jhalakathi also reported that police stations in those districts have resumed operations, while traffic policemen were also seen discharging duties along with the student volunteers.

Home Affairs Adviser Brig Gen (retired) Sakhawat Hossain yesterday told reporters that people can inform him in case the police did not record any complaints or GD, or if they found any irregularities.

regular contact with the international organisations and ensure Bangladesh's participation in the activities of those ogranisations.

Briefing reporters at the Secretariat after the meeting, Mohammed Mezbah Uddin Chowdhury, senior secretary at the public administration ministry, said the chief adviser instructed that prompt decisions should me made regarding the purchase of fertiliser, electricity, fuel and other related items so that the food supply chain remains smooth and uninterrupted.

Prof Yunus also instructed all officials to act responsibly while making decisions, said Mezbah.

He said the chief adviser directed the secretaries to prepare within seven days a priority list on the work to be done to bring normalcy to the country fast.

The secretaries were also instructed not to bring up all matters, except for those very important, before the chief adviser for the time being, Mezbah said.

The senior secretary said they put forward the issue of many jobseekers not being appointed, even after passing the BCS exams (from 28th to 42nd) and being recommended by the Public Service Commission for government jobs.

"We hope that we will be able to make a decision on their appointments within a day or two," he said.

According to public administration ministry sources, there are around 400 such candidates.

Mezbah said they also informed the chief adviser that many administration cadre officials were "deprived" of promotions over the last few years.

Former cabinet secretary Ali Imam Majumdar, who was appointed as a special assistant to the chief adviser yesterday, will work on the issue, he said.

According to sources, the Superior Selection Board will hold a meeting soon to consider the promotions of those officials.

However, officials who are facing departmental cases and those punished on different charges, including corruption, will not be considered for promotion.

The cases of officials who were "deprived" of promotions due to their "political links" will be given special consideration, said a top official.

Around 275 senior assistant secretaries, deputy secretaries, and joint secretaries are demanding promotions and their list was presented before the chief adviser, said public administration ministry officials.

The public administration ministry also drew the attention of the chief adviser to the demand of a group of jobseekers for cancellation of the 46th BCS examination and three other recruitment exams for non-cadre jobs.

"The chief adviser said he will make a decision in this regard after discussing the matter with the Public Service Commission," said the top official.

Interim govt's major task is to sue Hasina organised by the Forum for Bangladesh Studies.

He said if the present government cannot file the case due to an impaired judicial system, it can go to the United Nations or International Criminal Court (ICC).

"The case can be referred to the ICC, if a country is unwilling or unable to conduct proper proceedings."

Different bodies, including civil society, can go to the ICC directly to lodge the case over crimes against humanity, said Prof Riaz.

He demanded that three former ministers -- Obaidul Quader, Asaduzzaman Khan, and Anisul Huq -- be held accountable for "grossly violating human rights by issuing shoot-on-sight orders against unarmed people".

Prof Riaz also sought the dissolution of the current National Human Rights Commission and the formation of a new one, comprising those who have fought for human rights over the last 15 years.

"This new commission should record the testimonies of those who have been rescued from 'Aynaghor' and victims of enforced disappearances over the last 15 years ... It is essential to keep documents of these incidents and identify those responsible."

He asserted that the previous government deliberately and systematically broke down the administrative structure and called for the formation of an independent commission to hold those responsible accountable.

Another main task of the interim government, he said, is to hold a free and fair election as soon as possible to hand over power to public representatives.

"The current government needs to clarify its goals and vision to the public," he said, calling upon political parties to understand the people's aspirations and act accordingly.

Prof Riaz urged the media to publish reports that reflect the true aspirations of the masses and asked the students and the ordinary people to be careful about any actions that go against the aspirations.

Transparency International Bangladesh Executive Director Iftekharuzzaman demanded an investigation under the United Nations into the killings during the recent violence.

"The primary goal of the government is to fulfill the mandate of the people by establishing people's power, transparency, and accountability, and the right to vote," he said, calling upon all to refrain from taking revenge.

Apart from holding elections, the government must ensure freedom of opinion and expression, the freedom to participate in any parties, press freedom, the right to access information, and the right to privacy, he added.

He demanded repeal of all draconian laws and the overhaul of institutions that have been politicised.

Iftekharuzzaman emphasised that people do not want "Aynaghor" or "Hawa Bhaban".

"Political parties and their affiliated bodies must prepare a code of conduct, the government employees' code of conduct has to be updated, the provision for allowing black money to be legalised must go, and the corrupt must be held accountable," he said.

He spoke for keeping educational and service-providing institutions free from political influence.

Mirza M Hasan, a senior research fellow at the BRAC Institute of Governance and Development at BRAC University, said they want a government where checks and balances are maintained between the state and society.

He also asked for the reintroduction of the rules and regulations enacted during 2007-08, which were repealed by the former government.

He spoke for a broader approach to democracy, including a bicameral parliament, and a provision in the constitution for establishing a minimum wage for workers.

Badiul Alam Majumder, secretary of Shushashoner Jonno Nagorik (Shujan), called for reforms in government institutions and law enforcement agencies.

He urged political parties to pursue a political settlement involving members of civil society.

Journalist Monir Haider conducted the webinar where Faiz Ahmed Taiyeb, a sustainable development and public policy critic, presented the keynote paper.

and superintendents of police, and reforms to the Election Commission.

"We have received assurance from the chief adviser that neither the Awami League nor its people will be given power."

The convener of a faction of Gono Odhikar Parishad, Reza Kibria, said, "The interim government will work for as long as it takes to stabilise the situation in the country and create an environment conducive to polls."

Nurul Haque Nur, who led another faction of the Gono Odhikar Parishad, said they placed a 14-point demand before the chief adviser. "We have urged the swift implementation of reforms and preparation of a roadmap for national elections."

ON AUGUST 15

AB Party Convener AFM Solaiman Chowdhury, who led a three-member team at the meeting, said observing National Day of Mourning goes against the spirit of the proclamation of independence and the July uprising.

"Actually, we had only one thing on the agenda at today's meeting -- whether August 15 should be observed as national mourning day," party's Joint Member-secretary Asaduzzaman Fuaad told The Daily Star.

"This administration is an extraordinary government that took over following the mass uprising and ouster of a dictatorial regime. Therefore, the mood and feelings of the student and young protesters on the streets should be respected," Fuaad said he had told the chief adviser.

The party argued that no public holiday is observed for Abraham Lincoln or the founding fathers of the US or Winston Churchill in Britain.

Reza Kibria said, "There is no reason to have a holiday on August 15. We know that the Awami League tried to make August a month of mourning for us, but we liberated the country and regained independence on August 5. Therefore, it is necessary to cancel the public holiday.

"Today's discussion mainly focused on observing August 15. There is no justification for this day. Dr Yunus will make the final decision on whether this day will be observed."

Nur said, "We have requested a review of various important decisions made by the government...

"All political parties that participated in today's meetings, including ours, have said that August is a month of national revolution. We want to observe this month as a month of revolution. It is not a month of mourning. It is a month of happiness and peace."

The Awami League has been observing the day of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman's assassination as National Day of Mourning. In 2001, the BNP-led four-party coalition government cancelled the holiday.

However, the High Court later ruled that the cancellation of the holiday was invalid.

This was the first day of meetings between the chief adviser and different political parties since Yunus-led interim government took office on August 8 following the fall of Sheikh Hasina-led Awami League government on August 5.

Ganatantra Mancha and Islami Andolan also had meetings with the chief adviser yesterday, but this paper could not reach them for comments.

Traffic cops return to Dhaka streets after six days

Work in tandem with students

STAR REPORT

Traffic police have resumed their duties on some roads in Dhaka yesterday morning after about a week of absence following the Sheikh Hasina government's ouster.

They have returned to the streets after police called off their strike following a meeting at the home ministry on Sunday.

Traffic police were seen on busy intersections including Karwan Bazar, Khamarbari, Farmgate, in various spots on Mirpur Road and Dhanmondi-3. They were working in tandem with students, who have been performing the duties of traffic police since Hasina resigned as prime minister amid a mass uprising on August 5.

Employees of police administration announced a work abstention from August 6 to press for a number of demands following clashes between protesters and police during the anti-quota movement.

Police presence on streets had been thinning since before that date. Many also reported to their stations yesterday.

Former cabinet secretary Ali Imam Majumder has been appointed as the special assistant to Chief Adviser of the interim government Prof Muhammad Yunus.

A circular of his appointment was issued yesterday evening.

He will enjoy the status of an adviser.

Ali Imam Majumder confirmed the matter to The Daily Star last night.

He is the first such appointment since Yunus-led interim government took charge on August 8, four days after the resignation and departure of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina amid a mass upsurge led by students.

ATTACK ON HINDUS

Protests continue across country

STAR REPORT

People from minority communities across the country yesterday continued their protests for the fourth consecutive day against violence and attacks on them.

In Dhaka, several hundred people gathered at the Shahbagh intersection at around 4:30pm and staged a demonstration for around two hours.

They shouted slogans demanding an end to violence against them and justice for the attacks on their houses and religious institutions.

Vehicular movement through the intersection was halted during the protest.

In Noakhali, Hindus staged a demonstration for two hours from 3:00pm at the Town Hall intersection in the district headquarters.

In Dinajpur, a group of people under the banner "Sachetan Nagorik Samaj" formed a human chain and organised a protest at Biral upazila.

Minority communities have been staging demonstrations in different districts, including the capital, since Friday, protesting the ongoing violence against them.

'Police to probe senior officials'

Home adviser expresses concerns over use of 7.62mm rifles by civilians

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The authorities will take measures against senior police officials, who used excessive force to subdue protesters during July and August. Sources in the police and home ministry confirmed the development to this newspaper.

There were allegations that police used lethal weapons against students and general people as per directives of a section of senior cops.

In reply to a reporter's query about junior cops' demanding action against the seniors, Home Affairs Adviser Brig Gen (retd) Sakhawat Hossain yesterday said it is not possible to take action against anyone just after saying that the person is guilty. "There is a need for an inquiry."

Asked about the location of the senior cops, he said, "It will come out... definitely come out."

"Everyone is bad, it is not right... they were forced to do it. Many of them are now realising [their mistakes]," he said at the Combined Military Hospital in Dhaka after visiting Ansar members who suffered injuries during the mass upsurge that toppled Sheikh Hasina.

CIVILIANS CARRYING POLICE RIFLES

Meanwhile, Sakhawat said a major investigation is necessary to identify the youth in civilian clothing, who were seen carrying 7.62mm rifles, a type of firearm that only the police and Rab are authorised to use.

"I find it very strange. From what I've heard, it seems that the Ansar members suffered less from police fire than from civilians wielding 7.62mm rifles," he said.

Doctors showed him the ammunition that injured the Ansar members, which included both shotgun pellets and bullets from the same types of rifle, he added.

"This is very concerning. Firearms

Religious Affairs Adviser to the interim government AFM Khalid Hossain yesterday condemned recent attacks on religious institutions belonging to minorities.

He promised that justice would be delivered.

During a press briefing at the secretariat, Khalid confirmed that complaints had been received about attacks on minority homes and religious sites. He assured ongoing support for these communities.

Hossain announced that deputy commissioners are compiling a list of damages. The finance ministry will finalise details of assistance for victims by today. The chief adviser will also meet leaders of religious minorities this afternoon.

The Ministry of Religious Affairs also launched a hotline for reporting attacks to ensure the safety of religious institutions, reports UNB.

The new hotline number is 01766-843809.

'Reorganise, don't stir up any trouble'

Home adviser tells AL

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Home Affairs Adviser Brig Gen (retd) Sakhawat Hussain yesterday advised the Awami League leaders and activists not to do anything that may put their lives in danger and to reorganise the party with fresh faces.

He was talking to reporters after visiting injured Ansar members at the Combined Military Hospital.

"No one has banned your [AL] party. Banning any party is a bad culture," he added.

Mentioning the contribution of AL, the home adviser said, "We cannot deny it. Reorganise the party, participate when the election comes."

"People of the country have not forgotten [AL misrule] so easily. Give them time, they may forget. Those who you considered your leaders are now on the run," he said.

Sakhawat urged all political parties to take measures to stop conflicts, including attacks on minorities. He also said the ministry would help all political parties if they initiate reforms and bring fresh faces.

The home adviser said former prime minister Sheikh Hasina was not forced to leave the country, she left willingly.

Addressing Hasina, he said, "This is your country; why don't you come back. Your citizenship was not revoked. You have served

AL supporters, activists plan to observe the Mourning Day

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Grassroots activists and supporters of the Awami League are planning to pay tribute to Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman on National Mourning Day this Thursday across the country.

Mostly former Chhatra League leaders and a section of party grassroots have already taken the initiative to pay tribute to Bangabandhu at the Bangabandhu Memorial Museum on Dhanmondi 32, which was attacked and set on fire immediately after the fall of the AL government on August 5, according to sources.

Since Sheikh Hasina left for India, the AL has been in disarray.

Hasina's son Sajeeb Wazed Joy has already urged countrymen to pay their tributes peacefully to Bangabandhu on August 15.

AL activists and supporters in the capital have been instructed to gather at Dhanmondi 32, while others are asked to observe the day in their own areas.

Organisers are using social media to circulate leaflets in this regard.

Demand student leaders, call for ban on student politics

DU CORRESPONDENT

Leaders of the students against discrimination platform yesterday demanded that the government file a case against former prime minister Sheikh Hasina and her associates in the International Crimes Tribunal for "killing students and people".

They came up with the demand at a protest rally organised at the base of Raju Memorial Sculpture on the Dhaka University campus.

They also demanded a ban on organisation-based student politics on all campuses, citing various terrorist activities of Chhatra League in the educational institutions.

Criticising the advisers of the interim government, coordinator Hasnat Abdullah said, "We had seen the advisers talking about rehabilitating the murderers [Sheikh Hasina and other AL leaders]. We want to remind these advisers that you have come to power through the student-people uprising."

"We will not hesitate to oust you just the way we made you advisers," he warned.

Hasnat also said those who want to rehabilitate AL in this country will be resisted by the students and people.

Addressing the media, he said, "We have a cordial relationship with the media. The role of media in making our movement global is undeniable. But we can see that some media are trying to rehabilitate those fallen. We urge the media to realise the people's pulse."

Speaking at the event, Akhter Hossen, former social welfare secretary of Dhaka University Central Students' Union and convener of Gonotantrik Chhatra Shakti, said, "Sheikh Hasina has fled the country but is still hatching various conspiracies while sitting abroad."

He also asked the students to get prepared to protect the minorities.

They placed an eight-point demand, including the formation of special tribunals to expedite the trials of those who were involved in the attacks on minorities and the formation of a minority protection commission.

Other demands include the formation of a separate ministry for minorities and the enactment and implementation of strict laws to prevent all forms of attacks on minorities.

According to statistics from Bangladesh Hindu Buddhist Christian Oikya Parishad and Bangladesh Puja Udjapan Parishad, there have been at least 205 incidents of attacks on members of minority communities in 52 districts since the fall of the Sheikh Hasina-led government on August 5.

as the prime minister for 21 years. You left the country willingly, no one asked you to do so... we all respect you."

He, however, warned that there would be no gain in stirring up trouble and rather it would only agitate people further.

Sakhawat said after the fall of Jatiyo Party leader HM Ershad, he was given the option to either leave the country or go to jail. Ershad chose to go to jail and thus saved his party.

Coming back to AL, he said, "It is a big party. I have a lot of respect for the party, which used to belong to the middle class secular people."

"The leader of such a great party [Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman] led this country to independence. There is no doubt about it. No one should have doubts... This party had collapsed in such a way that the leaders and workers had to go into hiding."

Mentioning that around 400 to 500 people from all sides including police and Ansar were killed, he said, "We don't want anymore deaths."

Pointing at AL, he further said, "Don't do this. I am requesting you not to be manipulated by someone. Don't ruin this party for personal gain. This was Bangabandhu's dream, you have no right to destroy it. It is the property of Bangladesh."

"If you dream that you will come back with a counter revolution, that would require the blood of thousands of people. If you want to take that responsibility, then I have nothing to do."

The adviser said the students, not any political parties, were behind the revolution which toppled Hasina's regime.

"They have given their lives, which you could never have done -- standing in front of a police officer's gun. They have no regrets. They [the youth] will confront you [the counter-revolutionaries]. Please keep the country independent."

Sangsad, filed a defamation case of Tk 20 crore in the court as a complainant. Due to the long absence of the complainant, the judge dismissed the case under Section 247," said Qayyum.

According to the case, in a discussion meeting organised by the UK BNP on December 15, 2014, Tarique Rahman said Sheikh Mujibur Rahman returned to Bangladesh on January 10, 1972, with a Pakistani passport.

"Tarique also called him a 'Razakar' and 'Pakbandhu'. With that, Tarique had undermined the reputation of the country and the freedom fighters, along with Bangabandhu himself," said the case statement.

The court then issued an arrest warrant against Tarique.

In response to the acquittal of Tarique, Advocate Khandkar Nasir Uddin, upazila BNP organising secretary, said the case was politically motivated to harass the defendant.

Although the complainant in the case has been absent from the court for eight years, the former Awami League government used the court to uphold the arrest warrant, he added.

Prof Mihir cited personal reasons behind this step, while Prof Sobahan mentioned illness, alongside personal reasons. The VC in his letter appointed Prof Mohammad Mashud of the mechanical engineering department to be the acting VC.

Yesterday, the DUET VC and pro-VC Abdur Rashid also resigned from their posts.

Additionally, the university's registrar Himangsu Bhowmik, and its department directors Md Nazrul Islam (student welfare department) and Md Mostafizur Rahman (physical education department), have resigned.

Himanshu confirmed the news around 8:00pm.

With the three, at least 16 VCs have so far resigned from their positions.

are issued to the police, but a youth in plainclothe opened fire in the Ansar's area. This is very serious -- does that mean we had armed civilians?" he questioned.

When asked about armed Awami League members carrying firearms and opening fire on protesters, Sakhawat responded, "I don't know about any league. Prohibited firearms were not supposed to be outside. Only the police and Rab were authorised to use these rifles. How did these firearms end up in civilian hands?"

"I saw another video of a civilian youth carrying a 7.62mm rifle and walking away. That means the rifle was not returned," he said.

"These rifles are missing," he said, urging everyone to hand over unauthorised firearms to the nearest police station by August 19.

THE RULES OF ENGAGEMENT

Earlier, Inspector General of Police Mainul Islam said action would be taken against police officials who did not follow the accepted principles of applying force and violated human rights, as per police regulations.

The junior cops also demanded a trial against superiors, and a lawful inquiry about the use of firearms and bullets during the protests.

"We are taking action as per legal rules," the IGP told The Daily Star on Sunday night.

According to police protocol, officers are first supposed to ask a large gathering to disperse by blowing whistles.

If this does not work, they are to attempt to push the crowd away.

If that also fails, police can use batons. The next step is to use tear gas, and if that proves ineffective, they are instructed to fire blanks.

If the police believe their lives are in danger, they are permitted to shoot; however, there is no provision for firing a gun at an unarmed person, according to a police official citing the protocol.

Despite this, the police's excessive use of force against students and ordinary citizens has resulted in over 400 deaths, including students.

At least 42 police officers have also lost their lives, according to Police Headquarters.

will be recovered," said another CCC official wishing anonymity.

Even the CCC mayor is not going to the office, said the officials, adding that it has further deepened the crisis.

"Without the mayor's consent, all vital decision regarding the city corporation's activities, including the tender process of important projects, remain pending," said an official of CCC's engineering department.

Contacted, Sheikh Mohammad Tauhidul Islam, CCC's chief executive officer, said the councillors went into hiding for security reasons while the mayor has been absent from the office for same issue.

"I have instructed all the secretaries in the councillors' offices to join office immediately," he also said.

"We have already resumed cleaning activities in the city under the supervision of the conservancy department. Hopefully, normalcy will return to other departments from next week," Tauhidul added

Following the CCC CEO's instruction, some secretaries joined a few offices yesterday but most of the councillors' offices remained closed, said sources.

The issuance of documents and other services continued to remain suspended.

Service seekers in limbo

Most councillor offices remain closed in port city

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

Suman Haldar, a resident of Jamal Khan area of port city, went to the office of ward 21 councillor of Chattogram City Corporation on Sunday to collect his child's birth certificate, but had to return empty handed as the office was closed.

"This is the third time in last one week that I had to return empty handed from this office as it has remained closed," said Suman.

Rashedul Islam, who went to the ward 15 office for a certificate to take his brother abroad for treatment, faced a similar situation.

All 41 ward councillors' offices across the CCC areas have remained closed since August 5, causing much sufferings to service seekers.

According to CCC sources, all necessary paperworks including birth certificate, nationality certificate, character certificate, inheritance certificate, succession certificate are issued from the CCC councillors' offices as those require the signature of councillors of respective wards.

At present, none of these documents can be issued with the offices remaining closed.

Visiting different areas in the port city, this correspondent found the councillors' offices for wards 15 (Bagmoniram), 16 (Chawkbazar), 17 (West Bakalia), 20 (Dewan Bazar), 21 (Jamal Khan), 25 (Rampur), 32 (Anderkilla) and 33 (Firingi Bazar) closed on Sunday.

According to locals, many of the offices went through looting, vandalism and arson since August 5, and the councillors and other officials have not been working over security concerns.

None could confirm when the offices will reopen and services will resume.

Preferring anonymity, an official of CCC said after the government resigned on August 5, there was a spree of looting and vandalism at almost all the 41 ward councillors' offices, and necessary documents related to the CCC services were destroyed.

Since then, these offices have remained closed, while the councillors have been hiding due to insecurity and political reasons, and officials and staffers have stopped going to the offices.

"Many necessary documents, which people had submitted to these offices, were burnt in the arson attacks. We are not sure how the loss

CCC ward offices face Tk 4.31cr loss

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

The damage to valuables in the Chattogram City Corporation ward offices during the August 5 violence has been estimated at over Tk 4.31 crore, according to CCC sources.

Ward 41 (South Patenga) suffered the most, with losses estimated at Tk 1.55 crore. The second most affected was ward-9 (North Pahartoli), with damages amounting to Tk 1.5 crore.

Miscreants reportedly targeted nearly every CCC ward office following the fall of the Awami League government on August 5. Even offices of councillors for reserved seats were not spared.

Due to security concerns, CCC ward councillors and the mayor have been absent from their offices since the attacks. The mayor's residence in Bahaddarhat was also attacked on August 4 and 5, along with the homes of several ward councillors.

CCC Chief Executive Officer Sheikh Mohammad Tauhidul Islam said along with vandalism, many important documents and valuables were damaged.

The estimates were based on ground assessments, he added.

KULAURA UPAZILA IN MOULVIBAZAR

Services at a standstill as most UP chairmen flee

MINTU DESHWARA

Most union parishad chairmen in Moulvibazar's Kulaura upazila, who are also Awami League leaders, have gone into hiding following the fall of Sheikh Hasina due to a mass upsurge.

As such, essential public services at the UP offices have been at a standstill.

Vandalism at the UP offices, alongside existing security concerns, further exacerbated the situation as no one could ascertain when the services will resume.

This in turn resulted in a backlog of requests for certificates, as those cannot be issued without signatures from the respective UP chairman, thereby preventing residents from completing important official processes.

The chairmen who have gone into hiding include Wadud Box (Hajipur union), Akbar Ali Sohag (Routgaon union), Mosaddik Ahmad Noman (Kulaura Sadar union), Md Abdul Malik (Tilagaon union), Abdur Rob Mahabub (Jaychandi union), Zafar Ahmed Gilman (Kadipur union), Muhibul Islam Azad (Karmadha Union), Jimiur Rahman Chowdhury (Prithimpasha union), and Khalilur Rahman (Sharifpur union), among others.

Contacted, Wadud, Abdul, Mosaddiq and Khalilur cited fear of potential attacks for their absence.

Expressing frustration, locals who sought documents including certificates for citizenship, inheritance or birth, said the incumbent chairmen should resign or delegate their duties to panel chairmen.

Azizur Rahman Monir, chairman of Bhukshimail union and also vice-president of upazila unit BNP, is among a few who have reportedly continued attending to their duties.

Azizur said, "I have informed the UNO about the safety concerns of the chairmen. I have also told my party leaders and activists that they should cooperate with the UP chairmen to serve the needs of the locals."

Mohi Uddin, UNO of Kulaura upazila, said cooperation among all parties is needed to restore normalcy and meet the people's needs.

I am not afraid to voice out: SADIA AYMAN

In the vibrant landscape of Bangladesh's entertainment industry, a new voice of courage and conviction has emerged. Sadia Ayman, a talented young actress, has not only captivated audiences with her performances but has also become an inspiration for many with her outspoken nature and commitment to truth.

Sadia Ayman first gained recognition through her roles in various television dramas. Her performance in the film Kajol Rekha earned her critical acclaim. However, it's not just her acting prowess that has caught the public's attention. Recently, the rising star has come into the spotlight for her bold stance on social issues, particularly during the recent anti-discrimination student movement in the country.

"From childhood, I cannot tolerate injustice," Sadia states, explaining her propensity to speak out. "I've always been straightforward. Everyone close to me knows this. I am not afraid to speak the truth."

This courage was evident when Sadia posted about the death of Abu Sayed, despite warnings from those close to her. "Many people close to me said not to post such things, that it could cause problems later. But there's nothing to fear in telling the truth. So, I posted courageously, expressing my feelings," she explains.

> Many people close to me said not to post such things, that it could cause problems later. But there's nothing to fear in telling the truth. So, I posted courageously, expressing my feelings.

Sadia's outspokenness extended to the student movement, where she actively supported the protesters through social media. When asked about her expectations from the new interim government, she doesn't mince words: "I have many expectations. Let the country be free from corruption. Let society be free from corruption. Those who have been punished in false cases, those who have disappeared– let there be justice for them."

Her advocacy hasn't been without risks. During the height of the protests, Sadia's parents were concerned for her safety. "My parents were afraid. They told me to delete the statuses I had posted. I explained to them that I hadn't written anything wrong. I wrote the truth," she recounts.

When some senior artistes from the industry visited the state television station BTV after it was vandalised, Sadia didn't hesitate to criticise their actions (crying for inanimate objects) on social media. "I always respect and honour them as seniors," she clarifies, "but I felt compelled to speak out."

The actress is also committed to her profession as she attended her last shooting on July 18, amidst the protests. "We were all scared and anxious throughout the shooting day," she remembers. "When returning home late at night, people appeared in front of my car and checked it. However, they were not students."

Currently, Sadia is spending time at home, reading books and watching television with her family. "I'm reading Humayun Ahmed's books. I have a collection of his works at home. I have also collected Sarat Chandra Chattopadhyay's books yesterday. I'll read those too," she shares.

Liaquat Ali Lucky resigns from Shilpakala Academy

Following the recent downfall of the former government following the anti-discrimination student movement, many heads of different public organisations, including universities, Bangladesh Bank, and the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, have resigned from their longstanding posts.

In lieu of that, Liaquat Ali Lucky, who served as the director general of Bangladesh Shilpakala Academy (BSA) for over a decade, stepped down from his position yesterday (August 12).

On Monday, Lucky submitted his resignation to the Ministry of Cultural Affairs, as confirmed by Salahuddin Ahmed, secretary, BSA. The resignation was submitted via WhatsApp, the secretary informed The Daily Star.

Liaquat Ali Lucky was first appointed as director general of BSA on April 7, 2011.

His tenure was extended for the seventh time on March 29, 2023. No one else has held this position for such an extended period in the institution's history.

I pray for the safety of Hindus in Bangladesh: Hina Khan

Indian actress Hina Khan has spoken out about the violence against Bangladeshi Hindus following the fall of Sheikh Hasina's regime.

Amid the unrest, Hina Khan tweeted about the violence targeting "Hindus and other minorities in Bangladesh."

The actor, currently receiving treatment for breast cancer, expressed, "Every innocent death is the death of humanity, and it is beyond any caste or religion. No community should go through such horrific acts, what's wrong is wrong. Preserving the minorities of any country is the symbol of their collective community nature."

"My heart goes out to every individual who's suffering all around the world. Because, for me, humanity comes first. I pray that the Hindus and other minorities of Bangladesh remain safe in their own country," she added.

'Let's begin anew from the ruins' deprivation instead of rights, persecution instead of justice, and torture instead of protection have become normal affairs. But we did not want such a society and state. Standing on the ruins, we have to start a new journey," he said.

"We need to reestablish the destroyed, distorted and polluted values. This challenge is very big. From today, everyone will find the judiciary on your side in every good, auspicious and benevolent work," the chief justice added.

A minute's silence in memory of those killed in recent violence was observed at the beginning of the reception, organised by Attorney General Md Asaduzzaman and Supreme Court Bar Association President AM Mahbub Uddin Khokon at the Appellate Division's Courtroom-1.

Appellate Division's Justice Md Ashfaqul Islam, judges of the High Court Division and SC lawyers were present on the occasion in the packed courtroom.

At the beginning of his speech, the chief justice expressed his gratitude and deep respect to those who sacrificed their lives in the mass upsurge, including students Abu Sayed, Mir Mahfuzur Rahman Mugdho and Md Wasim Akram.

He also prayed for the salvation of their souls and wished the injured students and others a speedy recovery.

The chief justice congratulated people from all walks of life, who gave their full support to the student movement.

Speaking about the judicial system, he said preserving integrity and preventing injustice are the eternal responsibility of the judiciary, one of the three organs of the state.

He assured his colleagues of all-out support. "Whoever does good will be rewarded. But no deviation will be tolerated," he remarked.

"I am aware that I've been given the responsibility of the chief justice. Apart from the Supreme Court, the district judiciary is the largest and most extensive field of the judicial system. My greatest strength is my fellow judges working in the subordinate judiciary. The general public usually perceive the district courts as the judiciary.

"I'm telling my colleagues, 'I am with you'. You should not be wary of any unfair pressure and intimidation. Discharge your duties sincerely without any fear.

"We are all aware that the judiciary is not free from the state of crisis in the country. But this historic moment of students' victory has brought us a golden opportunity to stand by the oppressed and tortured people. We must always see to it that we take full advantage of this opportunity," he added.

Earlier, Attorney General Asaduzzaman said the souls of all the victims of murder, disappearance, torture and oppression are looking at the new chief justice and waiting for justice. "Like the entire country, I also hope you [chief justice] will not frustrate them," he said.

"The brave students, their parents, and their well-wishers raised their demands from the streets to make you the chief justice. This love is rare, this love is priceless. I can be proud of this love, isn't it right?" the attorney general said.

SCBA President Khokon in his speech urged the chief justice to ensure an independent judiciary.

BB loses Tk 55cr in forex deals bank inspection report.

When Bangladesh Bank announced the crawling peg exchange rate system, the exchange rate of the dollar jump to Tk 117 from Tk 110.

The loss occurred because the central bank sold dollars at Tk 110 to Islami Bank but bought them from the bank for Tk 117 per dollar, the report said.

The forex deals were done by two BB officials to help Islami Bank, The Daily Star has learnt from officials informed with the proceedings.

The two officials sold and bought dollars after the crawling peg system kicked in, the officials said on the condition of anonymity as they were not authorised to talk to the media.

The reserve management and investment unit of the central bank could not provide any proper explanation for the forex deals, the inspection report said.

The inspection also unearthed that the signatures of the additional director and director of the Forex Reserve & Treasury Management Department were missing on documents of the deals.

This is a violation of the "reserve management operation manual" of the central bank, the report said.

As per the manual, a copy of the note of the forex deals has to be sent to the mid-office and back-office branches, which was not done.

Contacted, BB spokesman Md Mezbaul Haque said, "The officials of the Forex Reserve & Treasury Management Department of BB are not interested in talking about the issue right now."

Islami Bank Managing Director and Chief Executive Officer Mohammed Monirul Moula did not respond to phone calls.

freedom of expression in the country.

The act replaced the much-criticised Digital Security Act of 2018, but many of the controversial provisions were retained or rephrased, raising questions about its implications for journalists, activists, and ordinary citizens.

In addition, Nahid said the youth must be actively involved in the ICT ministry.

"We are thinking about putting together a specialised team with IT experts from home and abroad who are willing to work on novel ideas."

He said that it would be beneficial to reach out to Bangladeshi youths studying abroad and developing specific skill sets in order for them to return home and participate in the nation-building process.

"We are talking about overall structural reforms, which I hope will be implemented in all ministries."

The ICT adviser further said the ministry would start working again with startups whose funding was halted due to their support of the student movement.

He also said legal action would be taken against those involved in the countrywide shutdown of the internet during the student movement.

"Access to the free flow of information is a basic human right. Those involved in the internet shutdown committed human rights violations."

incidents. At the same time, the Editors' Council believes that unethical and sycophantic journalism should be avoided in favour of professionalism," it said.

The statement also highlighted that the previous government had taken various steps to stifle and regulate freedom of speech, creativity, and the independent press industry, enacting several restrictive laws.

"These laws include the Data Protection Act (Draft) 2022, Digital, Social Media and OTT Regulation 2021 (Draft), Media Workers (Conditions of Service) Act 2022 (Draft), National Online Media Policy 2017, and The Press Council (Amendment) Act, 2022 (Draft), all of which should be repealed immediately," the statement read.

As in the past, efforts to impose restrictions on public and private advertisements in newspapers should be stopped, the statement said, adding that all activities of the Department of Films and Publications (DFP), a government agency, must be transparent and made public.

It further called for the Press Council to be reconstituted and made an effective body and for the removal of all obstacles to independent journalism.

These calls were made during a meeting of the Editors' Council on August 10, presided over by its President, Mahfuz Anam, also the editor and publisher of The Daily Star.

The meeting was attended by Matiur Rahman, editor and publisher of Prothom Alo; Tasmima Hossain, editor of Ittefaq; Nurul Kabir, editor of New Age and senior vice-president of the Editors' Council; Shamsul Huq Zahid, editor of The Financial Express; Altamash Kabir, editor of Sangbad; Dewan Hanif Mahmud, editor and publisher of Bonik Barta; Zafar Sobhan, editor of Dhaka Tribune and also a joint secretary of the Editors' Council; Alamgir Mohiuddin, editor of Naya Diganta; Alamgir Hossain, editor of Samakal; Mostafa Mamun, editor of Desh Rupantor; Mostafiz Shafi, editor of Pratidiner Bangladesh; and Shahriar Karim, executive editor of Sangbad.

Daily Purbokone Editor Dr M Ramiz Uddin Chowdhury and Suprobhat Bangladesh Editor Rusho Mahmud also attended the meeting virtually.

Interim govt to protect fundamental rights

"There is no reason that our relationship with India will be affected for anyone's stay in India."

Touhid said the government will make sincere efforts to promote national reconciliation through inclusive dialogue and accountability.

The former foreign secretary said in a drastically changed scenario, all political parties are now free to express their views and opinions.

He said the government will ensure justice and accountability for all deaths and violence committed during the recent mass uprising through independent investigations and judicial process.

"In the process, the government will remain engaged with the international partners, including the UN, to avail itself of appropriate support for facilitating such processes in a sound and seamless manner."

The adviser said the interim government will work on essential policies and institutional reforms towards ensuring a democratic and prosperous future for the country.

He said the previous Awami League government in its efforts to suppress the popular movement committed gross human rights violations by abusing and misusing state power.

However, the sheer force of "people's power" added momentum to the movement, leading to the fall of the authoritarian regime, led by Sheikh Hasina, he added.

Touhid said the most pressing task before the interim government is to bring normalcy in the overall law and order situation, and the government is working towards that end.

Some diplomats expressed concern over the safety of their citizens and diplomatic premises.

He said ensuring safety and security of the diplomatic and consular premises and personnel is a core priority for the government.

The government is pledge-bound to ensure safety and security of all religious and ethnic groups, and it will not tolerate any violence or intimidation against them, he added.

"We said they [diplomats] should not be frustrated about the current situation. Competent people are in charge of the economic sector. We assured them of protecting their investments and profits."

A diplomat told the adviser that young people brought a change in the country and they should have more representatives in the next parliament.

"I said there would be more young and women representatives in parliament in future."

About fake news in the media on religious minorities, Touhid said propaganda should be countered with facts.

"But we will not allow any violence or damages to occur. All those committing such crimes will be investigated."

Meanwhile, Australian Foreign Minister Penny Wong yesterday wrote on X that her country looks forward to working with Prof Yunus' interim government. She welcomed Yunus' calls for peace, order and justice.

"Australia will continue to support a democratic and inclusive future for all Bangladeshis," she said.

Pakistan army arrests former spy chief

AFP, Islamabad

Pakistan's ex-spy chief who served during jailed former prime minister Imran Khan's term has been taken into military custody, the army announced yesterday.

Lieutenant General Faiz Hameed, who stepped down in December 2022, was accused of abusing his power and raiding the businesses of a private housing developer, according to Supreme Court papers published last year.

The court at the time ordered the developer to take his complaints to the ministry of defence.

"Complying with the orders of Supreme Court of Pakistan, a detailed court of inquiry was undertaken by Pakistan Army. Consequently, appropriate disciplinary action has been initiated against Lt Gen Faiz Hameed (Retd)," the military's media wing said in a statement.

The fast-moving wildfire fuelled by gale-force winds spread to the edge of Athens, torching trees, houses and cars and forcing evacuations of several hospitals and a dozen towns and villages, Greek authorities said.

Russia widens evacuations in border regions

AFP, Kyiv

Two Russian regions bordering Ukraine ordered more evacuations yesterday as Moscow battled to contain an unprecedented push onto its territory.

Ukraine sent troops into Russia last week in its biggest cross-border operation since Moscow launched its invasion in February 2022 and the most significant by a foreign army since World War II.

Authorities in the Kursk region announced they were widening their evacuation area to include Belovsky district, home to some 14,000 people. The neighbouring Belgorod region said it was evacuating its border district of Krasnoyaruzhsky.

"For the health and security of our population, we're beginning to move people who live in Krasnoyaruzhsky to safer places," Belgorod region governor Vyacheslav Gladkov said on Telegram.

The assault on Kursk had killed at least 12 civilians and already led to 121,000 people being ordered out. President Vladimir Putin ordered his army to "dislodge" Ukrainian troops.

Meanwhile, each country blamed the other for a fire at the Russian-occupied Zaporizhzhia nuclear plant in southern Ukraine later on Sunday. Both sides -- and the UN's nuclear watchdog -- said there was no sign of a nuclear leak.

AUKUS SUBS

Australia, US, UK sign nuke transfer deal

AFP, Sydney

Australia said yesterday it had signed a deal to allow the exchange of nuclear secrets and material with the United States and Britain, a key step toward equipping its navy with nuclear-powered submarines.

It binds the three countries to security arrangements for the transfer of sensitive US and UK nuclear material and knowhow as part of the tripartite 2021 AUKUS security accord.

AUKUS, which envisages building an Australian nuclear-powered submarine fleet and jointly developing advanced warfighting capabilities, is seen as a strategic answer to Chinese military ambitions in the Pacific region.

"This agreement is an important step towards Australia's acquisition of conventionally-armed, nuclear-powered submarines for the Royal Australian Navy," said Richard Marles, Australia's defence minister and deputy prime minister.

ISRAEL-IRAN TENSIONS

US orders carrier group to hasten ME arrival

AFP, Washington

US Defense Secretary Lloyd Austin ordered an aircraft carrier group to hasten its arrival in the Middle East, the Pentagon said Sunday, as mounting tensions raise fears of a region-wide war.

It is a show of support for key US ally Israel after Iran and the Lebanese Hezbollah group vowed to avenge last month's killings of Hamas political chief Ismail Haniyeh and Hezbollah commander Fuad Shukr.

Austin ordered the aircraft carrier strike group led by the USS Abraham Lincoln, and equipped with F-35 fighters, to "accelerate its transit" to the region, said Pentagon spokesman Major General Pat Ryder.

He said Austin, who spoke with his Israeli counterpart Yoav Gallant on Sunday, had also ordered the USS Georgia guided missile submarine to the area.

Ryder said the pair discussed "the importance of mitigating civilian harm, progress towards securing a ceasefire and the release of hostages held in Gaza," and efforts to deter aggression by Iran-aligned groups in the region.

The United States announced last week that it was deploying the strike group, as well as additional ballistic missile defense-capable cruisers and destroyers, and a fighter squadron.

Lebanon's Hezbollah movement said an Israeli air strike later on Sunday killed two fighters from the Iran-backed group, with the health ministry reporting another death from an attack days ago.

Hezbollah has traded near-daily fire with Israel in support of its ally Hamas since the Israel triggered offensive in Gaza.

A strike on Beirut's southern suburbs late last month killed Hezbollah's top military commander, Fuad Shukr, just hours before the assassination, blamed on Israel, of Hamas's political leader Ismail Haniyeh in Tehran.

Air France and its subsidiary Transavia France have again extended the suspension of their flights to Beirut, through tomorrow, because of continued tensions in the region, the companies said yesterday.

The flights have been suspended since July 29 because of the "security situation in Lebanon" and their resumption "will be subject to a new assessment of the situation on the ground", Air France said in a statement.

The airline said "the safety of its clients and crews are its absolute priority".

DATA USE

Elon Musk's X faces privacy complaints in Europe

AFP, Vienna

A Vienna-based privacy campaign group lodged complaints in eight European countries against Elon Musk's X yesterday over "unlawfully" feeding the personal data of users into its AI technology without their consent.

The complaints filed by the European Center for Digital Rights -- also known as Noyb -- come after Ireland's Data Protection Commission earlier this month took court action against X over its data collection practices to train its AI.

X had recently started "irreversibly feeding" the personal data of more than 60 million European users into its Grok AI technology, "without ever informing them or asking for their consent", according to Noyb.

Noyb slammed X for "never proactively informing" its users that their data is being used for AI training, saying many people appeared to have "found out about the new default setting through a viral post on 26 July".

Indian medics strike after murder of colleague

AFP, New Delhi

Indian doctors in government hospitals across several states halted elective services "indefinitely" yesterday to protest the rape and murder of a young medic.

The 31-year-old woman's brutalised body was found bearing multiple injuries on Friday in a state-run hospital in West Bengal's Kolkata, where she was a resident doctor.

A subsequent autopsy confirmed sexual assault and homicide.

JUSTICE FOR WOMAN DOCTOR HUMAN

Police have detained a man who worked at the victim's hospital helping people navigate busy queues, according to local media reports.

Demonstrations by doctors demanding justice and better workplace security that initially began in Kolkata have now spread to other parts of the country.

Sexual violence against women is a widespread problem in India -- an average of nearly 90 rapes a day were reported in 2022 in the country of 1.4 billion people.

But doctors say they face additional threats of workplace violence from angry family members of patients, especially after delivering bad news.

"There should be stringent security measures in hospitals and CCTV cameras should be installed," said Sarvesh Pandey, from the Federation of Resident Doctors Association.

What now after mass VC resignations?

Reforming the public university system is a must

Since the fall of the Awami League government in a mass uprising led by students, an unusually high number of vice-chancellors of public universities—at least 13 so far—have stepped down in the face of pressure from students and fellow teachers. Along with the VCs, many top officials including provosts and members of proctorial bodies have also resigned. For instance, all the members of the proctorial bodies of Dhaka University (DU), Shahjalal University of Science and Technology (SUST) and Jagannath University (JnU)—as well as several other key position holders in these universities—have submitted their resignation letters.

Understandably, the list will become longer in the coming days. In hindsight, the mass resignations were bound to happen since most top officials in public universities were appointed on political considerations by the previous government. There is now hope that these vacancies, including the all-too-important VC positions, will be filled by capable and honest individuals following due procedure. However, this cannot happen in a vacuum; it is vital that new appointments are made as part of a wider reform agenda that will ensure improved academic activities, academic freedom, and students' safety in the universities, and establish a culture where teachers and students are not bogged down by the bad influences of politics.

Over the past decades, we have seen how the student wings of major political parties, most notably Chhatra League, created an atmosphere of fear on our campuses. From taking control of the residential halls—thus effectively making the posts of provosts redundant by allotting the seats themselves—to engaging in seat trades, from forcing students to take part in political rallies to torturing them for not abiding by their diktats, the BCL's terrorising tactics have totally ruined the academic environment of universities. And despite frequent criticism of the obnoxious "Gono room" culture, university authorities did not take any action to stop it.

So, establishing a violence-free environment by ensuring the safety of students in residential halls and campuses should be a top priority for the incoming administrations. Students have also demanded a ban on partisan student politics; some public universities and medical colleges have already imposed such a ban. We expect a prudent decision on this as well as on teachers' politics from the authorities. We would also like to see a transparent teachers' recruitment process, freed of any political influence, so that only the competent and dedicated are hired to build our future leaders.

Modernising the curriculum and academic activities should also be a priority going forward. While creating new knowledge should be the aim of our universities, few put enough emphasis on this presently. This needs to change. The authorities need to increase the budgetary allocation for research activities in universities. Moreover, the need for academic freedom of both teachers and students cannot be overstated. These are but a few of the reforms we expect from the authorities in the future. Our students deserve nothing less.

Israel gets away with another war crime

How much longer will the international community stand for this?

We condemn Israel's horrific bombardment of the Al-Tabieen religious school and mosque in Gaza, which killed at least 93 people including 11 children. The death toll is one of the largest from a single strike during the 10 months of aggressive military campaign by Israel in Gaza. According to civil defence rescuers, three Israeli missiles hit the complex—used as a shelter for internally displaced people—while the latter were performing their dawn prayers or sleeping. As such, it clearly amounts to another war crime committed by Israel.

The Israeli military has confirmed that it used "three precise munitions" for the attack. Such meticulous arrangement for the purpose of killing innocent civilians once again shows what the Israeli campaign in Gaza is truly about. However, as always, Israel has claimed—without any evidence—that it had received intelligence suggesting at least 19 Hamas and Islamic Jihad terrorists were eliminated in the attack. According to international law, even if some of the individuals who took shelter at the school were militants, Israel cannot wipe out so many civilians in the process of attacking them. But as we have seen repeatedly, this rogue nation has absolutely no respect for international law.

Since October 7, Israel's military campaign has killed at least 39,790 people in Gaza. With nearly all of the Gaza Strip's 2.4 million people displaced at least once during this time, many have sought refuge in school buildings, having nowhere else to go. Since July 6, however, Israel has hit school buildings at least 14 times, leaving the inhabitants of Gaza with literally nowhere left to go. This nonstop killing and traumatising of an entire people must be brought to an end immediately.

For months, we have been hearing about a potential ceasefire. However, time and again, Israel has either refused to show any sincerity in negotiations or launched one horrific attack after another that have sabotaged the entire process. The latest strike also comes at a crucial time which indicates that Israel is trying to obstruct another mediation effort—which Qatar, one of the mediators, has openly said. As some Israeli analysts have also pointed out, Netanyahu is trying to prolong the fighting for political gains. As such, it is time for the international community, particularly the western countries backing Israel, to force it back to the negotiation table, and stop it from launching any further attacks on defenceless Palestinians.

Why a political consensus on reforms is necessary

On August 5, 2024, Sheikh Hasina, who was serving as the prime minister, tendered her resignation and subsequently left the country. What initially appeared to be a relatively modest request for reform in the quota system rapidly evolved into a widespread and intense mass uprising within just a few days. This transformation underscores the deep-seated discontent simmering beneath the surface.

The mass uprising can be attributed to four major factors. First, the demand for reforming the quota system had garnered substantial support from students and the general populace. Second, persistently high inflation, shrinking job and business opportunities, and pervasive corruption created significant public dissatisfaction. Third, the lack of political freedoms, restrictions on freedom of expression, and general political oppression contributed to growing discontent among the populace. Finally, the Awami League's top leaders, in their attempt to suppress the movement, exhibited a severe lack of sensitivity and arrogance. Their use of excessive force to quell the protests resulted in an unprecedented number of fatalities among students and ordinary citizens within just a few days, further fuelling the anger and intensity of the uprising.

On August 8, 2024, the interim government, under the leadership of Dr Muhammad Yunus, a Nobel laureate, came to power. The interim administration is expected to manage the immediate aftermath of the unrest, address the pressing issues that had fuelled the uprising, and lay the groundwork for a stable and orderly transition to a more permanent government.

The political settlement under the Hasina regime

Under Sheikh Hasina's leadership, the political landscape was characterised by a dominant party regime. Although the 2009 election was competitive, subsequent elections in 2014, 2018, and 2024 faced significant criticisms for their serious flaws. Sheikh Hasina's dominant party regime exhibited five key characteristics. First, the regime was marked by a coalition of five primary actors: the ruling political elites, influential economic elites (predominantly cronies), the civil bureaucracy, the military bureaucracy, and law enforcement agencies, all centred around Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina. This coalition worked collaboratively to maintain control and influence across various sectors. Second, this coalition fostered a "stable corruption equilibrium" among corrupt ruling political elites, corrupt civil and military bureaucrats, corrupt law enforcement agencies, and dominant private sector cronies. These actors had a broad consensus on major economic policies and political agendas, particularly in managing and profiting from critical economic sectors, including large infrastructure projects. Third, the regime faced a significant legitimacy deficit, largely due to the flawed elections of 2014, 2018, and 2024. This legitimacy gap was further exacerbated by the use of force, political repression, and widespread corruption to retain power. Fourth, by focusing on infrastructure and development, the government aimed to present itself as a promoter of progress and economic growth, thereby compensating for its shortcomings in democratic governance and political legitimacy. Fifth, this regime managed to secure "unconditional" support from key regional players of geopolitics, especially India, China, and Russia, despite the regime suffering from a critical deficit in political legitimacy.

However, the regime's claim to developmental legitimacy weakened as the economy plunged into crisis from prolonged high inflation and macroeconomic instability. Finally, with the departure of Sheikh Hasina, the old political settlement was broken.

Major challenges of the interim government

The interim government is confronted with several significant challenges. First, the government should address the breakdown in law and order, ensuring security and restoring public trust across the nation. There have been reported cases of attacks on minorities, which need to be prevented. Second, the interim administration must work to restore and optimise supply chains to support businesses, ensure the availability of essential goods, and promote economic recovery. Third, with high inflation eroding purchasing power, the government must implement measures to stabilise prices. Fourth, the government needs to tackle severe macroeconomic issues, including falling foreign reserves, and sluggish growth in exports and remittances. Fifth, to ensure a smooth and credible democratic transition, reforms that uphold democratic principles and restore public confidence in governance should be instituted by fostering political dialogues and setting up transparent electoral processes. No doubt, all these challenges may intensify in the context of the changed and uncertain dynamics of the interim government's relationship with regional and global power players.

Why is a new political settlement necessary?

The interim government will not be able to function properly and address challenges if there is a fragile political settlement. The country needs a new political settlement among the key actors, currently critically important in Bangladesh's politics. They are the student movement platform, political parties, the military, the bureaucracy, and the private sector. However, these actors have differing agendas and lack a unified consensus. Also, the regional and global power players may exert their influence on these agendas.

While political parties are pressing for elections to be held as soon as possible, the student movement advocates for comprehensive reforms across political, administrative, constitutional, economic, and institutional domains to ensure a meaningful democratic transition. There is strong support for these reforms from civil society. The roles and positions of the military, bureaucracy, and private sector in this context remain ambiguous.

Without a clear consensus on the necessity of these reforms, and with the possibility of elections being held prematurely, there is a substantial risk of reverting to entrenched, undemocratic practices. The outcome of the new political settlement will largely depend on the relative strength and bargaining power of these actors. Civil society organisations have a crucial role to play in facilitating dialogue to forge a political consensus on the reform agenda, thereby contributing to a more stable and democratic political settlement. If that doesn't happen, the country could face extended periods of political instability.

We must strengthen our institutions to preserve democracy

Bangladesh has made history by overthrowing Sheikh Hasina's regime, which was marked by incredible brutality towards its own people for the last 15 long years. Many Bangladeshi Americans could not have imagined this saga would be written in such a breathtakingly ruthless fashion, resulting from four weeks of popular uprising. The power of the people that toppled her rule was beyond our wildest imaginations.

We, Bangladeshi Americans, spent sleepless nights over the past few weeks, getting updates from friends and families, and monitoring the situation through online news. The news of the notoriously defiant former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina resigning and fleeing the country felt almost surreal. However, we eventually came to terms with the new reality and the relief that the mass uprising had finally succeeded, and the carnage stopped.

The situation remains extremely fluid. Many Bangladeshi Americans have voiced concerns about whether the revolution will be preserved by a new generation of leadership that will serve as accountable leaders to the constitution and their voters, or whether we will revert to the old patterns of repression, vengeance, and totalitarianism.

To preserve democracy, we must strengthen our governmental bodies—the executive, the legislative, and the judicial branches. In a true democracy, these establishments develop resilience against attacks from political parties. The endurance of these institutions in American politics remains the vital lifeline for continued freedom in the country. Even in the US, these governing bodies do come under relentless attacks by political forces. Yet, they are robust enough to withstand such assaults and remain fundamental to democracy. Politics can be corrupt, unhinged, selfish, and immoral, but democratic institutions refuse to bow to political pressures. Despite relentless attacks on these entities, they strive to play by the rule.

Public offices must have public trust, and to do so our institutions should be built bottom up so that every citizen is treated fairly and enjoys a fair share of rights and responsibilities. Bangladesh must undergo massive political and constitutional reforms. We must embrace electoral reforms and create and enhance independent bodies to investigate government conduct. We should promote civic engagement and education to strengthen anti-corruption measures, reform political parties, and improve human rights protections. We must not politicise our sacred institutions ever again.

In rebuilding the nation, we must preserve and respect the wishes of the young generation who made the ultimate sacrifices to achieve this "victory." Our policymaking must reflect their opinion, giving them the forefront in building the new generation of public servants.

We must also foster tolerance of diverse opinions, which is the lifeline of a vibrant democracy. However, it is disheartening to see people burned alive and businesses destroyed across the country post-revolution. We must not treat people critical of our policies as enemies and seek retribution for political disagreement. It is our obligation to safeguard the lives and liberties of those who support the fallen regime. Nearly 50 years into independence, we must not divide the country into pro-liberation and anti-liberation groups, because our freedom fighters did not sacrifice their lives for mean-spirited politics and material gains.

The time has come to rebuild the country on tolerance and democratic principles. The time has come to let people form their government through their voices and votes. Their right to freedom of expression must be protected at any cost. We must not use state apparatuses to deal with people's discontent.

The end of Sheikh Hasina's regime is an example of the cruel destiny of a repressive government. People have spoken, and the leadership must listen if we do not want history to repeat itself. All public officials, whether appointed or elected, must be held accountable when they violate their oaths.

To conclude, let us allow the rekindled spirit of the Liberation War to build a new Bangladesh by forming robust public institutions. We salute our heroes who made the ultimate sacrifices with their lives and faced imprisonment and forced disappearances to write this glorious new chapter.

The banality of evil and the Messiah of a new dawn

Just hours after sending off our last op-ed for publication, we watched the unthinkable unfold: the resignation and departure of Sheikh Hasina, followed by the storming of Gono Bhaban. Indeed, no sooner had the army chief announced an upcoming address to the nation that the jubilation on the streets began, accompanied by a wave of looting and destruction. We witnessed a couple showing off expensive jamdani sarees, while others carried off an eclectic train of booty: from live pangash fish to bras and TVs. Men appearing in sarees and high heels, some putting up their legs and smoking cigarettes inside Shangshad Bhaban, portrayed a sudden "carnivalesque" inversion of hierarchies. A photo surfaced of one of our cousins and his friends—all highly educated and affluent—looting expensive paintings from Sheikh Rehana's house; he would later be praised for apologising. To some, these constituted radical political acts and a moment of catharsis. All we could think of, however, was the "banality of evil."

Within hours of Hasina's departure, robberies, arson, and destruction of public properties spread like wildfire. PHOTO: AFP

In her 1963 study of the trial of the Nazi war criminal Adolf Eichmann, Hannah Arendt developed the concept of the "banality of evil" to account for a paradox central to all violent social orders/events: how otherwise "ordinary" people can commit acts of unspeakable evil in the process of performing their mundane duties, neither driven by malice nor incapable of imagining otherwise. One recalls, for example, the police sent to brutalise the student protesters just days ago, deployed as disposable bodies and then abandoned when the tide turned. Some may balk at this comparison, but the banality of evil extends well beyond the problem of "following orders." It is the ability to perform acts that would be unthinkable under "ordinary" circumstances, but can appear mundane, even commendable, under others.

> With every shift in the political settlement, whoever was not on the right side of history became minorities or enemies, their lives and property up for grabs, legitimised through vested-property laws. And just like we would like to forget the plunder of Hindu property after Partition or the massacre of Biharis during and after 1971, so the majority today is loath to admit the foundational violence that is marking the birth of a new order.

For three days we were a state without a government. The police had abandoned their posts out of fear for their lives, and although the army had supposedly taken charge, they were clearly unwilling to intervene. As the student coordinators became embroiled in closed door talks about the interim government, the students on the ground cleaned up the streets and government buildings, secured and returned some of the booty, took control of traffic, and began to erase the marks of violence with their murals. Within hours of Hasina's departure, news of robberies, arson, the destruction of monuments and sculptures, and attacks on minorities, the police, and anyone affiliated with the AL began to spread like wildfire. Many condemned these acts, while others justified them as legitimate acts of vengeance (or even an AL ploy to portray a nation in disarray). Many seemed to be more concerned about fearmongering Indian media narratives; perhaps they are not hearing the first-hand accounts that we are. And while we are rightly celebrating the way students and community members have pulled together to defend their neighbours, it is worth asking why so many of us should suddenly have to live in fear for their lives whenever the state begins to morph, or disappear from view.

Everything has a past. From 1947 to 1964 to 1971, such seemingly mindless vandalism and the appropriation of "enemy" lands/property (almost always orchestrated by vested interests and neighbours rather than strangers) has shaped the entitlements of certain citizens over others. With every shift in the political settlement, whoever was not on the right side of history became minorities or enemies, their lives and property up for grabs, legitimised through vested-property laws. And just like we would like to forget the plunder of Hindu property after Partition or the massacre of Biharis during and after 1971, so the majority today is loath to admit the foundational violence that is marking the birth of a new order. Then as in now, good Samaritans formed community-based groups to protect against such attacks. This is neither new, nor is it merely revenge; this is nation-making. Delineating the current violence as a kind of random, chaotic outburst—as a law-and-order or "dakat" problem—severs this historical link. It frees the rest of us from culpability. It overlooks the bottom-up violence of thugs and opportunists that the previous regime also relied on, and obscures the majoritarian, populist echoes that the quota-reform movement carried from the very beginning.

Mass uprisings are intoxicating, and they create a range of possibilities within the political field. This interim government—an economist and Nobel laureate leading an eclectic mix of human rights defenders, environmentalists, veteran NGO activists, students, lawyers, retired defence officers, a psychologist, an Islamic scholar, and even a representative from indigenous communities—shows us such possibilities. The pendulum swung from the erstwhile radical left to the right to the neoliberal "centre," as is usually the case in any populist uprising.

As social scientists, it would be naive to believe that this motley crew came together randomly. Let us not forget that just like these students, many of these cabinet members carry visceral memories of repression and harassment by the previous regime. Yunus was dragged through the mud and to the courts, Syeda Rizwana came under attack for standing against land grabbers, Adilur Rahman faced arrest for Odhikar's report on the 2013 Shapla Chottor crackdown, and one can imagine the repercussions of Farida Akhter's defence of Hefazat-e-Islam's 13-point demands. They have all paid the price for dissent, and all the "Avengers" have now assembled. Time will tell what this "union of the repressed" will result in.

While hopes are running high, this is also the time to ask questions (what kind of development agenda we can expect from the doyen of microfinance, for example), and not give in to some fear of "maligning" the movement. This is also the hour to remember that what was not possible in 2006/7 and 2013 has suddenly become possible in 2024. We want to believe that our student leaders have done their homework and can continue to sense the pulse of the masses, that this impossible combination that has taken custody can provide the magical solution that we keep reaching for. We have summoned the forces of civil society to take charge and dispel the party-state; we hope that they will be able to return to their roles as mediators between the state and the people once their time is over. Their task is to free the organs of government and the state from the shadow of party-rule, not to rely on another kind of force on the ground to push agendas and hunt for new enemies. We must not repeat the mistakes of the post-71 list-makers, who had labelled the millions who did not fight or flee during the war—including many who had continued in their government jobs—as "collaborators," producing a new economy of accusations (Mohaiemen, 2015). By now our students should be able to put down the sticks and go back to their classes. They have led the way; the rest is up to you (and us) to deliver.

The heartbreaking image from 1970 of a helpless Mary Ann, a student at Kent State University in Ohio kneeling over the body of her fallen student friend Jeffrey Miller with her arms raised in anguish and begging for help, is one of the most important photos of the 20th century. Miller was shot by the Ohio Army National Guard while protesting America's unjust war in Vietnam. Taken by student photographer John Filo, the image was one seminal event of the anti-Vietnam war movement in the United States.

The blood-curling image of a nine-year-old Vietnamese girl, Phan Thị Kim Phuc, running down a country road in South Vietnam's Trang Bang area with fear and pain written large on her face and her skin peeling off from the effect of a napalm bomb, forced the Nixon administration to start peace talks with the government of North Vietnam, recorded in history as the Paris Peace Talks. This finally led the US to gradually withdraw its military from Vietnam, ending with the capture of Saigon by North Vietnamese forces and the inevitable unification of Vietnam. That scene captured on camera by Vietnamese-American photojournalist Nick Ut received not just global attention, it changed the course of history.

The two images, captured within a space of just two years, largely contributed to President Richard Nixon's fall from grace and his eventual resignation in 1974, the Watergate scandal just being the tipping point.

In Bangladesh the image of Nur Hussain, a protester at the anti-Ershad movement in Dhaka, with the message "end to autocracy, freedom for democracy" painted on his bare body minutes before being shot down by the police on November 10, 1987, further energised a mass uprising that forced the erstwhile president to resign.

Fast forward to Rangpur, Bangladesh in July 2024. This time it was Abu Syed, a student of Rangpur Begum Rokeya University, standing with his arms stretched open, protesting against injustice as part of a greater movement led by the youth of Bangladesh against the undemocratic government of Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina. As he looked at the armed police with courage and conviction written all over his smiling face, not one, but multiple pellets struck his body. Within minutes, Abu Syed lay dead, a martyr for democracy and a victim of autocracy, one of the many killed during the movement. The image of Abu Syed, standing tall and looking down the barrel of guns before being cruelly killed, turned a growing protest against the government of Sheikh Hasina into an all-engulfing popular movement, forcing the prime minister to leave not just her office but also the country.

The common thread in all of the above instances is that the victims were all young people, mostly students—who came from a school in Trang Ban village in Vietnam to a university in Rangpur in Bangladesh. Kim Phuc survived and now lives in Canada. But Jeffrey Miller in Ohio, Nur Hussain in Dhaka, and Abu Syed in Rangpur did not live to see the fruits of their courage and sacrifice. Their deaths in the hands of cold-blooded law enforcement personnel might not have been in vain. After all, they greatly impacted history and paved the way for the end of the rule of unpopular and autocratic governments. In the process, though, their budding lives were cruelly cut short and the pain of loss for their families will never cease. Anyone with even the slightest semblance of conscience must hope that the future does not ask for such sacrifices to ensure accountability, good governance, democracy, and the right to free speech anywhere in the world.

Startups seek reforms and stability from new government

"We have been waiting for this change", said Anayet Rashid, Founder and CEO of Truck Lagbe. Mentioning the 10 Minute School incident amidst the ongoing movement, Anayet said, "What happened with 10 Minute School was a wake up call for us. It was a clear message that either you work with power or you face the consequences".

MD. ZAHIDUR RABBI

With the interim government headed by Nobel Laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus taking oath on August 8 after the ousting of former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina on August 5, the startup community in the country is expressing cautious optimism and demands for the new interim government. As the interim government settles in, entrepreneurs are calling for policy reforms, improved access to funding, and a corruption-free environment to foster innovation and growth.

"We have been waiting for this change", said Anayet Rashid, Founder and CEO of Truck Lagbe. Mentioning the 10 Minute School incident amidst the ongoing movement, Anayet said, "What happened with 10 Minute School was a wake up call for us. It was a clear message that either you work with power or you face the consequences." Earlier on July 16, Startup Bangladesh Limited announced that it had cancelled an investment proposal of BDT 5 crore for 10 Minute School, Bangladesh's largest edtech platform, after Ayman Sadiq, 10 Minute School's Founder and CEO, had sided with the students during the ongoing students' movement.

Anayet also added that the startup community in Bangladesh hopes for positive changes by the interim government. He said, "We welcome the young leadership in the interim government. There is much work that needs to be done. Some of the existing policies and laws need to align with the current reality of Bangladesh."

"Many of us had to register our company in other countries in order to attract foreign investments. Moreover, the share market in Bangladesh was also very unstable. All of these matters need to be addressed. We must have open dialogues with the leaders against corruption and extortion," he added.

Nourin Haque Ridi, Founder of Dark Kak said, "As a new startup, we seek more equitable access to funding support from the government. Currently, only a few high-profile startups receive substantial financial backing and marketing assistance from government agencies, while many others struggle with funding, navigating complex registration, and dealing with the tax system. We call for a more transparent and fair distribution of grants and a corruption-free, politically unbiased environment that fosters collaboration rather than competition among startups."

Mentioning the need of support for women entrepreneurs she added, "There is a critical need for targeted support for women entrepreneurs, particularly indigenous women and those from rural areas, to ensure they receive the guidance and funding necessary to succeed. We urge the government to incentivise industries to engage domestic and politically unbiased startups in various sectors to drive technological, environmental, and cultural advancements, rather than relying on international support."

Gaining the confidence of investors is a crucial step when it comes to the startup ecosystem. Foreign investment is also necessary for the improvement of startups in Bangladesh. Regarding this matter, Fahad Ifaz, Co-founder and CEO of iFarmer says, "The interim government must try to regain investor confidence in Bangladesh. I hope [Dr] Muhammad Yunus will be able to help Bangladesh regarding this matter through his good image and networks. The proper implementation of policies and laws is a must which the previous government failed."

Fahad also talked about how the recent political crisis has impacted businesses. He added, "The recent election and the current political scenario has negatively impacted all the businesses. If the banks make funding easier for the local startups that would be a huge help. It would also be helpful for the startups if the government exempts taxes for one year."

A 30-something's guide to modern job hunting

Interviews in your 30s may focus more on your leadership abilities, strategic thinking, and how you handle complex situations. Prepare examples that demonstrate your problem-solving skills, leadership experience, and adaptability. Practise articulating how your experience aligns with the company's goals.

SHAMS RASHID TONMOY

Whether you were suddenly let go of your previous job or looking to start anew, job hunting in your 30s can be an especially difficult experience. Not only do you have to update your resume to include currently relevant skills, chances are, skills that you honed when you were younger might not be considered important by modern employers. But, being thrust into the vicious world of job hunting, there isn't the time to upskill yourself. So, what do you do? Here is a quick breakdown of some challenges and strategies you should be aware of when looking for a new job in your 30s.

The struggles you might face

Applying to an entry-level job at a late age is an automatic handicap; as your CV is competing with a slew of resumes from hungry, enthusiastic freshers. "When applying for jobs in my 30s, the biggest challenge I faced was that my resume got buried under that of many others, and I never got a call from most places I applied to," says Hasin Rahman, Lecturer at Daffodil International University's Nutrition and Food Engineering Department.

Older applicants often struggle with a key thing employers look for: adaptability. Even though most modern companies will have the resources to train even an older applicant, they will need to know if you are worth the investment. As such, being open to learning and maintaining the ability to adjust to people of different backgrounds are crucial skills to hone. "The easier it will be to train you, the easier it will be for your hiring team to envision you as a mentor someday," says Susmita Shahreen Newaz, Senior HR Generalist at SELISE Digital Platforms.

ILLUSTRATION: ZARIF FAIAZ

Another big roadblock is the age bias that comes with many entry-level positions, especially in Bangladesh where most government jobs have a strict age limit of 30. As per a 2022 article on workplace age bias in Harvard Business Review, studies show nearly 65% of US workers reporting have experienced age-based discrimination. However, such incidents occur to much older workers, typically those aged 50 and above, and are not as commonly seen in new applicants aged in their 30s.

So, how to overcome these challenges?

When your old field isn't cutting it, maybe it's time to consider branching out. Hasin, who got a call from his current workplace after applying to several places for many months, says, "If an applicant can demonstrate their problem-solving, communication, and leadership skills to a potential employer, their major will start to matter less. This is especially true for the corporate sector when branching out."

Since some selection panels want to be assured that although you are starting late, you weren't sitting around before, it is important to clarify career and education gaps in both your resume and cover letter. List skills you have picked up at previous jobs, and explain how those skills will make you a valuable employee at the new place.

To those applying late to new jobs, Susmita advises them to keep a clear and concise CV. "Mention the reasons it took so long for you to start in your cover letter. Or, if you are switching lanes and are having to start from the bottom in your new sector, mention your previous experiences in your CV, regardless of relevance."

Even if you don't feel confident applying to a new job in your 30s, keep hope in your solid foundation of experience and resources that you have cultivated so far. Research new industries that interest you and consider how your existing skills can be transferred. Networking with professionals in your desired field can also provide valuable insights.

If nothing else works, maybe it's time to step back and actually attempt upskilling. Set aside time to assess your skills and identify areas for growth. Continuous learning is key to staying competitive, after all. Invest in your professional development by taking courses, earning certifications, or pursuing an advanced degree. By addressing the challenges and capitalising on the opportunities unique to this stage of life, you can find a fulfilling job - even in your 30s!

HP lose to Tasmania in Top End T20

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) High Performance Unit suffered their first defeat in the ongoing Top End Series 2024, losing to Tasmania Tigers by five wickets in a contest that went down to the final over at the TIO Stadium in Darwin on Monday.

Sent to bat, HP Unit posted 166-5 in their 20 overs with Parvez Hossain Emon making an unbeaten 39 off 29 balls while openers Jishan Alam and Tanzid Tamim made 38 and 28 runs respectively.

In reply, Jake Doran's blistering 71 not out off 37 balls powered Tasmania to 167-4 in 19.3 overs.

Rafael Macmilan (17 not out off nine) also played a crucial role in Tasmania's win, hitting a couple of fours off Abu Hider Rony in the penultimate over to reduce the pressure before Doran hit a six off Rakibul Hasan to seal the win with three balls to go.

The HP Unit had won their opening match against Melbourne Renegades by 77 runs on Sunday. They will next face Adelaide Strikers on Wednesday.

Shakib's selection sign of clarity from selectors

SPORTS REPORTER

Ace all-rounder Shakib Al Hasan's selection for the Test series against Pakistan was of particular interest for fans and media alike who were curious to know whether the current political developments had any bearing on the selectors decision to include him in the 16-member squad.

After Sheikh Hasina resigned as prime minister on August 5, the president dissolved the parliament on the 6th, of which Shakib was a member from the then ruling Awami League party.

Many members of parliament of the Awami League government have fled the country since while some have gone into hiding. Shakib, meanwhile, was far removed from all of it, busy taking part in the Global T20 League in Canada.

Shakib's involvement with the fallen government cast doubts over his availability for the Pakistan series.

However, the selection panel led by Gazi Ashraf Hossain Lipu named the 37-year-old for the two-Test series, beginning on August 21, on Sunday and the all-rounder is set to join his teammates in Lahore on the 14th and begin his preparations.

On Monday, Lipu clarified the reasoning behind selecting Shakib, saying they had prioritised his fitness and wanted reassurance from him that he would be available for the red-ball series against India, South Africa and the West Indies later this year before including him.

"I spoke with Shakib probably at the end of July and there were discussions regarding his fitness along with other things," Lipu said at the press conference in Mirpur yesterday.

"During the Zimbabwe series [in May] we wanted to know his short-term plan since we have many Tests lined up till December, eight in total. He had assured us his availability [for those Tests] during the Zimbabwe series. Due to the recent scenario, I had to ask him again.

"Not just by phone, we have exchanged official emails regarding his availability. It was important to know whether he will be available for the practice sessions before every series, that was also a criterion for selection," Lipu told reporters yesterday.

Another contentious point was providing Shakib security during this turmoil. Bangladesh's foreign coaches too had expressed their unwillingness to attend practice sessions in Mirpur even though they were present in the capital.

Disruption in training owing to security concerns was one of the reasons why the Bangladesh team left for Pakistan yesterday afternoon, five days earlier than scheduled. The team will train at Lahore for three to four days before moving to Islamabad. From Islamabad they will move to Rawalpindi to prepare for the first Test.

"There are security concerns regarding every player and foreign official during practice sessions. In the current circumstances, it definitely has to be ensured. In terms of selection, we had to consider many things because he [Shakib] is involved in politics. But he was selected on the basis of his merit," Lipu said.

The recent turmoil has shown that political situation can have a bearing on cricket too, especially if a player enters politics while still being a cricketer, like Shakib did. Lipu felt that only players were not to be blamed as political parties need to reconsider taking cricketers aboard for political gains.

Bijoy expects 'highly competitive' Pakistan tie

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh A skipper Anamul Haque Bijoy on Monday expressed his optimism about having a competitive four-day opening match against their Pakistani counterparts as he felt that both sides have some highly experienced cricketers.

"We are very excited about facing the Pakistan Shaheens side in their backyard. The Shaheens squad looks strong, especially the fast bowling department. With the highly experienced players on either side, the first four-dayer will be highly competitive," Anamul was quoted as saying in a PCB press release ahead of the first of two four-day games, scheduled to start on Tuesday at the Islamabad Club.

Both teams have packed their sides with players who will feature in the ICC World Test Championship fixtures, to be played in Rawalpindi and Karachi on 21-25 August and 30 August-3 September, respectively.

The second match will be played at the same venue from 20-23 August but the abovementioned mentioned cricketers won't be available due to their national team engagement.

Anamul believes the series is a very crucial one for the Bangladeshi players for their Test series preparation while he feels that youngsters can rise to the occasion.

Salahuddin 'not resigning', will seek fifth term

SPORTS REPORTER

Incumbent president of Bangladesh Football Federation (BFF), Kazi Salahuddin, vowed yesterday not to resign despite pressure from a football fan group and confirmed he will contest the upcoming BFF elections for the fifth time.

The Bangladesh Football Ultras, a fan group, recently launched a campaign demanding the resignation of Salahuddin, executive member Mahfuza Akter Kiran, and senior vice president Abdus Salam Murshedy, who has already stepped down. This follows the resignation of former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina due to massive student-led protests.

On Sunday, some members of the Ultras had gathered at the BFF House, chanting slogans calling for Salahuddin and Kiran's resignation, criticising their organisational performance.

In response to the protest, Salahuddin told The Daily Star: "First of all, what stake do they (BFU) have in football? I have announced the BFF elections will be held on October 26. Who are they to tell me I should not contest? Who gave them the right to threaten and vandalise if I run again?"

"I am not resigning; instead, I will contest the election again because I will not leave football in the face of any threats," Salahuddin continued to defend his stance.

"I am not an ordinary person. I have a long football background, having represented and captained the national team. I am also a freedom fighter and have received national sports awards, the independence award, the liberation award, and the Sheikh Kamal Lifetime Achievement Award during the regimes of Ziaur Rahman, HM Ershad, Khaleda Zia, and the Awami League. I will leave football on my terms, not due to threats."

Salahuddin also alleged that the Ultras are employees of the now-defunct Saif Sporting Club's Tarafder Ruhul Amin, suggesting their demands are motivated by vested interest.

"If they are so popular, they should run in the elections themselves. Why are they so concerned about me? If I were a failure, the councillors would not vote for me. I was first elected BFF president against Awami League organisers," he claimed.

Tarafder, meanwhile, has denied involvement in the protests involving the BFF boss.

"I think he [Salahuddin] has made a baseless claim without analysing anything. I have a clean record to account for and have never hatched any conspiracy against anyone. We were successful organisers but left the sports scene where there was no success.

"I have no idea about this movement. I have no relation with the Ultras; even I don't know about them.

"It is entirely Salahuddin bhai's decision whether to resign or run for election; it is his democratic right," said Tarafder, who withdrew his Saif SC from Bangladesh Premier League two seasons ago.

France bids adieu to 'seine-sational' Games

AFP, Paris

France bid a reluctant farewell yesterday to an "enchanted" fortnight of Olympic sport as athletes headed home from Paris praising a dazzling edition of the Games that has breathed new life into the biggest show on earth.

Hollywood star Tom Cruise delivered stardust at the closing ceremony on Sunday evening -- and a link with the next Games in Los Angeles -- by abseiling into the national stadium.

The "Mission Impossible" star descended on a wire in front of 71,500 spectators, grabbed the Olympic flag and jumped onto a motorbike, to the delight of thousands of dancing athletes and awe-struck fans.

The final act of the Paris Olympics brought relief that an event foreshadowed by worries about terror attacks, strikes or protests had passed off with barely a hitch.

But there was also sadness that two weeks of high-spirited celebration had come to an end.

"Keep the flame alive," urged the front-page headline of France's biggest sports newspaper, L'Equipe, which urged French people to maintain the spirit "of this enchanted fortnight".

During the closing ceremony, which stressed the Olympics' core message of peace and cooperation, International Olympic Committee (IOC) president Thomas Bach had praised the Paris Games for being "sport at its best".

"These were sensational Olympic Games from start to finish," Bach said. "Or dare I say: Seine-sational Games," the IOC chief quipped in a pun about the river flowing through Paris which was a sometimes fickle star of the event.

Observers had seen Paris 2024 as essential for the Olympics brand as a whole, coming after a Covid-affected edition in Tokyo and a corruption-tainted version in Rio de Janeiro in 2016.

Much of the media commentary has focused on the uplifting impact of the Games on the generally morose national mood.

"For 17 days the stereotype of the indifferent, grumpy Frenchman went missing," wrote sports writer Owen Slot in The Times newspaper, adding that Paris had "made the Olympic Games look more beautiful than ever before."

The closing spectacle, marking the beginning of the four-year countdown to the LA Games, followed 17 days of drama-filled sporting action lit up by American gymnast Simone Biles, sprinter Noah Lyles, Pakistan's javelin king Arshad Nadeem and casual Turkish shooter Yusuf Dikec, who has become an Internet sensation.

They also featured a damaging gender row about two female boxers, Imane Khelif of Algeria and Taiwan's Lin Yu-ting, who both went on to win gold.

The last day of sporting action saw the United States pip China for top spot in the battle for medals after the US women's basketball team squeezed past France 67-66 to clinch the last gold of the Games.

While France will take away fond sporting memories as the torch passes to Los Angeles, the world is reminded to keep the Olympic flame alive, burning brightly for the years to come.

Four HC judges promoted to Appellate Division

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Four High Court judges were elevated to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court yesterday.

With their appointments, the number of judges at the Appellate Division has gone up to six.

President Mohammed Shahabuddin appointed the judges as per the constitution, according to a gazette notification by the law ministry.

The four new Appellate Division judges are Justice Zubayer Rahman Chowdhury, Justice Syed Md Ziaul Karim, Justice Md Rezaul Haque and Justice SM Emdadul Hoque, Law Secretary Md Golam Sarwar told The Daily Star last night.

Chief Justice Syed Refaat Ahmed will administer the oath of office to them at the Supreme Court Judges' Lounge at 10:30am today.

The four judges were appointed as judges of the High Court Division of the Supreme Court during the tenure of the BNP-led four party alliance government.

Justice Zubayer Rahman Chowdhury was appointed as an additional judge of the HC on August 27, 2003, for two years and his service was confirmed on August 27, 2005.

Justice Syed Md Ziaul Karim, Justice Md Rezaul Haque and Justice SM Emdadul Hoque were appointed as additional HC judges on August 23, 2004, for two years. Their services were regularised on August 23, 2006, according to information from the SC website.

On August 10 this year, six judges of the Appellate Division, including then chief justice Obaidul Hassan, resigned amid protests by students.

The other five judges are Justice M Enayetur Rahim, Justice Md Abu Zafor Siddique, Justice Jahangir Hossain Selim, Justice Md Shahnur Islam and Justice Kashefa Hussain.

'No further delay' to Gaza ceasefire

Say leaders of France, Germany, UK; 25 more Palestinians killed in Israeli strikes

AGENCIES

The leaders of France, Germany and Britain said yesterday that "there can be no further delay" in negotiating a ceasefire in Gaza, warning Iran and its allies against any "further escalation" of the conflict.

The joint statement came after one of the deadliest reported Israeli strikes on the besieged Gaza Strip in more than 10 months of offensive.

"The fighting must end now, and all hostages still detained by Hamas must be released," French President Emmanuel Macron, German Chancellor Olaf Scholz and British Prime Minister Keir Starmer said in a joint statement.

"The people of Gaza need urgent and unfettered delivery and distribution of aid," the statement said. "There can be no further delay."

They also welcomed the "tireless" work of Egyptian, Qatari and US mediators towards an agreement on a ceasefire and the release of hostages.

Several rounds of negotiations for a ceasefire in Gaza have failed until now, except for a one-week truce that was observed at the end of November.

International mediators have invited Israel and Hamas to resume negotiations towards a long-sought truce and hostage-release deal, as the fighting in Gaza and the killings of Iran-aligned militant leaders have sent tensions soaring across the region, reports AFP.

Hamas later on Sunday called on US, Qatari and Egyptian mediators to implement a ceasefire plan for Gaza put forward by US President Joe Biden, instead of holding "more negotiations".

In their statement, the three European leaders also urged Iran and its allies "to refrain from attacks that would further escalate regional tensions and jeopardise the opportunity to agree a ceasefire and the release of hostages."

STAR REPORT

Four top police officials, including former Special Branch chief Md Monirul Islam and ex-Dhaka Metropolitan Police commissioner Md Habibur Rahman, were sent into forced retirement yesterday.

The other two officials are Rangpur Metropolitan Police Commissioner Md Moniruzzaman and Rangpur Range Deputy Inspector General Abdul Baten. The two were in command on July 16 when police shot dead Begum Rokeya University student Abu Sayed in Rangpur.

A video showed Sayed, an organiser of the quota reform protest, being shot while holding a stick at the university gate.

Earlier yesterday, Monirul, an additional inspector general of police, was transferred to the Police Headquarters. Two days ago, Habibur was attached to the PHQ.

The police department yesterday underwent another major shakeup with 65 key officials transferred and given new postings.

Among them are the chief of the Criminal Investigation Department, key officials in the PHQ, the deputy commissioners of 15 out of the 16 crime divisions of DMP and the Detective Branch, and the officers-in-charge of 18 police stations in the capital.

Many of these officials had jurisdiction over the areas where the police recently opened indiscriminate fire on the quota reform protesters.

She also demanded that the culprits be identified and brought to justice.

Sajeeb Wazed Joy, Hasina's son, posted her statement on his verified Facebook page last night.

Decides meeting between advisers, parties; confusion remains over observance of Nat'l Mourning Day

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The advisory council of the interim government yesterday took the decision that there would be no national holiday on August 15.

"The decision to cancel the national holiday on August 15 was taken unanimously after a discussion with the council of advisers and political parties," said a press release sent from the Chief Adviser's Office.

The development comes after seven political parties in separate meetings with Prof Muhammad Yunus, the chief adviser of the interim government, on Monday conveyed that August 15 should not be observed as a day of mourning and the public holiday is not needed.

The seven parties include BNP, Jamaat-e-Islami, Amar Bangladesh Party, two factions of Gono Adhikar Parishad, Bangladesh Jatiya Party (Partha) and the National Democratic Movement.

However, it is still not clear whether August 15 would be observed as the National Mourning Day, which was introduced by the government of then prime minister Sheikh Hasina on August 8, 1996.

On August 15, 1975, Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman was assassinated along with most of his family members in a military coup led by a group of disgruntled army officers.

Following the Awami League government's decision, August 15 was used to be observed with due respect at

Biman syndicate hiked ticket prices

Says civil aviation probe; several travel agencies main beneficiaries

ZYMA ISLAM

The civil aviation ministry has found several Biman officials, including high-ups, fully responsible for the syndicate that artificially hiked the prices of flight tickets to Malaysia in May this year.

It also found that tickets were being blocked in the names of its former minister Lt Col Muhammad Faruk Khan and the airlines' former managing director Shafiul Azim.

The officials found to be running the syndicate also implicated Mohammad Salauddin, marketing director of Biman (currently on post-retirement leave) in their statements to the ministry-led committee.

The committee also found his involvement "beyond doubt".

It issued a report, which was signed by the ministry's Additional Secretary Fatema Rahim Veena, Joint Secretary Anup Kumar Talukdar and Deputy Secretary Ahmed Jamil on July 7.

"The last date for sending workers to Malaysia was May 31, 2024. Ticket prices for Biman flights shot up abnormally during that time," said the report.

"Between April 15, 2024, and May 31, 2024, the ticket price of an economy class seat on a Biman flight between Dhaka and Kuala Lumpur rose from Tk 20,475 to Tk 73,710 [excluding taxes]."

Biman had operated seven regular and eight special flights during that period.

The price hike led to planes flying with empty seats even as migrant workers, who were trying to get to Malaysia, despaired at the airport.

JULY 19 POLICE FIRING

Hasina sued over death of shop owner

Quader, Asaduzzaman, ex-IGP, former DB chief among other 6 accused

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Former prime minister Sheikh Hasina and six others have been sued over the death of grocery shop owner Abu Sayed in police firing in the capital's Mohammadpur area during quota reform protests on July 19.

The other accused are Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader, former home minister Asaduzzaman Khan, former inspector general of police Chowdhury Abdullah Al Mamun, former DB (Dhaka Metropolitan Police) chief Harun Or Rashid, former DMP commissioner Habibur Rahman, and former DMP joint commissioner Biplob Kumar Sarker.

SM Amir Hamza Shatil, a resident of Mohammadpur, yesterday filed the murder case with the court of Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Rajesh Chowdhury.

This is the first case lodged against Hasina after she resigned and went to India amid an uprising on August 5.

After a hearing, the magistrate recorded the complainant's statement and directed the officer-in-charge of Mohammadpur Police Station to register the complaint as a first information report (FIR).

In the case, several unnamed top police officials and other government officials have also been accused, Mamun Mia, a lawyer for the complainant, told The Daily Star.

'Gave shelter to AL leaders whose lives in danger'

Says Army chief

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Army Chief General Waker-Uz-Zaman yesterday said they gave shelter to some influential people from the ousted Awami League government as their lives were in danger.

He also said they gave shelter to people irrespective of their party affiliation, opinion and religion.

"If there is any allegation against them, any case is filed, they will be punished. But of course, we don't want any attack or extrajudicial action [against them]. We have given them shelter because of the threat to their lives," he said replying to a query.

Waker-Uz-Zaman was speaking at Rajshahi Cantonment where he met with officials of army, police, and the civil administration.

Asked about any possibility of a counter-revolution, the army chief said he had no knowledge of it.

Enquired about any pressure from foreign nations regarding the prevailing situation, he replied in the negative.

117 govt officials elevated to rank of deputy secretary

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

In the latest reshuffle in the public administration, the government has promoted 117 government officials to the rank of deputy secretary.

The Ministry of Public Administration issued a notification to this effect yesterday.

The promotions that these officers received are retroactive, meaning that they take effect from the date they became eligible. This also means these officers are entitled to retrospective financial benefits.

According to the notification, the promoted officers can submit their joining letters to the public administration ministry in person or by e-mail.

If an officer's place of employment has changed from the one specified in the promotion order, the officer in question must mention it in their joining letter.

The notification further states that the authority reserves the right to modify or revoke the order if any contrary or unfavourable information is found against any officer in future.

the state level with the national flag flying at half-mast all over the country and at Bangladesh missions abroad.

But on August 8, 2002, then BNP-led four-party alliance government issued an order cancelling the observance of National Mourning Day and a public holiday on August 15.

However, a High Court order in July 2008 revoked the order of the immediate past government and the day has been observed as National Mourning Day since.

At the meeting held at the State Guesthouse Jamuna yesterday, the advisory council also decided to abolish the provision of Bangladesh Bank Order 1972 that set the highest age limit for the appointment of the central bank governor at 67 years.

The age limit creates obstacles in appointing a person with expertise and experience for the post. In many Asian countries, including neighbouring India and Sri Lanka, there is no mention of the maximum age limit for the post of central bank governor, the press statement said.

The decision was made to pave the way for Ahsan H Mansur to become the next BB governor. Mansur, the executive director of the Policy Research Institute, is 72 years and eight months old.

The advisory council of the interim government adopted a condolence motion in honour of the martyrs who sacrificed their lives during the mass uprising of students and the public.

A committee will be formed under the initiative of the Health Services Division, comprising representatives from the Anti-discrimination Student Movement, the Finance Division and the relevant ministries and departments, to provide medical treatment to the injured and support to the families of the martyrs.

The committee will draft a policy for providing medical treatment to the injured and support to the families of the martyrs.

Additionally, it will prepare a comprehensive list identifying the martyrs and the injured individuals.

More than 400 people, including students and police personnel, were killed in the violence centring the students' quota reform protests that later took the form of a mass uprising. Several thousands of protestors were injured, too.

Hasina sued

The complainant was not the relative of the victim, he filed the case voluntarily, he added.

In his complaint, Shatil mentioned that Sayed was killed around 4:00pm on July 19 when police were firing indiscriminately on the protesters, following the accused's directives.

Former home minister Asaduzzaman ordered police to open fire on the demonstrators, read the complaint.

The victim's family members, who are very poor, live in Boda upazila of Panchagarh. They do not have the ability to file the case, he mentioned in the complaint.

Meanwhile, leaders and activists of AL and its associated bodies yesterday took out a procession in Gopalganj town to protest the filing of the murder case against AL President Hasina and other leaders.

Several thousand AL men joined the procession that started from the district AL office in Bankpara area. After parading different roads in the town, the programme ended in Chowrangi area.

Biman syndicate hiked ticket prices

it to the southeast Asian country in time before the gate closed, as their recruiting agencies could not manage their tickets.

"During that period, Biman's website showed that all tickets were sold out. However, at that time Biman's sales counters were not selling any tickets for any of the flights other than the special flight scheduled for May 31, 2024," said the report.

Travel agents book tickets from a platform called the global distribution system (GDS) – a system that links reservation inventory under one computer-based network.

When a flight is opened for booking on the system, all travel agents registered with it get a notification alerting them so they can start booking tickets.

The ministry report, however, found that even before the notification was sent out, Biman officials blocked seats -- often all of them on a single plane -- to favour 14 specific travel agencies. These agencies then sold those tickets at exorbitant prices, several times higher than Biman's official prices, and kept the difference for themselves.

The travel agencies are Gemini Travels Ltd; Safar Travels & Tourism; East West Travels & Tours Pvt Ltd; Kazi Aid International Pvt Ltd; Valencia Air Travels & Tours Ltd; Xpress Travel Holidays; Travel Zone; Seri Mechan Travel; Triplover Ltd; Sunshine Travel Air International; Flyover Tours & Travels; Sadia Travels; Globe Travel Service (Bangladesh), and Travelchamp Ltd.

A total of 480 travel agencies are registered with Biman.

All of the seats of BG9087 and BG382 flights, which flew from Dhaka to Kuala Lumpur on May 27, 29 and 30, were blocked out for these travel agencies.

"A total of 1,146 out of 2,150 seats from five of the seven flights conducted were blocked from Biman's central reservation department, and the PNRs [booking reference numbers] were distributed to certain travel agencies," said the report.

"As a result, the other travel agencies were deprived of equal access to those tickets. This also meant the selected travel agencies got the chance to artificially increase the ticket prices of those seats."

Only two tickets were sold from Biman's ticket counters until May 30, said the report.

During the investigation, the committee also came across a snapshot showing 91 tickets were booked with the reference of former minister Lt Col Muhammad Faruk Khan and Biman's former managing director Shafiul Azim. The MD's official phone number was used for the booking.

The committee included the snapshot in the report.

A group booking reference for 90 seats for flight BG9086, slated to fly on May 27, 2024, was generated in their names by Golam Mostafa, a manager of Biman's Revenue Management System Department, at 5:28am on May 26, 2024.

However, no tickets were generated, found the investigators. Instead, one more seat booking was added, and then the seats were distributed to two travel agencies called Gemini Travels Ltd and Flyover Tours & Travels Ltd, who got 51 and 40 seats respectively. Biman's Deputy Director (commercial) Tabibur Rahman distributed the seats.

Former Biman MD Shafiul Azim expressed shock that his and the former minister's names and his phone number were used to block tickets in bulk. "The minister had asked us to take steps to ensure that migrant workers trying to go to Malaysia could get tickets. I had instructed the marketing director in good faith to ensure that workers get tickets. I didn't realise the staffers would do this," said Azim, currently the Election Commission secretary.

Former civil aviation minister Lt Col Faruk Khan was contacted via phone and text message but was unreachable as of the filing of this report around 9:30pm.

The ministry-led committee also detailed how Biman officials logged in together at the dead of the night to manually block seats.

The flight information of BG382, which was scheduled to fly on May 30, was published at 12:04am on May 24.

By 12:15am, Mohammad Hasan Ahmed, an operation controller from Biman's Revenue Management System Department, had manually blocked 206 seats.

He was joined by Manager (commercial) Golam Mostafa and Assistant Manager (commercial) Farhana Akhter, and by 2:21am, 329 seats were blocked.

Between 7:04am and 7:08am, Md Tabibur Rahman blocked 63 more seats, the report stated.

Golam Mostafa claimed the rules and policies were followed to the dot and nothing abnormal happened.

The report added that if Biman had sold the tickets for the two May 30 flights from its own sales counters, instead of blocking them for the chosen travel agents, the airlines could have saved Tk 8.23 lakh just on this one flight.

The ministry also scrutinised two more such flights, including one where the booking reference was created using the MD's phone number, and found that the national flag carrier could have saved Tk 14.2 lakh on these flights if their officials did not block the seats.

The committee found that Biman officials also overbooked the entire flight up to one and a half times to favour the aforementioned travel agencies.

The overbooking of tickets is an internationally accepted practice. This is done to avoid empty seats in case of passenger no-shows and last-minute cancellations.

The number of tickets to be overbooked depends on the historical trends of the number of seats that go empty on that particular flight.

However, as many as 100 seats on the BG382 flight on May 29, 2024, were overbooked, according to the report. A total of 373 tickets were booked manually by Biman officials against 271 seats.

In spite of this level of manual overbooking, the plane flew with eight empty seats even in peak season, implying that they did not find customers willing to pay the inflated prices of the tickets.

The same thing happened on May 30, 2024, when 392 seats were manually blocked by Biman against 298 seats, and the plane flew with several empty seats.

The ministry found that complaints were filed about Farhana and Tabibur multiple times and they were proven guilty of ticket syndicating in the past by Biman, but the airlines took no action against them.

Instead, Tabibur was even recruited contractually after his retirement.

Contacted, he denied the allegations.

Farhana said that in her rank, she does not even have the system access needed to overbook such flights. She expressed shock at the ministry's findings. When relayed specific examples of how chunks of tickets were blocked by her ID, she said she has no idea how it happened because she does not have the necessary permissions to do so.

The ministry-led committee's report also found that the marketing and sales head Mohammed Salauddin did not intervene when his direct subordinates were blocking tickets and overbooking every single day.

"He supported the corruption of his team and it is mandatory to take disciplinary action against him," it said.

'We're one family, no room for division' afternoon.

Law, Justice, and Parliamentary Affairs Adviser Asif Nazrul, Religious Affairs Adviser AFM Khalid Hossain and leaders of the Hindu community were present, reports BSS.

The chief adviser exchanged views with the leaders of Hindu community.

Calling upon all to keep patience and remain united, he said establishing justice is one of the main goals of this government.

Prof Yunus said, "We are going to build Bangladesh that would be like a family. This is the main thing. There will be no question of creating any difference or division in this family. We are Bangladeshis."

He assured the Hindu community that if justice is established, everyone will get its benefit.

"Is there any scope to see who belongs to which religion, caste, and community? ... There is one law. Who have the ability to create any division here?" he said.

Urging all to help the interim government, he said all Bangladeshis have equal rights and they deserve it as per the country's constitution.

"You should place this demand before all governments .... We are the same people, have the same rights. No difference could be made in this regard. Help us and keep patience. Judge later whether we have done anything for you or not," said Prof Yunus.

The leaders of Hindu community demanded that the interim government form a commission to hold trial for the repression and discrimination against the Hindu people over the last 53 years.

In another development, leaders of different organisations of minority communities said the chief adviser assured them of safety.

They made the remarks after a meeting with Prof Yunus at the latter's official residence Jamuna yesterday.

They, however, said they will remain vigilant until the promises made by the interim government are implemented.

Rana Dasgupta, general secretary of Bangladesh-Hindu-Bouddha-Christian Oikya Parishad, said violence against Hindus that began on August 5 continues in different districts.

"This government wants to create an environment that can restore confidence in the people of Bangladesh of communal harmony. Not everything is possible for this interim government, but it must take steps to address some issues. They [interim government] told us that they will start the work," he said.

Santosh Sharma, general secretary of Bangladesh Puja Udjapan Parishad, said, "Dr Yunus said that he wants to build a state where temples won't be required to guard again. We are hopeful about his statement."

Charu Chandra Prabhu, general secretary of ISKCON Bangladesh, said they are optimistic about the chief adviser's assurance that the minorities in Bangladesh will live in peace and harmony.

Subrata Chowdhury, presidium member of Bangladesh-Hindu-Bouddha-Christian Oikya Parishad, said they are hopeful that the interim government will try to restore peace and order.

The demands placed by the Oikya Parishad during the meeting include the enactment of a minority protection act, formation of a national minority commission and minority ministry, and ensuring proportional representation and participation in the government, parliament, and all representative bodies based on ratio of the population.

Salman, Anisul arrested in Sadarghat

Police did not say where Salman and Anisul were headed for.

The duo were arrested on the charges of instigating the killing of Dhaka College student Sabuj Ali, 26, on July 16, said sources.

Sabuj's elder brother Nurnabi filed the case on July 17, accusing unnamed people after he identified Sabuj's body at Dhaka Medical College morgue.

According to the first information report (FIR), Nurnabi learned around 3:00pm on July 17 that his brother Sabuj was admitted to Dhaka Medical College Hospital with serious injuries.

Nurnabi then went to the hospital and found Sabuj's body.

The FIR mentioned that Sabuj's classmates told Nurnabi that BNP-Jamaat activists had beaten up Sabuj near Dhaka College around 4:15pm on July 16.

The students demanding reforms to quotas in government jobs were joined by BNP-Jamaat men carrying sticks and iron rods near the Science Lab and were setting fire to different establishments, said the FIR.

The BNP-Jamaat men beat him up near the Globe Shopping Centre, leaving him seriously wounded.

Passersby took Sabuj to the DMCH where doctors pronounced him dead around 5:15pm, the FIR added.

Over 550 people, including students and police personnel, were killed in violence during the student protests that turned into a mass uprising which toppled the Sheikh Hasina-led government last week.

Salman was a lawmaker from Dohar and vice-chairman of the Beximco Group. He is also the chairman of IFIC Bank and holds key positions in many business associations.

He was considered as one of the influential figures among the policymakers in the Awami League government.

Anisul, a reputed lawyer, was the law minister for three consecutive terms after 2014.

Before that, he was the chief counsel and special prosecutor for the Anti-Corruption Commission, and the chief prosecutor for the Pilkhana carnage case.

His father Serajul Huq was a prominent organiser of the Liberation War in 1971. Anisul was the chief special prosecutor for both the Bangabandhu Murder Case and the Jail Killing case.

He was one of the few cabinet members of the immediate past government who tried to diffuse the student protests for quota reform.

Major shakeup in the police

Almost all the DCs and OCs had been serving in "lucrative" commanding positions in the capital for many years. Many of them were transferred to different districts far away from Dhaka, said police sources.

The home ministry and the PHQ issued separate circulars in this regard, transferring the 58 officials ranging from the ranks of additional inspector general of police to inspector.

The PHQ in a press release said a total of 634 out of the 639 police stations across the country resumed operations until yesterday.

Md Shah Alam, DIG of Railway Police, was made the chief of SB. Additional IGP Mohammad Ali Mia, chief of CID, was transferred to the PHQ and another Additional IGP Tawfiq Mahbub Chowdhury was made the chief of Police Bureau of Investigation.

Additional IGP Anwar Hossain, who was serving as DIG (operations) at the PHQ, was transferred to the specialised training centre of Armed Police Battalion in Khagrachhari.

Earlier, the interim government changed the IGP, director general of Rapid Action Battalion and Dhaka Metropolitan Police commissioner. The interim government, led by Prof Muhammad Yunus, took office on August 8 following the ouster of Sheikh Hasina's government.

Sources in the police said the officers transferred were known to be close to the previous Awami League government. The force was heavily politicised during the tenures of the three successive governments led by Hasina.

A section of opportunistic and ambitious police officials extensively used the force to implement AL's agendas.

These officials played roles in excessive use of force, reckless firing on the quota reform protesters, and persecution of opposition leaders over the years. That is why police came under widespread attacks from mobs after the fall of the Hasina government, the sources added.

More than 400 people, including 42 police personnel, were killed in clashes during the quota reform protest.

Amid such a situation, anger gripped different levels of the police, particularly the force members from the ranks of constable to sub-inspector. They claimed that police personnel used excessive force during the recent student movement following the orders of the senior officials. This triggered anger among the people, leading to the cops coming under mob attacks.

Police personnel even called strike demanding punishment for the senior officials responsible for issuing orders, and formation of a commission to run the force. They also called for changing police's uniform and logo due to the mistrust that has grown among people for the forcer's recent activities.

Yesterday, the PHQ formed a 10-member committee to change police's uniform and logo.

999 now fully operational

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The national emergency helpline number 999, which was disrupted due to the absence of police personnel since August 6, is now functioning at full capacity.

Mohammad Tabarak Ullah, additional deputy inspector general of police and chief of the 999 service, confirmed this to The Daily Star.

The 999 service did not stop on August 6, but it was running on a limited scale, he said.

"We could not provide service as there was no police personnel in stations across the country. Since police have resumed work at almost all the stations on Monday, we are now providing the 999 service in full swing," he said.

Police members remained absent from their stations since August 6, a day after Sheikh Hasina resigned and fled the country amid a mass protest.

They feared violent reprisals as several hundred protesters were killed due to indiscriminate firing by many of their colleagues along with BGB members.

Besides, at least 42 police personnel were also killed during the clashes that took place between July 16 and August 6 across the country.

VICTIMS OF ENFORCED DISAPPEARANCE

Yunus opens his door for the families

Listens to their despair; says govt must act on it

BAHARAM KHAN

Chief Adviser to the interim government Prof Muhammad Yunus yesterday expressed deep concern after hearing the distressing accounts of families whose loved ones have gone missing at different times.

In a state of disbelief, he remarked, "Can people harm others like this?"

The chief adviser said this at a meeting with members of Mayer Daak, a platform for the families of victims of enforced disappearances, at the State Guesthouse Jamuna, his official residence, around 8:30pm.

The platform said more than 400 such families are associated with Mayer Daak.

Acknowledging the critical role these families played in bringing the government to power, Dr Yunus said, "This government exists because of you. If it doesn't address your issues, what is its purpose? This government has a responsibility to you, and it must act on these matters."

He further added, "You have done a brave thing by standing up. If you hadn't taken to the streets, people wouldn't have known."

During the conversation, Yunus asked the families how long they had been advocating for justice. The victims responded that they had been fighting for 11 years.

Sanjida Islam Tuli, the coordinator of Mayer Daak, said, "Our family members haven't just disappeared; many of us have been harassed by various organisations.

The students of the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement bring out a road march in Chattogram city's Sholosahar area yesterday as part of their "Resistance Week" programme to press home their four-point demand. attempted to leave the college for lunch, JCD members allegedly assaulted them.

Later, at 1:00pm, Rajshahi city BNP senior joint convener Nazmul Huda, along with Limon and other party leaders, entered the principal's office and pressured her to resign.

This correspondent was present in the principal's room from 12:45pm to 1:45pm.

Despite initially resisting, Prof Amina ultimately signed the resignation paper at 1:30pm after JCD men allegedly ousted her husband from the office and attempted to pick up her son.

Prof Amina said she became the principal based on her own merit and felt she had no choice but to resign to protect her family.

"I did not have any other way but to resign as the BNP and Chhatra Dal men attempted to beat my husband and son," she said.

When contacted, BNP leader Nazmul Huda claimed he went to the campus as a "non-political person" to resolve the issue and ensure Prof Amina's safety.

JCD leader Emdadul Haque did not respond to repeated phone calls from this correspondent.

also instructed the unit officials to remain on alert so that no unwanted incidents can take place.

Rezaul Karim, deputy inspector general (operations) of the PHQ, said, "There is no specific threat or risk centring August 15, but police will remain on high alert to avert any kind of unwanted incidents."

On August 10, three officers, a junior commissioned officer, and five other army personnel were injured when protesters attacked army patrol teams with sharp weapons at Gopinathpur of Gopalganj Sadar.

According to a press release sent by the Inter-Services Public Relations Directorate (ISPR), two patrol teams of the army went to the spot after protesters blocked the Gopalganj-Dhaka highway.

The teams were attacked with locally made weapons, it said. The protesters also hurled brick chunks at the teams. An army vehicle was set alight and another two were vandalised.

According to the ISPR, the army patrol team fired four shots to disperse the protesters and bring the situation under control.

Additional troops have been deployed in the area, it said, adding that the injured army personnel were out of danger and undergoing treatment.

Mayor Khaleque's six-storey residence in ward 22 was seen completely destroyed.

Shaukat Ali, a KCC employee, said, "The mayor has not returned yet. All the belongings have been looted. Only debris remains."

Lashkar Tajul Islam, chief executive officer of KCC, acknowledged that city dwellers have been facing significant challenges due to the suspension of KCC services in the absence of the mayor and councillors.

"We are exploring different ways to keep the councillors' offices operational," he added.

"Some were forced to sign blank papers claiming that no one was missing, only that they had gone on a trip."

The families also shared their stories of uncertainty and despair, how children born after their fathers were taken have never known if their fathers are alive.

"Many women don't know whether they are widows or if their husbands are still alive," Tuli said.

Another woman spoke of the fleeting hope they felt when reports emerged about the return of some missing persons after the government's fall on August 5.

She said, "Relatives were anxiously calling for information. I can't even describe what we're going through."

The family members demanded interrogation of the recently dismissed Lt Gen Ziaul Ahsan.

The families demanded a probe into the recently dismissed Ziaul Ahsan, who was arrested on August 7. Ziaul, who has been linked to many controversies, was director general of National Telecommunication Monitoring Center since 2022 and held significant positions in Rab starting in 2009.

Prof Yunus asked the families if they felt safer under the new government. One family member responded that they remain in mental trauma.

The meeting, which lasted about 25 minutes, was attended by seven to eight family members.

Adilur Rahman Khan, adviser to the Ministry of Industry; LGRD Adviser Hasan Arif; and Fisheries and Livestock Adviser Farida Akhtar, among others, were present.

In the afternoon, around 25 family members of victims of enforced disappearances, along with others, demonstrated in front of the Jamuna, to demand the return of their loved ones. They alleged that their family members were being held at "Aynaghar" (House of Mirrors), a detention facility where victims of enforced disappearances were kept during Hasina's regime.

On August 6, a day after Hasina's fall, members of Mayer Daak gathered in front of the DGFI office to know whereabouts of their missing relatives. At least three victims were released.

The next day, DGFI said there were no detainees in their Dhaka facility.

KCC services in a shambles

Mayor, councillors on the run

DIPANKAR ROY, Khulna

Most of the councillors' offices in the 31 wards of Khulna City Corporation have remained locked following a spree of vandalism and looting after Sheikh Hasina's resignation on August 5.

KCC Mayor Talukdar Abdul Khaleque, along with most ward councillors, have gone into hiding.

The absence of the mayor and councillors has led to a near-complete standstill of city services. Residents are struggling to obtain necessary certificates and documents.

On Monday morning, the office of the ward 9 councillor in Mujgunni was found padlocked. Councillor Md Mahfuzur Rahman Liton has been unavailable since August 5.

Inside the office, a few individuals were seen cleaning up dirt and broken glass, with the office secretary supervising the efforts.

This scene is echoed across the city, with almost all councillors unavailable and most staffers not reporting to work.

"I came to correct my son's birth certificate but couldn't get it done because Councillor Sheikh Shamsuddin Ahmed Prince did not come to the office," said Abdur Rob, a resident of ward 6.

Imamul Haque Masuk, another resident, shared a similar plight.

He visited both the ward 9 councillor's office and the mayor's office to obtain an inheritance certificate but failed to do so.

"I need to settle this urgently before I leave for Italy next week," he said.

Meanwhile, a few councillors and KCC officials were seen doing their best to restore some sort of normalcy.

They said waste management operations, which have been halted for several days, will resume soon.

At the ward 27 councillor's office, Jamal Hossain, a staffer, was seen overseeing the immunisation programme for newborns, which was being conducted on the ground floor.

"The ward councillor, secretary, and other officials are not coming to the office. It needs to be open for the immunisation programme, so I am here," he said.

A similar situation was observed at the ward 23 councillor's office on Sir Iqbal Road.

An employee said Councillor Imam Hasan Chowdhury is still in the area and is patrolling nightly to ensure residents' safety.

RAJSHAHI GOVT CITY COLLEGE

JCD men attack principal, force her to resign

A CORRESPONDENT, Rajshahi

Activists of Jatiyatabadi Chhatra Dal (JCD), a pro-BNP student organisation, allegedly assaulted and forced Rajshahi Government City College Principal Prof Amina Abedin to resign from her post yesterday.

According to witnesses, a group of students met Prof Amina in the morning, requesting her to ban political activities on the college campus.

After she assured them of implementing such a ban, a group of activists, led by the college unit of JCD joint convener Emdadul Haque Limon, entered the campus and began demonstrating, demanding her immediate resignation.

When the principal refused, the group issued a one-hour ultimatum for her to step down.

At 12:30pm, as Prof Amina, accompanied by her husband and son,

Passenger trains resume operations

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Local, commuter, and mail trains across the country resumed operations yesterday after suspension of 25 days, said Bangladesh Railway.

Inter-city trains will resume from Thursday. The resumption comes after a turbulent period of agitation and violence across the country in the last few weeks. Freight trains started running from Monday.

Officials at Kamalapur Railway Station said the Balaka, Dewanganj Commuter, Narayanganj Commuter, Mahua Express, Turag, Karnaphuli, and Titas Commuter trains left from Dhaka in the morning. Similarly, scheduled trains are coming towards Dhaka from different parts of the country.

The decision was taken at a meeting at Rail Bhaban on Sunday, the first working day of the interim government.

On July 16, railway tracks were blocked during protests over quota reformation in government jobs.

Law enforcers on alert for Aug 15

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN

Law enforcers have increased countrywide surveillance ahead of August 15, as no anarchy or subversive activities will be tolerated in the name of holding programmes on that day, according to sources in the police.

Along with the police, members of the armed forces divisions will also remain on the field to ensure security.

"There will be a heavy presence of police so that no one can cause any violence," Home Affairs Adviser Brig Gen (retd) M Sakhawat Hussain said yesterday in reply to a query regarding a tense situation prevailing centring the observance of August 15.

Addressing reporters at the Border Guard Bangladesh (BGB) headquarters, he said, "We will ensure all protection. We have already spoken with the DG [director general] of BGB... There will also be Rapid Action Battalion, alongside the police."

According to sources, grassroots activists and supporters of Awami League plan to pay tribute to Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman on National Mourning Day this Thursday across the country.

Some of the former Chhatra League leaders and a section of the party grassroots have already taken the initiative to pay tribute to Sheikh Mujibur Rahman at the Bangabandhu Memorial Museum on Dhanmondi 32, which was attacked and set on fire after the fall of the AL government on August 5, sources added.

But no one has sought any permission from Dhaka Metropolitan Police (DMP) yet to hold any programme or rally on August 15, DMP Commissioner Mainul Hasan told The Daily Star yesterday.

Asked about surveillance, he said the police in the capital had started working but were not able to start operations in full fledge yet.

"For this reason, we will be on duty along with the officials of the armed forces to ensure security," added the DMP chief.

Drik reopens its doors to 'Bangladesh Press Photo Contest 2024'

HONOURABLE MENTION

The exhibition is currently open for visitors from 3pm to 8pm until August 16 on the second floor of the capital's DrikPath Bhobon.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT DESK

In the wake of two triumphant editions, the third edition of the exhibition of the principal local event celebrating the practice of photojournalism in the country, the Bangladesh Press Photo Contest 2024, lifted its curtains on July 5.

The exhibition ran until July 26 on the second floor of DrikPath Bhobon in the capital city.

Neatly curated by veteran ASM Rezaur Rahman, even without a single line of caption on the gallery walls, one could effortlessly relate to the silent yet atmospheric reverberation of the photographs. These images adorning the gallery's walls capture snippets of life in Bangladesh, from recaps of resilience to the messes we've created, depicting lives that go on but also leave questions.

"An important aspect of this event is the wide participation of photojournalism practitioners from all over the country, bursting the Dhaka-based bubble that most of us get to typically see. As a curator, it is a refreshing experience to witness more local stories through their eyes," said Rezaur Rahman to The Daily Star at the inaugural event.

Another important aspect that perfectly captures the spirit of this event is the Indigenous Community Grant, where the grant winner will receive funding and mentorship to develop a photographic work, and this year's winner is Denim Chakma from Rangamati. On that note, the exhibition is also showcasing last year's winner Paddmini Chakma's work, Do You Really See Me? and her photo story is arguably the highlight of this year's exhibition.

"This grant should be continued and is very important for those who come from difficult societal situations... If I hadn't received this grant, I wouldn't even have started this project! And I am immensely grateful to my mentor, Jannatul Mawa," said the shy yet brave-eyed Paddmini Chakma to The Daily Star.

The exhibition is currently open for visitors from 3pm to 8pm until August 16 on the second floor of the capital's DrikPath Bhobon.

Meanwhile, another exhibition titled Rebellion in Cartoons will kick off on August 16 at 5pm at Drik Gallery. The event aims to showcase a remarkable collection of artworks that emerged from recent anti-discrimination student movement.

The exhibition brings together a diverse array of cartoons and graffiti that played a crucial role in the recent anti-discrimination protests. These visual works, which spread like wildfire across both digital and physical spaces, reflect the courage and defiance of a generation that refused to be silenced.

"As fear was imposed, it was met with an equally fierce resistance. Cartoonists, both seasoned and novice, used their art to voice their opinions and ignite public discourse. Some of these artworks were shared widely on social media, while others adorned the pages of newspapers. In an unprecedented move, many artists chose to remain anonymous, allowing their work to speak for itself and resonate with a broader audience," wrote Mehedi Haque, cartoonist and Dhaka Comics' publisher, on his official Facebook handle while announcing the exhibition.

Organised by the Bangladesh Cartoonist Association in collaboration with Drik and Earki, the exhibition will run daily from 3pm to 8pm until August 23.

Gaan Bangla resumes operation

On August 4, Gaan Bangla, the country's sole music-focused channel, was vandalised and looted, leading to a halt in broadcasting. Its managing director Kaushik Hossain Taposh shared the news and photos of the damage on his Facebook page.

Now, Gaan Bangla has officially resumed operations and is again offering its content, including soothing music from Wind of Change and international music videos.

Taposh shared the news on his social media account via a video still from Gaan Bangla with the caption, "Welcome Back! Let's keep spreading the magic of music."

An Adani Group spokesperson did not immediately respond to a request seeking comment.

A senior industry official said the move is intended to protect Indian interests, including energy security.

"If a plant has idling capacity and the country needs power, why should you stop it supplying to the local grid? It is also Indian banks who paid for it," said the official, who declined to be identified as he was not authorised to speak on the issue.

we are alarmed at the reports of attacks that have taken place," he said.

He made the comment when asked about the UN's position on the killings of three journalists and the injuries of many during the student movement.

Even after the fall of the Awami League government on August 5, the media and many journalists were attacked. The rooms of the president and secretary of the National Press Club in Dhaka have been ransacked.

He was also asked if the UN has any information on how long the interim government of Bangladesh will remain in place.

"We are in touch with the current transitional body, and we hope that there will continue to be an open, inclusive process of government formation and that there can be a quick timetable for the restoration of democratic rule," Haq said.

"We also urged the interim government to seek an UN investigation," he added.

Besides, BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir told a rally in Saidpur, Nilphamari, that the Awami League was attacking Hindu people and their properties to tarnish Bangladesh's image.

He urged the general public to be vigilant against such conspiracies.

"They are trying to create chaos by falsely accusing others of attacking the Hindu community. Hindu, Muslim, Buddhist, and Christians -- we all are free citizens of this independent country," he added.

3. Immediate removal and prosecution of those in the administration and judiciary who legitimised attacks and cases against students and the general public, and those who repeatedly attempted to establish a fascist regime.

4. Equal opportunities must be ensured soon for those who have been victims of discrimination within the administration and judiciary until now.

As part of the "Resistance Week" programme, there will be a road march today on the points where students were killed during the quota reform movement and subsequent anti-government protests across the country.

After gathering at specific points during the road march, the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement will observe a one-minute silence and pray for the students and people who were killed during the movement.

34 STUDENT BODIES MEET

Thirty-four student organisations, except Chhatra League, in a meeting on Monday night arrived at the opinion that the National Mourning Day on August 15 should not be observed at the state level.

Nahid Islam and Asif Mahmud, the youngest advisers to the interim government, were present at the meeting held at the TSC auditorium at Dhaka University.

The organisations also reached a consensus about remaining "united" with the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement to thwart any "conspiracy" against the interim government formed through the student movement.

Apart from Nahid and Asif, two key coordinators of the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement, the platform that spearheaded the recent quota reform protest, members of its liaison committee also participated in the meeting.

Leaders of student organisations including Jatiyatabadi Chhatra Dal (JCD), Chhatra Federation, Chhatra Union, Samajtantrik Chhatra Front, Gonotantrik Chhatra Shakti, Islami Chhatra Shibir, Islami Chhatra Andolon, Khilafat Chhatra Majlis took part in the meeting.

After the meeting, several student leaders told The Daily Star that the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement pledged that it would be dissolved as soon as the purpose of the movement was fulfilled.

They also discussed how the student movement would be conducted in the coming days, with most leaders opining against banning student politics on university campus.

July 2020 to accommodate the re-appointment of then-governor Fazle Kabir.

The law ministry has issued a notification eliminating the age limit provision, clearing the way for Mansur's appointment.

Mansur, also the executive director of the Policy Research Institute, has been appointed for four years, according to a notification issued by the Financial Institutions Division of the finance ministry yesterday.

"Inflation containment is one of my major priorities," he told The Daily Star after being confirmed as the new BB governor.

Last month, inflation hit a 13-year high of 11.66 percent, according to data from the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics.

"We have to bring back discipline in the banking sector immediately," said Mansur, a former economist of the International Monetary Fund.

At the end of March, defaulted loans hit a record Tk 182,259 crore, which is 11.11 percent of total outstanding loans, according to data from the BB.

Another priority will be to reduce pressure on the external account and boost forex reserves.

As of July 31, gross foreign reserves stood at $20.5 billion, enough to meet about four months' imports.

"We will prepare a strategy to boost forex reserves. We will identify reform priorities for the financial sector and start implementation," said Mansur, who is expected to join the central bank today.

A former chairman of Brac Bank, Mansur has been critical of the authorities' decision to impose and maintain a 9 percent cap on the interest rate for loans and BB's intervention control over the foreign exchange market and exchange rates.

He has an undergraduate degree in economics from the University of Dhaka and a PhD in economics (on general equilibrium analysis) from the University of Western Ontario.

He joined the IMF in 1981 and served as the mission chief for Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and Oman.

"The BFIU ordered a freeze on the accounts after getting reports of suspicious transactions in their name," the official said.

In a letter, the intelligence unit asked the banks to block all types of withdrawals through individual or business accounts in their names.

In the last three days, BFIU instructed all banks to take similar steps against former foreign minister Hasan Mahmud, his wife Nuran Fatema, and their daughter Nafisa Jumyina Mahmud; Mohammad Ali Arafat, former state minister for information and broadcasting, and his wife Sharmin Mustary; Saifuzzaman Chowdhury Javed, former land minister, and his wife Rukhmila Zaman, who is also the chairman of United Commercial Bank PLC.

She conveyed sympathy to the bereaved families.

In her statement, Hasina also recalled the massacre of August 15, 1975, when Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman and most of his family members were assassinated.

Hasina, the eldest daughter of Bangabandhu, also expressed grief over the vandalism and arson at the Bangabandhu Memorial Museum at Dhanmondi 32 and sought justice from the country's people.

She urged all to observe the National Mourning Day on August 15 in a befitting manner by placing floral wreaths at Bangabandhu Bhaban and offering prayers.

place in 20 districts."

He said they do not want any such incidents to take place.

"We are looking into the incidents. We will bring the criminals to book."

Speaking about the situation in Rahshahi division, Waker-Uz-Zaman said, "Nothing like this [attacks on minority community] happened in the eight districts of Rajshahi division. Such congenial atmosphere should always be maintained. We will all work together and take the country towards development."

The army chief said, "The situation has become normal. But the police are still in trauma. Once it's over, the police will be able to perform their duties properly again.

"Police have already started working in different police stations. We are giving protection to the police. Once they start functioning fully, the situation will become normal. Then we will return to the cantonment," he added.

He said the army will provide all-out support to the government. "The government wants some reform, and to hold a free and fair election. We will provide all sorts of assistance in this regard."

The army chief said many looted arms of police have already been recovered and more will be recovered soon.

Regarding the recent attack on army men in Gopalganj, Waker-Uz-Zaman said it was nothing but a misunderstanding.

"The situation is calm there. We have talked with them. But the crime they have committed must be investigated, and those who were involved will be brought to justice."

Rights offices in Yemen stormed by Houthi rebels: UN

AFP, Geneva

The United Nations said yesterday their human rights offices in Sanaa had been stormed by Yemen's Houthi rebels, with the UN's rights chief demanding they leave immediately and return all seized assets.

On August 3, the Iran-backed Houthis sent a delegation to the UN Human Rights Office's premises in Sanaa and forced staff to hand over the keys. They are still in control of the premises, the Geneva-based office said.

"Entering a UN office without permission and seizing documents and property by force are wholly inconsistent with the privileges and immunities of the United Nations," UN rights chief Volker Turk said in a statement.

"This is also a serious attack on the ability of the UN to perform its mandate, including with respect to the promotion and protection of human rights, which my office is there to defend.

"Ansar Allah forces must leave the premises and return all assets and belongings immediately."

The Houthis are engaged in a long-running civil war that has triggered one of the world's worst humanitarian crises. More than half of the population is dependent on aid in the Arabian Peninsula's poorest country.

The rebels seized control of the capital Sanaa in September 2014, prompting a Saudi-led military intervention on behalf of the government the following March.

In June this year, the Houthis detained 13 UN staff, including six employees of the Human Rights Office, plus more than 50 staff from non-governmental organisations, plus an embassy staff member.

The Houthis claimed they had arrested "an American-Israeli spy network" operating under the cover of humanitarian organisations -- allegations emphatically rejected by the UN Human Rights Office.

Two other UN Human Rights staff had already been detained since November 2021 and August 2023 respectively. They are all being held incommunicado.

"I appeal again, with a heavy heart, for their immediate and unconditional release," said Turk.

‘Concerned’ about civilian deaths in Gaza

Putin tells Abbas

AFP, Moscow

Russian President Vladimir Putin yesterday told Palestinian Authority President Mahmud Abbas that Moscow was “concerned” about civilian deaths in Gaza.

“We are concerned above all about civilian losses,” Putin said, according to images shown on Russian state television. “We are doing everything ... to support Palestine and the Palestinian people,” he said.

The only way to create “long-lasting, reliable, stable peace in the region” is implementation of all UN resolutions and the “creation of a fully-fledged Palestinian state,” he added.

Abbas told Putin: “We feel that Russia is one of the dearest friends of the Palestinian people”.

The leaders held talks after a weekend strike on a Gaza school building left at least 93 people dead, including 11 children, according to the Gaza civil defence agency.

Israel’s military said the raid had “eliminated 31 militants”.

Moscow for years tried to balance relations with all major players in the Middle East -- including Israel and the Palestinians.

But since the Israel’s offensive in Gaza and Russia’s own offensive on Ukraine, Putin has moved closer to Israel’s foes, Hamas and Iran.

The Kremlin has repeatedly criticised Israel’s response to the October 7 attacks and called for restraint.

Israel’s military offensive in the Gaza Strip has killed at least 39,929 Palestinians and wounded 92,240 since October 7, the Palestinian enclave’s health ministry said yesterday.

A total of 32 Palestinians have been killed and 88 wounded in the past 24 hours, the ministry said in a statement.

The United States and its European allies also called for a ceasefire between Israel and Hamas in Gaza, with difficult talks set for tomorrow on halting the conflict.

Extreme heat in Gaza poses new challenge

Say aid groups already hamstrung in their work by Israeli strikes

THOMSON REUTERS FOUNDATION,
Beirut

In Gaza, the sky is full of menace. As well as the missiles that rain down on schools and shelters, the brutal rays of the sun have made the summer unbearable for those struggling to survive in a ravaged landscape of ruins and rubble.

Samaher al-Daour sometimes wishes she had been killed in the early days of the Israel’s offensive rather than have to watch her son, who lost a leg during the conflict, endure the unbearable heat.

“The situation is horrible,” said Daour, 42, as she sat beside her 20-year-old son Haitham in their sweltering tent in the southern city of Khan Younis in June.

“During the day, it is incredibly hot inside and outside the tent,” she said in a telephone interview. “We go to the sea but it is still very difficult.”

Haitham lost his leg in February during an Israeli airstrike on a school run by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian Refugees (UNWRA) in the Maghazi refugee camp in the central Gaza Strip.

Now the stifling heat is denying him the rest he needs to recover his strength. He sweats all the time and this is irritating his leg and making it swell. “He is suffering because of this,” said Daour.

After 10 months of offensive, almost all of Gaza’s 2.3 million people are displaced. They live in tents or overcrowded shelters, and there is almost no electricity and little clean water.

Hungry and weak, they cannot shower and struggle to sleep in their boiling shelters. In the heat, food is rotting, drawing insects and flies to crowded camps where people, who have been forced to flee again and again, now risk heatstroke and other heat-related diseases.

Since April, Gaza has experienced several periods of extreme heat, with temperatures reaching around 40 degrees Celsius during that month. Temperatures throughout August reached an average high of 34 degrees Celcius, according to US private forecaster AccuWeather.

In late June, the World Health Organization said scorching heat could exacerbate health problems for the millions of displaced, warning that a public health crisis was looming due to the lack of clean water, food and medical supplies.

The heat is also making things more difficult for aid agencies, already hamstrung in their work by the airstrikes, fighting and ravaged infrastructure. “It would be fair to say that the majority of humanitarian responders, including donors ... have not really considered the threats of heat and extreme heat,” said Paul Knox Clarke, principal at ADAPT, a climate and humanitarian initiative.

“It has been complicating everything,” said Prabu Selvam, medical officer for the Americares relief agency, adding that the transport of medicines that need to be kept cool was proving particularly challenging.

2 explosions reported near vessels off Yemen

AFP, Dubai

Two ships yesterday reported nearby explosions off the coast of Yemen, maritime security agencies said, though neither event resulted in damage or injuries.

The Red Sea and Gulf of Aden off Yemen have become perilous for shipping with the country’s Houthi rebels, who control the capital Sanaa, attacking vessels in strikes they say are in solidarity with Palestinians in Gaza.

One ship positioned 63 nautical miles southwest of the Yemeni port city of Hodeida reported two nearby explosions early yesterday.

“A small craft was observed in the vicinity acting suspiciously and flashing lights towards the vessel,” the United Kingdom Maritime Trade Operations (UKMTO) said.

The ship was then “attacked by an uncrewed surface vehicle (USV), which was successfully disabled”, the agency said.

Russia strikes back in Kursk region

Halts Ukraine’s advance

REUTERS, Moscow

Russian forces yesterday struck back at Ukrainian troops with missiles, drones and airstrikes in actions that one senior commander said had halted Ukraine’s advance after the biggest attack on sovereign Russian territory since the war began.

Ukrainian soldiers smashed through the Russian border a week ago in a surprise attack that Russian President Vladimir Putin said was aimed at improving Kyiv’s negotiating position ahead of possible talks and slowing the advance of Russian forces along the front.

Ukraine carved out a slice of Russian territory, illustrating the weakness of Russia’s border defences and prompting Moscow to evacuate at least 200,000 people while it rushed in reserves and imposed a security lockdown. Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky said that Russia had to be forced to make peace.

Meanwhile, Ukraine said yesterday it had no interest in occupying territory in Kursk region and that its major cross-border incursion would complicate Russian military logistics and its ability to send more units to fight in Ukraine’s east.

Russian war bloggers reported intense battles across the Kursk front as Ukrainian forces tried to expand their control, though they said Russia was bringing in soldiers and heavy weaponry and had repelled many of the Ukrainian attacks.

Africa’s CDC declares mpox emergency

AFP, Nairobi

The African Union’s health watchdog yesterday declared a public health emergency over the growing mpox outbreak on the continent.

The outbreak has swept through several African countries, particularly the Democratic Republic of Congo.

“With a heavy heart but with an unyielding commitment to our people, to our African citizens, we declare mpox as public health emergency of continental security,” Jean Kaseya, head of the Africa Centres for Disease Control and Prevention (Africa CDC), said during an online media briefing.

“Mpox has now crossed borders, affecting thousands across our continent, families have been torn apart and the pain and suffering have touched every corner of our continent,” he said.

According to CDC data as of August 4, there had been 38,465 cases of mpox and 1,456 deaths in Africa since January 2022.

“This declaration is not merely a formality, it is a clarion call to action. It is a recognition that we can no longer afford to be reactive. We must be proactive and aggressive in our efforts to contain and eliminate this threat,” said Kaseya.

A milder version of the virus spread to over a hundred countries in 2022, largely through sexual contact, prompting the WHO to declare a public health emergency of international concern, its highest level of alert.

Families split by India-Pakistan rivalry lose hope

AFP, Hunderman

The ancient trade route over the Himalayan passes of Hunderman once brought communities together, but the rugged peaks are now used as fortifications by nuclear-armed rivals India and Pakistan.

Indian apricot farmer Ghulam Ahmad, 66, separated from his parents as a teenager in the chaos of war that saw control of his village swap from Pakistan to India, dreams of seeing his mother’s grave.

If the crossing was open, it would be a day’s trek of 50 kilometres (30 miles) to Pakistani territory.

But to visit the site now requires a roundtrip of some 2,500 kilometres (1,550 miles), visa permission that is hard to obtain, and expenses he cannot afford.

“What can we do?” said Ahmad. “Many here have died without meeting, only in hope of meeting.” India and Pakistan have only one tightly restricted border point where people can cross, in Punjab state far to the south, but few do so.

The rivals, who both celebrate their 77th independence day this week, have fought three major wars and countless border conflicts since they were partitioned out of the Indian subcontinent in 1947.

They remain bitterly at odds over control of the restive territory of Kashmir, divided between the two countries and claimed in full by both.

Healthcare staff must return to work

Doctors should rise to the occasion, fulfil their duties

We are concerned about the sweeping absenteeism of doctors, as well as other medical and administrative staff, in healthcare facilities across the country following the fall of the Awami League government. According to a report by daily Samakal, about 45 percent of the 93,834 staff—the total workforce in medical colleges, and specialised and autonomous hospitals under the Directorate General of Health Services (DGHS)—have not been coming to work since August 5. This is quite alarming. Although absenteeism is an old problem in the public healthcare sector, compared to normal times, 12,000 more medical professionals have remained absent from work during the last week, according to the report.

Our health sector is already plagued by a number of problems including manpower shortage, corruption in recruitment and medical procurement, inefficiency, poor quality of services, high treatment costs—to mention just a few. In addition, the weeks of violence that the nation witnessed recently increased the number of patients who need urgent medical attention. In such moments of crisis, the culture of doctors and nurses staying away from work without any formal leave is causing disruptions in both regular and emergency healthcare services.

Political appointments and nepotism in the recruitment process have also given rise to the current situation, as those who gained undue favours from the previous regime now fear reprisals and even replacement by their more deserving colleagues. Sadly, it is always the patients that have to pay the price for such crises. The situation is worse for the rural populace for whom accessing quality healthcare is difficult even during normal times. So we can only imagine how the lack of medical service outside the capital—caused by the wilful absenteeism of doctors, directors, assistant directors, and civil surgeons in district hospitals—is exacerbating their suffering.

We, therefore, urge the health adviser to take steps to ensure that absentee doctors and other staff in public hospitals join work without delay. Physicians must be reminded of their Hippocratic Oath to not harm their patients and perform their professional duty, or face consequences. In the long run, we expect the interim government to initiate reforms in the healthcare sector so that similar disruptions do not occur in the future because of irregularities and corruption. The administration should try to build a system where patient care comes before everything else, and people can receive prompt, quality and low-cost healthcare without having to travel abroad for treatment.

Address the crisis of stolen firearms

It is a matter of not just law and order but also national security

The looting of firearms from at least 22 police stations in Dhaka—a number that may increase as assessments continue—is deeply concerning. Following Sheikh Hasina's resignation, many police stations across the country were attacked by mobs aggrieved by the actions of police personnel during the student protests that led to her downfall. Beside the damage caused to police stations in the process, the extent of the looted weaponry also remains unclear. We hope the new IGP will soon provide a detailed account of the number of weapons stolen and the measures being taken to recover them.

In Cumilla, we are told that police have recovered 28 firearms and 667 rounds of ammunition. We hope that more missing firearms will be recovered in the near future. It has become evident from the incidence of looting weapons that certain factions are attempting to undermine the nation's stability, and the risk of criminal and political elements exploiting the situation remains a major concern. Given the country's volatile state at present, the possibility of these weapons falling into the wrong hands is extremely troubling. We urge law enforcement agencies to focus their attention on recovering these firearms as quickly as possible—before they can be used to cause further harm to people or property.

The dangers of these firearms remaining untraced are multifaceted. During the quota reform movement, as well as on multiple occasions before, we have often seen individuals connected with power using firearms—sometimes even legally acquired ones—in broad daylight. With an unknown number of weapons missing from the police arsenal, a new law and order crisis could be created by saboteurs.

With the vast majority of police stations in the country now operating again, even if partially, law enforcers need to take fresh initiatives to account for all the legal and illegal firearms in circulation. We urge the new IGP to take strong and comprehensive steps in this regard. Additionally, the entire process of licensing possession of weapons should be reviewed, and the supply and procurement of illegal weapons must be completely halted. This may prove to be a tall task given the circumstances, but it is one that our security forces must undertake urgently.

There are many takeaways from the sudden fall of Sheikh Hasina and the Awami League government, which for 15 long years projected an air of invincibility. We all know how the AL suppressed dissent and movements that it perceived as threats, often resorting to extreme and criminal measures. Yet, despite the gruesome violence, intimidation, and threats, countless people took to the streets—even on the day Hasina fell—without any guarantee that they would return home alive.

The student movement's ability to inspire people to stand up to a vicious oppressor was truly remarkable. How did the students manage to achieve this? Clearly, the oppressor's behaviour played a significant role. However, the more I hear these young people speak across various media platforms, the more I want to give them credit for the unity we recently witnessed.

As a society, we are divided along many lines. However, what became evident during these protests—especially if you were present in them—was that the majority of Bangladeshis share some core values, such as the sanctity of life, the belief that killing is wrong, a commitment to justice, etc. Through their actions, the students staunchly upheld these principles, inspiring people to unite.

On the day of Hasina's ouster, one of the student coordinators mentioned something interesting on television. When asked if he wanted to see a new Bangladesh where people have freedom of speech, he replied that he wanted people to have the freedom to dissent. The nuanced difference between the two is important. Most of us claim to believe in freedom of speech when it comes to speech we agree with. However, it is precisely how we react to speech we don't agree with that reveals whether our claim is genuine.

All of us claim to believe in justice. However, following the fall of the AL and the vengeful violence that ensued against its activists, these students reminded us of the importance of pursuing justice in a morally and legally correct way. After all, everyone, regardless of their crimes, deserves their day in court, because the concept of "habeas corpus" is a monumentally important civilisational discovery. Equally crucial is the principle of "innocent until proven guilty," which is larger than any individual as it originates from the Magna Carta, a cornerstone of justice for which humanity has paid an immeasurable price. To punish those responsible for the crimes of the AL government in ways that violate these principles would transform us into the very monsters from which we seek to distance ourselves.

The downfall of Sheikh Hasina is a tragic story, not only on a personal level but also for Bangladesh. Regardless of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman's governance failures, there is no denying his crucial role in our country's independence. Growing up in the 90s, I remember hearing about attempts to erase him from the history books in earlier decades. Yet, the damage that Hasina and her AL have done to Sheikh Mujib's legacy and that of the party is unmatched.

As she and other key AL leaders fled the country, they left thousands of their party activists in a terrible state. This should serve as a warning to us all: when you prioritise a party over principles, you risk facing a similarly tragic fate.

Without downplaying the crimes of Hasina and the AL, one must admit that the other political parties in our country have not proven to be much better. We have seen them attempt similar atrocities and power grabs before. Perhaps the difference is that they never managed to hold onto power for as long, and the state machinery did not have the same capacity to enable them to wield so much power. The longer the AL stayed in power, the more power it acquired.

The student movement's ability to inspire people to stand up to a vicious oppressor was truly remarkable.

As the saying goes, "Power tends to corrupt, and absolute power corrupts absolutely." Therefore, we can't say for certain whether another party in AL's position would not have abused it in a similar way. This is why we must reform the structure of our state institutions, so that no party can acquire such unquestioned power again. But how do we do that?

When the student protests were happening, the AL kept trying to connect them with a conspiracy involving BNP and Jamaat. Meanwhile, we in the media and others kept saying these students were "ordinary students" who were "not involved in politics." One of the student coordinators, Sarjis Alam, recently said something interesting.

He said that for years, people avoided getting involved in politics because those engaged in it were seen as corrupt and dishonourable. It is true that politicians in Bangladesh have often been perceived this way—and for good reasons. However, the only way to reform our corrupt political and governance systems is through politics. Therefore, it is crucial for honest people—individuals who do not compromise on their principles—to enter the political arena.

Not only that, as Aristotle said, "Man is a political animal." There is no way around this, because humans are social creatures with the power of speech and moral reasoning—both of which greatly affect the state they live in.

Therefore, if we are to truly become a "democratic society"—within a "republican state structure" that functions properly—ordinary people must also become politically conscious. And there is no reason why this cannot happen.

Since the student movement began until today, ordinary Bangladeshis have shown significant political maturity. Yes, there have been mistakes, and the road ahead will also be filled with pitfalls. However, the people must not believe they can simply hand over the fate of their future to someone else and then go about their business without concerning themselves with politics. If we are to truly have a democratic society where power belongs to the people, then the people themselves must be willing to take responsibility for wielding that power.

For most of our history, those who have wielded power have used it to serve themselves and their parties or to gain even more power and wealth. However, when power is properly utilised, it can inspire hope. That is what the student movement did: it gave people hope for a better future. What happens to that hope now depends on the choices we make. What will we choose? Will we choose to remain politically involved? If so, for what purpose: for power, for party or for principles?

The case for an ombudsman in Bangladesh is a student in the Department of Law at Southern University Bangladesh.

Muhidul Islam

MUHIDUL ISLAM

Bangladesh stands at a critical juncture, grappling with a political crisis that threatens the very foundation of its democracy. The resignation of Sheikh Hasina, amidst massive protests and widespread violence, underscores the urgent need for mechanisms that can restore public trust in governance. One glaring omission from Bangladesh's political landscape is the absence of an ombudsman—a constitutional institution designed to uphold transparency, accountability, and democracy by investigating whether or not administrative officials are legally exercising their jurisdictional powers.

The Constitution of Bangladesh, adopted in 1972, discusses the ombudsman under Article 77. This article does not mandate Parliament to establish the office of ombudsman but rather leaves the decision to Parliament's discretion and wisdom. However, Section 3 of The Ombudsman Act, 1980 clarifies that Parliament has indeed made the establishment of the ombudsman office mandatory by using the word "shall." This legal framework outlines the ombudsman's functions, powers, and responsibilities, including the authority to investigate actions taken by ministries, public officers, and statutory public authorities. Yet, despite the legal framework being in place for over four decades, no ombudsman has ever been appointed. This failure to operationalise the office deprives citizens of a critical tool for holding public officials accountable and addressing grievances related to governance.

Globally, the ombudsman institution has proven effective in enhancing transparency and accountability. Sweden, where the ombudsman institution originated in 1809, serves as a good model. The Swedish Ombudsman oversees public authorities, ensuring compliance with laws and regulations, and can investigate complaints and prosecute officials. New Zealand's Ombudsman, established in 1962, investigates complaints against government departments and agencies, often leading to significant reforms. India's Lokpal and Lokayuktas Act of 2013, and South Africa's Public Protector, also demonstrate the potential impact of an ombudsman in curbing corruption and ensuring accountability.

Implementing the ombudsman institution in Bangladesh could have transformative effects. It would provide citizens with a formal channel to voice grievances and seek redress, potentially reducing public discontent and unrest. Additionally, the ombudsman could serve as a check on the executive branch, deterring corruption and abuse of power, and strengthening the rule of law.

The resignation of former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina plunged the country into political uncertainty. The protests and violent clashes that took place in the days leading up to her resignation were symptomatic of deep-seated frustrations with the previous system, where public trust in government institutions had eroded over time. After the resignation, Dr Muhammad Yunus took the oath as head of Bangladesh's interim government on August 8, facing the daunting task of stabilising the nation and restoring public confidence. The new leadership is well-positioned to spearhead efforts to establish the ombudsman institution. Leadership at this time is crucial in navigating the challenges posed by the current political crisis. The new government must prioritise transparency and accountability, addressing the root causes of public discontent.

The government should make a public declaration of its intent to establish the ombudsman office, emphasising its role in restoring transparency and democracy. This should be followed by allocating the necessary resources to operationalise the institution. The Ombudsman Act of 1980 may require updates to clarify the ombudsman's jurisdiction and powers, ensuring it is robust enough to address contemporary governance challenges.

The new government should lead the efforts to amend the Act to reflect current realities. It should establish a non-partisan committee to oversee the appointment of the ombudsman. This committee should include representatives from civil society, the judiciary, and other independent bodies to ensure the ombudsman is impartial and capable of carrying out their duties effectively. A campaign should be launched to educate citizens about the ombudsman's role and how to file complaints. This will be crucial in building public awareness and trust in the institution. Civil society organisations should be involved in the establishment process, providing input and supporting citizens in accessing the ombudsman's services. This will help ensure the institution is responsive to the needs of the people. The government should seek technical assistance from countries with successful ombudsman institutions. Additionally, the ombudsman's office should be subject to regular monitoring and evaluation to ensure it meets its objectives.

The previous governments were often criticised for their reluctance to limit executive power and their failure to implement key constitutional provisions, including the ombudsman. This inaction contributed to growing public dissatisfaction and weakened the checks and balances necessary for a functioning democracy.

In contrast, the current government, focused on stabilising the nation, has both the opportunity and the moral imperative to establish the ombudsman. By doing so, it can set a precedent for future governments, ensuring that transparency and accountability remain at the forefront of governance.

By learning from global examples and addressing the challenges ahead, Bangladesh can create a governance system that is more responsive to citizens' needs and better equipped to uphold justice and fairness. This will restore public trust and lay the groundwork for a more stable and democratic future.

Why can't India accept Bangladeshis toppled Sheikh Hasina?

WINKERS AWEIGH!

Tanim Ahmed
is a journalist at The Daily Star.

TANIM AHMED

The most striking feature of Indian foreign minister S Jaishankar's statement at the Lok Sabha on August 6 was the complete absence of the Awami League government's egregious violation of human rights, and the killings of over 400 people (as documented so far), including youth, since July 16.

He began setting up a context for the people's uprising saying that there had been "considerable tensions, deep divides and growing polarisation in Bangladesh politics" since the January election. "This underlying foundation aggravated a student agitation that started in June this year," he continued. "There was growing violence, including attacks on public buildings and infrastructure, as well as traffic and rail obstructions. The violence continued through the month of July."

While there was dissatisfaction over the 2024 election—as well as the previous two elections—the quota reform protests did not really have much to do with that. It began as merely a student movement asking for reforms in the existing quota system in public service recruitment, which turned into an anti-government movement much later due to the government's brutal crackdown on protesters.

Jaishankar's statement does not even hint that Sheikh Hasina's government reacted with overwhelmingly excessive force against students, and police opened fire on protesters with live rounds, killing more than 400 people in the span of 23 days. The ruling party unleashed its student cadres, the Chhatra League, armed with machetes and firearms, on the unarmed protesters. It was only after then that attacks on public buildings began, which no one condoned.

Jaishankar went on to note that "Despite a Supreme Court judgement on 21 July, there was no let-up in the public agitation." He added, "Various decisions and actions taken thereafter only exacerbated the situation. The agitation at this stage coalesced around a one-point agenda, that is that Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina should step down."

Protesters wave Bangladesh's national flag as they celebrate at Shahbag area, near Dhaka university in Dhaka on August 5, 2024.

Since the Indian foreign minister glosses over the former government's brutality, it appears to paint the democratic movement behind Sheikh Hasina's fall with a nefarious intention from its genesis—which fits into the Awami League's narrative—that this was a movement fomented by the BNP, Jamaat or even external forces such as the US. This is far removed from the reality of the Bangladeshi public sentiment. Sheikh Hasina's government murdered so many people before meeting the quota demands. There was a nationwide internet blackout for five days. The student movement had nine demands before the hearing and verdict, including an apology from the ousted prime minister and resignation of former ministers, including Obaidul Quader and Asaduzzaman Khan Kamal, for abusing law enforcement.

On the surface, the government said it was open to negotiations with students, yet there were block raids during the nights where law enforcers came hunting for students. More than 11,000 people were arrested in just two weeks. Innocent children were put in jails and framed for murders committed by the police—even ones that were recorded, like Abu Sayed's. The "step down" demand came to the fore on August 3. It was certainly not soon after the court verdict, when the situation was still reversible had Hasina wished to apologise and reconcile. But that was simply out of the question for an increasingly egotistical autocrat.

Jaishankar then jumps to August 4, when he says, "Events took a very serious turn." It did indeed. Awami League had by then decided to unleash its full force onto the protesters, who took to the streets despite the curfew, only to face the police baby-sitting armed goons of the Awami League. Violence shook the nation; the death toll kept climbing to nearly 100 people—the highest and deadliest ever for a single-day protest in the nation's history. Public anger only mounted; student protesters called for a "March to Dhaka" on August 5. In response, hundreds of thousands took to the streets in Dhaka and other surrounding towns ready to converge on Shahbag.

That was when the law enforcers realised the situation was beyond salvation and counselled Sheikh Hasina to leave. Initially, she reportedly refused and urged for using even more force to subdue the crowd. The army refused. Hasina was finally convinced to leave. It was a revolution spearheaded by students that succeeded in toppling a dictatorial regime of 15 years.

The fact that the BNP and Jamaat-e-Islami took advantage of what turned into an anti-government campaign and publicly supported it was public knowledge. But entire communities—civilians from all walks of life—came out in support of the campaigners; the nation stood united against the ruling party. Hospitals gave free medical support, and general people donated to their common funds for food and water. Everyone sympathised with the protesters who were braving bullets on the streets and torture in the jail cells. Six coordinators were detained by the police and confined at the detective bureau against their will for several days without any regard for law or their rights.

What followed after she left her official residence was an outpouring of pent-up hatred for anything and everything linked to Hasina and the Awami League. Desecration of Sheikh Mujib's statues and murals and even his residence in Dhanmondi was heart-wrenching and hurt millions of Bangladeshis.

With the police gone and no law and order in place, minorities became an unfortunate target. The Daily Star reported violence against Hindu homes and businesses in 27 districts on August 5. These crimes must be investigated as the police are getting back on duty.

Hasina's Awami League consciously colluded with the religious fundamentalists, placating them and pandering to them to keep them at bay, only to make sure that Hasina remained at the helm without too much trouble from the right. It was the Awami League government that changed school textbooks, took out pieces by Hindu authors to replace them with stories and poems by unknown Muslim authors. Pictures and drawings were changed exactly as demanded. Besides restoring democracy, reviving the truly secular mindset of the masses is another uphill task that Bangladesh will have to undertake, now that Awami League is gone.

But, back to Jaishankar's statement: the blatant disregard for brewing tension among Bangladeshis, Awami League's intolerance for dissent and telltale signs of the Hasina regime turning into a classic autocrat shows a rather myopic and oversimplified Indian take of what is happening in Bangladesh. Jaishankar's articulate and witty tete-a-tetes with journalists or at discussion panels around the world convincingly demonstrates that he does not lack the calibre to appreciate these nuances. One wonders, then, if he had not been properly briefed by his aides on what actually happened in Bangladesh.

Just as this is an opportunity for Bangladesh to rebuild its future free from Awami League's clutches, it is also an opportunity for India to do some introspection. Bangladesh has just witnessed a people's uprising toppling a dictator—which will be a classic textbook case of the fall of an autocratic regime like Ceausescu or Marcos. And yet India remains extremely apprehensive about what is to come. India built relations with Awami League instead of Bangladesh. The Indian establishment has been more than happy to support Awami League for expedience despite its faults, and in the process alienated the people of the country. Today, with the ouster of Hasina and the Awami League, India is quite naturally seeing more than its fair share of criticism and dip in popularity.

It is really high time that Jaishankar asked his aides, or whoever is in charge of setting the Bangladesh agenda, how India backed itself to such a corner that it cannot join in the jubilation of a nation or empathise with our celebrations. He should ask how it is that India fails to see the new regime as a result of the mass people's uprising that it was, and why it needs to distort it by labelling it as the machinations of Pakistan, China or the US. Why is it that when we are relieved to have rid ourselves of a dictator, India is apprehensive that the djinn is out of the bottle?

Debunking the conspiracy theories surrounding Sheikh Hasina's fall

After Bangladesh's 'Iron Lady' Sheikh Hasina was ousted, a number of conspiracy theories have emerged regarding international players. Michael Kuggelman, director of the South Asia Institute at the Wilson Center, addresses these speculations in an exclusive interview with* Ramisa Rob of The Daily Star.

How would you describe the overall response of the international community?
The watchword is concern: about stability risks, a weakened economy, and an uncertain political transition. I don't want to overstate the international community's sense of worry, however; this crisis in Bangladesh was an internal one after all—there are multiple wars and other major crises playing out around the world. But Bangladesh is a significant player, especially because of its economy, and many global capitals have substantive partnerships with Dhaka, especially commercial ones. The US, China, Russia and India will all have strong incentives to engage and to maintain influence. Dhaka will welcome this engagement—even though it will face the same conundrum that the Hasina government did of being a nonaligned state amid intensifying great power rivalry. Ultimately, I don't think Bangladesh's status as a battleground for great power competition will change.

How is the US viewing India giving refuge to Sheikh Hasina after her ouster?
Hasina taking refuge in India makes perfect sense, given that she had no closer friend than India, and especially the Narendra Modi government. I suspect the US isn't thrilled about India hosting her for a long period. At the end of the day, if India wants to build new relationships in Dhaka—and it surely does—it should have a strong interest in not giving Hasina a long-term home in India.

There has been mixed signals regarding India's response to the fall of Sheikh Hasina. How do you view it?
No country was more upset to see Hasina fall than India. We all know that New Delhi had put all its eggs in the Hasina and Awami League basket for years, and that it couldn't accept any alternative to her party. India has long bought into Hasina's argument that "she was the only thing standing between a secular and moderate Bangladesh and a nation that is destabilising by Islamists." At the same time, no country's security interests are more impacted by Hasina's ouster than India. New Delhi's concerns—from threats to the Bangladeshi Hindu community to potential new surges of refugees crossing the border—are real and understandable.

But despite all this, India's foreign policy is pragmatic and agile. It will want to adjust to Bangladesh's dramatic new political reality. It will try to reach out to the country's new leaders. Trade, border security, great power competition—it has many compelling reasons to form a workable relationship with post-Hasina Bangladesh.

There are many conspiracy theories regarding US interference. Can you debunk them from the US perspective?
First, it's significant that other than Hasina and her family, and some die-hard Awami League supporters, Bangladeshis themselves are not embracing the conspiracy theory about a US—or any external—hand in her ouster. It's mostly an Indian narrative. That's a telling sign right there.

The tricky thing about conspiracy theories is they're often hard to disprove conclusively—and especially when they involve allegations such as covert "CIA" activities, for example. But they're also hard to prove conclusively. The onus is on those that make such allegations to make a plausible case for why they should be viewed as true. And there's nothing plausible about this idea of a US hand.

Abroad, the US is dealing with a world on fire. At home, it's dealing with an intense presidential election campaign. Bangladesh is not exactly foremost on its mind. It's true the Chief Adviser Dr Muhammad Yunus has many supporters and admirers in the US, and those that believe the baseless allegation of a US hand in Hasina's ouster will use his appointment as head of the interim government as a data point to try to validate their view. But it's hard to imagine how he can be working against Bangladesh's interests given that he commands considerable levels of support there, that he took leadership of the interim government only when requested by the student protest leaders (and presumably the army had no issue with it), and given that he has pledged to pursue democracy and across-the-board reform.

Michael Kuggelman

The US tends to look at Bangladesh through the lens of great power competition, and that means that while it will welcome Yunus as the head of the interim government, it will worry about the implications of a new government that may be poised to take the country even closer to China. Assuming stability returns to Bangladesh, we will see Washington pick up where it left off with a focus on trade, climate change, and strategic cooperation. Let's not forget that soon after Hasina began her ill-fated final term, President Joe Biden sent a letter to her that spoke of beginning a new era in relations, one focused on a variety of issues. And I'm quite confident that if Washington becomes concerned again about rights and democracy in Bangladesh, it won't hold back from voicing its concerns. Such a move would hopefully shatter another misconception about US policy in Bangladesh—that it favours non-Awami League parties and entities.

What's especially painful about all these allegations of a foreign hand is that they deny agency to the scores of young and brave Bangladeshis who waged a massive campaign for change, and in many cases lost their lives in the process.

There have been communal attacks against Hindus in Bangladesh and many cases of persecution since August 5. What do you make of this communal violence?
Unfortunately, religious violence is a longstanding reality in South Asia. Sometimes it is inspired by pure hate, at other times by broader political factors. It appears that the attacks on the Hindu community in Bangladesh in recent days have mostly been part of a wave of revenge acts against anyone considered to be a Hasina supporter. But this issue definitely needs more investigation to get a better sense of the scale of these attacks and what is driving them.

We're seeing some fake news—debunked by reputable fact-checker sites—about attacks on minorities. But there are still attacks taking place. This is one of the many dangerous things about this fake news: it distracts attention from the attacks that are actually happening. No one can afford to be complacent, or in denial.

For the interim government, stopping the attacks begins with restoring law and order. And that involves getting the police back out on the streets. This is an understandably sensitive issue, given that the police were on the frontlines of the vicious crackdown on peaceful protesters, but you can't restore law and order without law enforcement. With many police members now starting to return to work, that should help. More will need to be done by the interim government, including taking legal actions against those behind the attacks, and engaging with the affected communities to ensure they're getting the protection they need.

There is a theory on social media that Bangladesh will become the next Afghanistan. As an expert on South Asia, do you think there exists a serious threat that Bangladesh will become an Islamist country?
I wholly reject this notion that Bangladesh could become the next Afghanistan. Even the most casual observer of Bangladesh knows that it's a country with robust—albeit flawed—institutions, a strong state writ that extends across the country, and also a tradition of moderate Islam. Yes, there are influential religious groups like Jamaat and Hefazat that excel with mobilisation, and there have been terror groups like JMB. But these entities don't influence politics and society to the extent that you see in Afghanistan, or Pakistan for that matter. This is another case where many in India are falling prey to the Awami League narrative that a Bangladesh without Hasina and her party can only mean the unleashing of Islamist forces that will destabilise the country. Ultimately, these false narratives are inflating and exaggerating the notion of an Islamist threat, which risks heightening volatilities in Bangladesh at an especially sensitive time.

What happened in Bangladesh was a mass democratic uprising. As far as I know, that is the fact. I hope the world views it that way as well.

Real Madrid seek record 6th Super Cup

AGENCIES

Real Madrid and Atalanta will face off in the UEFA Super Cup in Warsaw on Wednesday in a bid to taste the first slice of European stardom for the 2024-25 season.

Los Blancos added Champions League title number 15 to their ever-growing collection last season, while their Italian foes unexpectedly slayed a hitherto invincible Bayer Leverkusen in the Europa League final.

The match-up also provides a chance for Real Madrid to become record six-time winners of the UEFA Super Cup, having been tied at the top with five Super Cup titles with rivals Barcelona and Italian giants AC Milan.

The UEFA Super Cup is the first step for teams to see how their tuning up for the season has gone, along with a chance to begin the season with momentum gained through silverware. However, for Real Madrid fans, this particular fixture remains a point of interest for one more reason: Kylian Mbappe.

The French forward, who was finally landed by Real Madrid as their latest number nine after years of trying to get him from PSG, could make his competitive debut for the Spanish giants in this match.

The former PSG forward has been observing Real's mixed pre-season from afar -- Carlo Ancelotti's men overcame Chelsea and Albacete either side of defeats to AC Milan and Barcelona -- but will now be ready to aid Los Blancos' quest for an unprecedented sixth UEFA Super Cup honour.

In customary Blancos fashion, the European champions have not undertaken a major summer overhaul of their squad -- which is now without two stalwarts in Toni Kroos and Nacho Fernandez -- but the addition of Mbappe and Brazilian teenage sensation Endrick now makes their forward line, also including Vinicius Junior and Rodrygo, even more fearsome.

Meanwhile, Europa League champions Atalanta are significantly less competitive at the moment compared to just a few months ago as coach Gian Piero Gasperini warned fans of the Bergamo club not to expect a strong start to the season.

"It's inevitable that it's turned out like this, but at this moment, the season has already become complicated," he told the local newspaper, l'Eco di Bergamo.

The 66-year-old coach confirmed that central midfielder Teun Koopmeiners is set to join Juventus and is no longer training with the first team.

"We've had two very serious injuries, two cruciate ligaments in practically three games with (Giorgio) Scalvini and (Gianluca) Scamaccama, and then the Koopmeiners situation."

However, Gasperini was hopeful new recruits would be found before the end of the transfer window.

Real Madrid's Vinicius Junior, Jude Bellingham, and the season's star signing Kylian Mbappe looked to be enjoying themselves in training ahead of their UEFA Super Cup encounter against Atalanta in Warsaw today. Real, who won a record-extending 15th Champions League and 36th LaLiga last season, will be gunning for more accolades this season, especially with the inclusion of superstar forward Mbappe in their already enviable squad.

Tigers look to overcome hindered preparations

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh Test team reached Pakistan yesterday, five days ahead of schedule, to officially begin the final phase of their preparations for the forthcoming two-Test series against the hosts, having failed to do so at home owing to weeks of unrest.

The Tigers were slated to begin practice on August 3 but had to make do with individual sessions at Mirpur's Sher-e-Bangla National Cricket Stadium instead as many of their foreign coaches expressed their inability to attend the sessions, citing the advisories issued by their respective embassies.

The Bangladesh Tigers' programme was the only exception as red-ball players were able to train and take part in two-intra squad matches in Chattogram even as the schedules were hindered by political unrest.

Several members of the 16-member squad – Mahmudul Hasan Joy, Zakir Hasan, Mominul Haque, Mushfiqur Rahim and Nayeem Hasan – are already in Pakistan with the 'A' team and are playing the first four-dayer against their Pakistani counterparts which began yesterday in Lahore.

The 2-0 loss in the home Test series against Sri Lanka this year sparked a debate as the players seemingly did not get enough time to prepare for red-ball cricket. This time, even though the team had ample time, the situation did not allow the preparations to go through smoothly.

"There were shortcomings in preparation for the Sri Lanka series. This time we had the opportunity but the last phase of the preparation had some lackings," chief selectior Gazi Ashraf Hossain Lipu said in a press conference on Monday before the squad's departure.

"After arriving in Dhaka, we were supposed to begin practice on August 3, but later players had to undertake individual sessions as national team coaches could not arrive [on the field]. To make up for these shortcomings we are going to Pakistan earlier than scheduled," he added.

The Tigers will begin training at the Gaddafi Stadium in Lahore from Tuesday before travelling to Islamabad. Ace all-rounder Shakib Al Hasan and Shoriful Islam will join the side in Islamabad, having finished their franchise league stints in Canada's Global T20 League.

Shoriful returned to the country on Monday and trained in Mirpur yesterday with the red-ball after having played only white-ball cricket since the T20 World Cup in June.

"Everyone began red-ball practice sessions after a while. I have begun a bit late so it will be a bit difficult [to adjust]. I am trying and there is time," said Shoriful, who will depart for Pakistan on Wednesday.

The pacer is also hoping that the batters would stand their ground against a potent Pakistan attack and take advantage of the flat surfaces in Rawalpindi.

"From what I have seen, Rawalpindi has batting friendly wickets. We have good batters so we will fight there."

The Tigers will have a few days to practice with the whole squad in Pakistan before the first Test in Rawalpindi begins on August 21.

City's PL charges hearing could be fast-tracked

AFP, London

Manchester City's hearing into 115 alleged breaches of Premier League financial regulations could be brought forward to next month, according to a report in The Times.

The newspaper said on Monday that the start of an independent commission hearing, planned for November, would now begin in mid-to-late September. The hearing is scheduled to last 10 weeks, with a verdict likely to be delivered early in 2025.

Neither the Premier League nor Manchester City have commented.

The Times report added that the outcome of a separate legal case which City have brought against league rules that regulate how clubs strike sponsorship or revenue deals with businesses linked to their owners, is now due in the next fortnight.

That in turn, said the paper, would allow the hearing into the 115 charges -- all of which City deny - to be brought forward.

City are facing the charges for alleged breaches of regulations and financial rules between 2009 and 2023. If found guilty, City, who last season won an unprecedented fourth successive English top-flight title, could face points deductions and even relegation from the Premier League.

Trans sprinter set for historic Paralympics debut

REUTERS

Valentina Petrillo is set to become the first openly transgender athlete to participate in the Paralympic Games, scheduled to run from August 28 to September 8, after the visually impaired sprinter was selected to represent Italy in the women's 200 and 400 metres races in Paris.

The 50-year-old, who transitioned in 2019, won bronze medals in both events at the World Para Athletics Championships last year in Paris. Prior to transitioning, Petrillo won 11 national titles in the men's category.

"I still find it hard to believe it and I'm keeping my feet on the ground because my chance to participate in Tokyo was missed by a whisker," Petrillo said in a statement on Monday.

"I will only start thinking about the Paris Games once I arrive in France."

Diagnosed with Stargardt's syndrome at the age of 14, Petrillo's visual abilities are limited to 1/50th of the normal range.

International Paralympic Committee (IPC) President Andrew Parsons told BBC Sport that while Petrillo is welcome in Paris under World Para Athletics policies, he wants to see the sporting world "unite" on its transgender policies.

The governing bodies of many sports including athletics, cycling and swimming have tightened their participation rules for transgender athletes in elite women's competitions over the last couple of years.

However, the IPC allows governing bodies to set their own policies and World Para Athletics permits an individual legally recognised as a woman to compete in the category for which their impairment qualifies them.

Abahani icons plea for return of looted trophies

SPORTS REPORTER

The premises of Abahani in Dhanmondi yesterday became a rare gathering place for former star players from various sporting disciplines, including football, cricket, and hockey, united by a common plea: to return all the looted trophies the powerhouse club has achieved over the past 52 years.

Abahani officials from different eras, its fans, and some local residents joined the former stars in urging those who looted the trophies on 5 August -- shortly after former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina resigned in the face of the student-led movement -- to return the cherished trophies so that their achievements can be preserved for future generations.

Before the former star players began delivering their speeches, some people were vocal about opening the Dhanmondi ground for public use, as it has been reserved exclusively for Abahani for a long time.

Former national hockey captain Abdus Sadeque said, "I first played for Abahani in 1972... and captained both the football and hockey teams during their debut seasons. I've returned here after a long time and noticed a few trophies have been recovered.

"I can confidently say that Abahani has been the best club in the country for 52 years. They excel not only in football but also in cricket, hockey, and table tennis. The number of championships they have won is unmatched by any other club in the country... but unfortunately, all of them were taken away. I want to appeal through the media for those trophies to be returned to the club."

Former national cricket captain Gazi Ashraful Hossain Lipu said, "When I heard that Abahani had been vandalised and the valuable trophies looted, I was deeply disappointed because those trophies were earned through our performances... I urge everyone to return those memorable trophies. It would be the greatest reward for us to see those trophies once again placed in Abahani's trophy cases."

Echoing the sentiments of Sadeque and Lipu, former national footballer Dewan Shafiul Alam Tutul said, "Most of us are no longer involved with the club, but we are here for one reason: we want our achievements returned because you cannot keep those trophies at home."

"I believe those trophies have little market value and could be sold as scrap... If necessary, we will provide financial compensation, but please return the achievements we earned over the years," said Tutul, adding that Abahani has no political affiliations.

Abahani director Inam Ahmed urged the administration and the interim government's advisers to "ensure security" not only for Abahani but also for other clubs that have been vandalised.

"Our achievements have been looted. This is not just a club of Bangladesh; it is a club for all players and the Dhanmondi community," said Inam, adding that Abahani will continue to form squads in all disciplines to participate in their respective sports despite the vandalism at the club.

Bangladesh 'A' opener Mahmudul Hasan Joy looks dejected after being caught and bowled by Umar Amin during the opening day of the first of the two-match four-day series against Pakistan Shaheens at the Islamabad Club Ground yesterday. Joy struck 65 off 116 balls but Bangladesh 'A', who were 91-3 at one stage, suffered a massive batting collapse to get bowled out for just 122 runs in their first innings. Mushfiqur Rahim and Mominul Haque didn't have an ideal batting practice ahead of the upcoming two-match Test series as they could make 14 and 11 runs, respectively. Pakistan Shaheens reached 2-0 at stumps, trailing by 120 runs.

Students put forward four-point demand

Seek formation of special tribunal for speedy trial of killings during protests

DU CORRESPONDENT

The Anti-Discrimination Student Movement launched a weeklong programme yesterday to press their four-point demand, the first of which is the trial of ousted prime minister Sheikh Hasina.

As part of the "Resistance Week" students gathered in front of the Raju Sculpture on the Dhaka University campus around 3:00pm and announced the four-point demand.

The demands are as follows:

1. A special tribunal must be formed to ensure the swift trial of Sheikh Hasina and her party leaders for "massacres" carried out using the fascist framework.

2. Those involved in the planned killings, robberies, and looting by the Awami League and its affiliates to undermine the mass uprising must be brought to justice swiftly, and the rightful demands of minorities must be acknowledged.

BNP to hold sit-in today, tomorrow

Calls for bringing Hasina, her aides to justice

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The BNP will organise sit-in programmes at its offices across the country today and tomorrow, demanding that former prime minister Sheikh Hasina and her accomplices be brought to justice.

The party will also hold a milad mahfil at its offices on August 16 to pray for BNP Chairperson Khaleda Zia's good health, and those killed and injured during the mass uprising, said a press release.

Meanwhile, the BNP yesterday handed a letter to the UN resident coordinator, Gwyn Lewis, requesting an impartial investigation into the "mass murder" committed by the Awami League government during the uprising that toppled the government.

After handing over the letter, BNP standing committee member Amir Khasru Mahmud Chowdhury told journalists that AL President Sheikh Hasina and her party leaders must face trial.

Shayan F Rahman removed as IFIC director

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Ahmed Shayan Fazlur Rahman, the son of Salman F Rahman, lost his directorship at the IFIC Bank due to loan defaults.

The central bank sent a letter on August 11 to the managing director of the private commercial bank, saying that Rahman's company Esses Fashions defaulted on loan repayments.

Esses Fashions, one of the concerns of Beximco Group, started its commercial production in November 2004, as per its website.

Beximco Group is one of the top borrowers of the state-run Janata Bank.

Esses Fashions's loans at Janata Bank stood at Tk 278 crore at the end of last year.

"Thus, Shayan will not be able to hold his directorship," the letter added.

Earlier on June 27, the IFIC Bank's board requested Shayan's re-

Bank accounts of Asaduzzaman, Palak to be frozen

BFIU issues directive to banks

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit (BFIU) yesterday instructed all banks to freeze the accounts of two more ministers from the recently overthrown Awami League government, along with their family members.

They are Asaduzzaman Khan Kamal, former home minister, and Zunaid Ahmed Palak, former state minister for posts, telecommunications and information technology.

With this, BFIU has so far instructed banks to freeze the accounts of five former ministers of the Sheikh Hasina-led government, which fell on August 5 in the face of student-led mass uprising.

All banks were told to freeze the accounts of Asaduzzaman, his wife Lutful Tahmina Khan, along with his son and daughter, said a senior official of the anti-money laundering agency.

The instruction came after the BFIU received reports of suspicious transactions in accounts under their names, said the official, wishing to remain unnamed.

In a letter, the BFIU asked all banks to block all kinds of withdrawals from the accounts of Asaduzzaman and his family members.

Earlier in the day, BFIU also instructed all banks to freeze the accounts of Palak and his wife, Arifa Jesmin Konika, a senior official said.

TENSIONS WITH ISRAEL

Iran rejects Western calls for restraint

32 more Palestinians killed as Israel keeps up strikes in Gaza

AGENCIES

Iran yesterday rejected Western calls to stand down its threat to retaliate against Israel for the killing of Hamas political leader Ismail Haniyeh in Tehran late last month.

The Islamic republic and its allies have blamed Israel for Haniyeh's killing on July 31 during a visit to the Iranian capital for the swearing-in of President Masoud Pezeshkian. Israel has not commented.

Iran has vowed to avenge the death, which came hours after an Israeli strike in Beirut killed a senior commander of Hezbollah, the powerful Iran-backed militant group in Lebanon.

Western diplomats have scrambled to avert a major conflagration in the Middle East, where tensions were already high due to the Israel's offensive in Gaza. In a statement on Monday, the United States and its European allies urged Iran to de-escalate.

The White House warned that a "significant set of attacks" by Iran and its allies was possible as soon as this week, saying Israel shared the same assessment.

The United States has deployed an aircraft carrier strike group and a guided missile submarine to the region in support of Israel.

Iran's foreign ministry spokesman Nasser Kanani criticised the Western call for it to de-escalate.

"The declaration by France, Germany and Britain, which raised no objection to the international crimes of the Zionist regime, brazenly asks Iran to take no deterrent action against a regime which has violated its sovereignty and territorial integrity," he said in a statement.

"Such a request lacks political logic, flies in the face of the principles and rules of international law, and constitutes public and practical support" for Israel.

The United States and its European allies also called for a ceasefire between Israel and Hamas in Gaza, with difficult talks set for tomorrow on halting the conflict. They also called for the "unfettered" delivery of aid to devastated Gaza.

Hamas is sticking to its demand that truce talks focus on a deal already discussed with Israel and mediators rather than starting anew, an official said.

Israel's military offensive in the Gaza Strip has killed at least 39,929 Palestinians and wounded 92,240 since October 7, the Palestinian enclave's health ministry said yesterday. A total of 32 Palestinians have been killed and 88 wounded in the past 24 hours, the ministry said in a statement.

UN urges interim govt to be inclusive

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres has urged the Muhammad Yunus-led interim government to continue to make every effort to be inclusive.

"In the coming weeks, the interim government should take into account the voices of women, youth and people across the country as well as that of minority and indigenous communities as the country moves towards parliamentary elections," said his spokesman Stephane Dujarric in a statement yesterday.

Guterres welcomed the efforts of the interim government to restore calm and organise parliamentary elections in Bangladesh.

The interim government was formed on August 8 following the fall of the Awami League government on August 5 in the wake of a student-led mass upsurge.

He underscored the need for a full, independent, impartial and transparent investigation into all acts of violence, the statement said.

More than 400 people were killed during and after the fall of former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina.

UN earlier said it stands ready to deploy a fact-finding team to Bangladesh.

Meanwhile, in another briefing, UN Secretary-General's Deputy Spokesperson Farhan Haq said the UN is alarmed by the attacks on journalists in Bangladesh.

"Yes, we are against all attacks on journalists anywhere for any reason. And

Adani can now sell Bangladesh-bound power in India

REUTERS, Singapore

An Adani Power coal-fired power plant under contract to sell all its output to Bangladesh can now supply the domestic market as the government has amended its power export rules.

An internal federal power ministry memo, dated August 12 and seen by Reuters, amends 2018 guidelines governing generators supplying electricity "exclusively to a neighbouring country".

Currently only one plant in India -- Adani Power's 1,600 megawatt (MW) Godda plant in eastern Jharkhand state -- is under contract to export 100 percent of its power to a neighbouring country.

The memo says "the government of India may permit connection of such generating station to the Indian grid to facilitate sale of power within India in case of sustained non-scheduling of full or part capacity".

The sale of power to the local grid might also be allowed if there is a delay in payments, it said.

Subsurface of Mars harbours oceans of water

REUTERS, Singapore

Data from Nasa's Mars InSight lander shows evidence of liquid water far below the surface of the fourth planet, advancing the search for life there and showing what might have happened to Mars' ancient oceans.

The lander, which has been on the Red Planet since 2018, measured seismic data over four years, examining how quakes shook the ground and determining what materials or substances were beneath the surface, according to a study released on Monday.

Based on that data, the researchers found liquid water was most likely present deep beneath the lander. Water is considered essential for life, and geological studies show the planet's surface had lakes, rivers and oceans more than 3 billion years ago.

"On Earth what we know is where it is wet enough and there are enough sources of energy, there is microbial life very deep in Earth's subsurface," said one of the authors, Vashan Wright of the University of California San Diego's Scripps Institution of Oceanography. "The ingredients for life as we know it exist in the Martian subsurface if these interpretations are correct."

Hasina sued for genocide, crimes against humanity

Former ministers, law enforcers co-accused; AL, Jubo League, BCL may be prosecuted as organisations

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A complaint was filed with the investigation agency of the International Crimes Tribunal yesterday accusing former prime minister Sheikh Hasina and eight others of committing crimes against humanity and genocide between July 15 and August 5.

Supreme Court lawyer Gazi MH Tamim filed the complaint on behalf of Bulbul Kabir, father of Alif Ahmed Siam, a 9th grader who, as per the complaint, was shot by police in Savar on August 5 and died two days later.

> Law Adviser Prof Asif Nazrul said the interim government decided to hold the trial at the International Crimes Tribunal for the killings during the mass uprising that toppled the government.

Tamim, who was a lawyer for several war crimes accused at the International Crimes Tribunal, appealed to the investigation agency to take legal proceedings following a proper investigation.

"We registered the complaint, and thus the investigation has started," Ataur Rahman, deputy director (admin) of the investigation agency, told The Daily Star yesterday.

"Once the probe is done, we will submit the report to the Chief Prosecutor's Office of the tribunal so that the next procedures can begin," he added.

The others accused are Obaidul Quader, Awami League general secretary and former road transport and bridges minister; Asaduzzaman Khan Kamal, former home minister; Zunaid Ahmed Palak, former state minister

Beximco leaves Janata Bank in poor health

MD MEHEDI HASAN

What is the purpose of a single borrower exposure limit? It is to ensure that a bank's fortune is not tied to the ebb and flow of a conglomerate's business.

But this rule, documents show, was not enforced by state-owned Janata Bank in the case of Beximco Group, arguably the largest conglomerate in the country led by Salman F Rahman, the private industry and investment affairs adviser of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina -- a post that afforded him the rank of a minister.

This has left the health of the state-owned bank in a precarious position: about 49 percent of Janata's outstanding loans have gone bad -- and 37.5 percent of the defaulted loans are of Beximco Group, whose vice-chairman Salman was put on ten-day remand yesterday.

At the end of June, Janata's total exposure to Beximco Group stood at Tk 25,000 crore, which is about 950 percent of the lender's paid-up capital.

Banks are not allowed to lend more than 25 percent of their paid-up capital to a single party. At the end of June, Janata's paid-up capital stood at Tk 2,314 crore.

What's more, as much as 72 percent of Beximco's outstanding loans with Janata have defaulted, documents show.

Of Janata's total disbursed loans of Tk 98,000 crore, 25.51 percent were given to 30 companies under the Beximco umbrella. And 26 of the 30 companies breached the single borrower exposure limit.

August 15, the darkest of dawns

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The dawn had not broken yet.

Tanks rumbled down the empty roads to their destinations -- one of the teams headed for President Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman's residence at House 677 of Road 32 in Dhanmondi.

A contingent of security personnel composed of police and army was discharging their duties there. Nurul Islam Khan, the then deputy superintendent of police, was supervising the guards on that night.

Inside the house, everybody was still in sleep: President Mujib, his wife Sheikh Fazilatunnesa Mujib, his sons Sheikh Kamal, Sheikh Jamal and Sheikh Russell, daughters-in-law, and his brother Sheikh Naser.

They did not know they would not live to see the light of the next day as preparations for carrying out a barbaric assassination were almost done.

Confirming their arrests, the media wing of the Dhaka Metropolitan Police said the three were hiding there.

Md Sentu Miah, officer-in-charge of Paltan Police Station, said acting on a tip-off, they conducted a drive in Nikunja and arrested the three.

"They were arrested in the murder case of rickshaw puller Kamal Mia. The victim's wife, Fatema Khatun, filed the case at Paltan Police Station on July 20," he told The Daily Star.

Govt scraps contractual appointments of 11 secretaries

NBR gets new chief

The interim government yesterday cancelled the contractual appointments of 11 officials of secretary or equivalent ranks and sent another secretary into forced retirement.

It also transferred three other secretaries. The government issued separate notifications in this regard.

This is the first major change to the civil administration since the interim government took office on August 8.

Jahangir Alam, secretary of the Public Security Division under the home ministry, was sent into forced retirement.

Jahangir served as the secretary of the Election Commission during the last national election on January 7, which was boycotted by almost all opposition political parties, including the BNP.

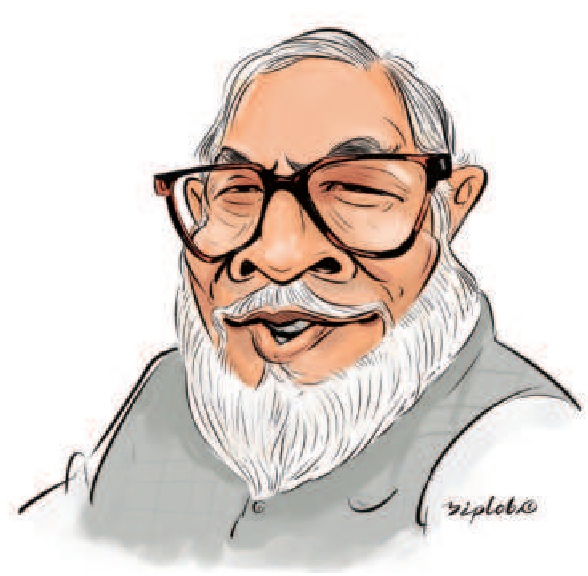
SALMAN F RAHMAN

'The architect of default culture'



STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Salman F Rahman, one of Sheikh Hasina's trusted advisers with a ministerial rank, is now a disgraced suspect held in police custody. He was arrested in a case over the killing of a shop employee, not for financial misconduct he has long been known for. But this high-profile arrest brings into stark relief, once again, the rise of a man who used murky politics to drive his business empire. His proximity to Hasina and her political circle helped him bend the rules at ease in the corporate world.

Salman thrived on financial transgression, with his big footprints in the banking sector, now one of the beleaguered areas of the economy. Before his downfall, his last target was the country's burgeoning Islamic finance that he used to supercharge his business.

Many familiar with Salman's wrongdoing described him as "the father of default culture" in Bangladesh. That toxic malpractice encouraged other businesses to borrow and never repay, exposing Bangladesh's banking industry to serious risks.

The Centre for Policy Dialogue concluded that several banks are now "clinically dead".

One of the lenders with huge exposure to Salman's Beximco Group is Janata Bank. Beximco borrowed a colossal amount, nine times higher than the bank's paid-up capital, bringing significant risks to the state-run lender. That's just one example.

Salman seemed to have left his legacy to his son, Ahmed Shayan Fazlur Rahman, who recently lost directorship at IFIC Bank due to loan defaults.

Founded in 1972 by Salman and his elder brother Sohail F Rahman as a commodity trading company, Beximco got its defaulted loans rescheduled on many occasions by compelling the regulators to make or amend rules. It also shielded itself from legal peril by securing court orders in its favour.

One of the instances of loan restructuring or rescheduling was in 2014 when Salman rescheduled Beximco's loans taken from Sonali Bank citing a liquidity crisis.

The company blamed the crisis on politically motivated credit restrictions between 2001 and 2008, repayment of Tk 800 crore in bank loans in the previous three years and economic disruptions during the prolonged spell of blockades and shutdowns in 2013-14.

An epicentre of independence struggle

AHMAD ISTIAK

An undated file photo of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman's Dhanmondi 32 house. Inset, the Bangabandhu Memorial Museum burns on August 5 as it was set on fire after the fall of the Awami League government.

House 677, Road 32 (old), Dhanmondi, Dhaka. A seemingly ordinary two-storey house.

Although it does not look any different than many other old Dhanmondi residences, its role in Bangladesh's liberation struggle sets it apart.

This house witnessed the birth of numerous pivotal movements, including the anti-Ayub movement of 1962, Six-Point Movement, Agartala Conspiracy Case, the mass uprising of 1969, the 1970 election and finally the Liberation War.

It was from this house that Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman declared the independence of Bangladesh in the early hours of March 26, 1971.

BIRTH OF DHANMONDI 32 HOME

Sheikh Mujibur Rahman was first elected to the constituent assembly in 1955 and subsequently appointed labour minister. At the time, he used to live at House No. 15 on Abdul Gani Road. That year, the government initiated a land allotment programme for different segments of society. Begum Fazilatunnesa Mujib expressed her interest, and Nuruzzaman, Bangabandhu's personal secretary, picked up an application form on her behalf, according to Dr Jagannath Barua's book titled "Bangabandhur 32 Number Bari".

In 1957, a one bigha plot was allotted in the name of Fazilatunnesa in Dhanmondi for a price of Tk 6,000. Sheikh Mujib, then chairman of Pakistan Tea Board, made an initial payment of Tk 2,000 and paid the remaining Tk 4,000 in installments.

During those turbulent times, Mujib faced frequent arrests and was forced to change his location to avoid arrest.

After his arrest in 1958, his family was even evicted from their government-allotted residence in Segunbagicha (house#115), forcing them to rent a house near Siddheswari Boys' School for a monthly rent of Tk 200, according to the book.

In the face of persistent threats from the Pakistan government, the family had to move again and found a temporary shelter at 76 Segunbagicha with the help of poet Sufia Kamal.

By 1960, Fazilatunnesa came to realise that they need a permanent place in Dhaka, and asked her husband to begin construction on their Dhanmondi plot.

Mujib began the construction with financial support from friends and a loan from the House Building Finance Corporation, and moved into the residence in 1961, when a three-room single-storey house was completed, according to a book titled Shiekh Mujib Amar Pita, by Sheikh Hasina.

By 1965, a two-room second floor was completed. Mujib subsequently converted a significant portion of the ground floor into a library and party office.

CRADLE OF MANY MOVEMENTS

Apparently unimpressive, this house stands as a silent witness to many movements that the Bangalee nation launched against Pakistan government under Bangabandhu's leadership.

Its political journey began with the anti-Ayub movement of 1962. It was from these very rooms that Mujib initiated the challenges against the Ayub regime.

As Jagannath Barua noted in his book "Bangabandhur 32 Number Bari", this house quickly became the epicentre for East Bengal's political aspirations.

After the death of Huseyn Shaheed Suhrawardy in December 1963, the Awami League found itself adrift without a leader. A crucial meeting at this house on January 25, 1964, Abdur Rashid Tarkabagish was elected president and Mujib the general secretary of Awami League. This critical gathering marked a turning point for AL, laying the groundwork for its subsequent resurgence, according to Mohiuddin Ahmed's book titled "Awami League: Utthan Parba 1948-1970".

Outside politics, this house sheltered numerous people during the communal strife in 1964.

The historic Six Points of 1966 were also drafted at this very house.

Following Mujib's public announcement of the Six Points in Lahore, it was formally adopted at a meeting of the East Pakistan Awami League's executive committee at the Dhanmondi 32 house on February 21, 1966, the book says.

Despite Bangabandhu's arrest from his house on May 8, the momentum of the Six-Point Movement continued to build from within its walls. In her husband's absence, Begum Mujib hosted frequent meetings with party leaders and activists.

In January 1968, the military regime initiated Mujib's trial in the Agartala Conspiracy Case, sparking a widespread movement that intensified by December that year.

After his unconditional release in the case in 1969 in the face of massive protests, Mujib chalked up the strategy for the 1970 election campaign from this house, according to a book titled "Swadhinatar Swapno, Unmesh O Arjan" by Abdul Aziz Bagmar.

During the non-cooperation movement announced on March 1, 1971, after Yahya Khan postponed the National Assembly session, US Ambassador Joseph Farland and General Rao Farman Ali visited Mujib's residence for talks, according to Oli Ahad's "Jatiya Rajniti 1945-75".

In the days leading up to the historic March 7 speech, Bangabandhu planned his address from this home. On the evening of March 6, he held one of the most crucial meetings in his political career with the four national leaders and student leaders, seeking counsel also from Begum Mujib.

Mujib defied the Pakistan authorities by hoisting the flag of independent Bangladesh atop this house on March 23, according to Afsan Chowdhury's "1971 Oshohojog Andolon O Protirodh".

A few hours before the declaration of independence, he had a meeting with four central leaders of the Awami League and Dr Kamal Hossain at Dhanmondi 32 on March 25.

Late at night, the Pakistan army surrounded the house and arrested him. But before that, he declared independence through a trunk call.

The house remained unoccupied throughout the Liberation War. Before Mujib's arrest, his family had already relocated to a pre-arranged rented house.

Take 'concrete action' to protect minorities

Amnesty urges interim govt

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Amnesty International yesterday urged the interim government to take "concrete action" to protect the Hindus and other minority communities in Bangladesh.

It also urged the Bangladeshi authorities to conduct a swift, thorough, impartial and independent investigation into the crimes against the minority communities and associated incidents of mob violence and ensure that those responsible are prosecuted in fair and transparent trials.

The statement came a day after Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus's address to the minority communities in Bangladesh.

"The call for ensuring human rights and freedom of expression for all is a welcome first step by the interim government in Bangladesh but it must be urgently followed up by concrete actions to ensure justice, reparations and guarantee of non-recurrence," said Babu Ram Pant, deputy regional director for South Asia at Amnesty International.

"The new interim government must ensure the rights to equality, non-discrimination, and bodily integrity of everyone and bring an end to the revenge culture of attacking political opponents that Bangladesh has witnessed in the past," he said.

Rokeya Prachi attacked at Dhanmondi-32

National Award-winning actress Rokeya Prachi was attacked as she and others were lighting candles at the historic residence of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman at Dhanmondi-32 yesterday evening.

In commemoration of Bangabandhu's death anniversary on August 15, Prachi planned to lit the candles.

The actress told The Daily Star, "Around 7:15pm, we were suddenly attacked. We were protesting, but then we were surrounded andbeaten up."

Earlier in the morning, Prachi staged a silent protest at Dhanmondi-32. The house, once a symbol of national pride, was set on fire after the fall of Hasina-led government.

Besides them, some unnamed individuals from law enforcement agencies and AL leaders, the AL, Jubo League, Chhatra League, and other wings of the party were accused as organisations.

The development came hours after Law Adviser Asif Nazrul said the interim government decided to hold the trial at the International Crimes Tribunal for the killings during the mass uprising that toppled the Hasina-led government.

The involvement of the highest position holders of the immediate past government has been examined, and it is possible to put them on trial, he told reporters at the secretariat.

The previous government fell after Hasina on August 5 fled to India amid a mass uprising that began as a student protest for reforming quotas in government jobs.

Over 550 people, including students and law enforcers, were killed in violence during the uprising. Hasina and several top AL leaders -- some of them already arrested -- have been accused in several other cases.

The Hasina-led government in March 2010 formed the International Crimes Tribunal (ICT) to try those who committed crimes in 1971. A second ICT was formed later. Five Jamaat and a BNP leader were executed following the verdicts of the two tribunals.

THE COMPLAINT

The complaint, a copy of which was obtained by The Daily Star, was filed under section 3(2) and 4(1) (2) of the International Crimes (Tribunals) Act-1973.

Section 3(2)(a) of the act says, "Crimes against humanity: namely, murder, extermination, enslavement, deportation, imprisonment, abduction, confinement, torture, rape or other inhumane acts committed against any civilian population or persecutions on political, racial, ethnic or religious grounds, whether or not in violation of the domestic law of the country where perpetrated."

Section 3(2)(C) says, "Genocide: meaning and including any of the following acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnic, racial, religious or political group, such as: (i) killing members of the group; (ii) causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group; (iii) deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part; (iv) imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group; (v) forcibly transferring children of the group to another group."

Section 4(1) and 2(2) deals with the liability of crimes.

According to the compliant, the accused, with an intent to destroy, in whole or in part, the unarmed students and people involved with the anti-discrimination movement by indiscriminate shooting committed genocide and crimes against humanity.

Copies of different newspapers published from July 16 to August 6 were submitted as evidence.

The complaint said students and job seekers started quota-reform protests on June 1 and held different programmes to press home their demands.

Hasina, then prime minister, made inciting remarks at a press conference and directed law enforcers and leaders and activists of the AL, Jubo League and Chhatra League "to destroy, in whole or in part, the protesting students and general people", reads the complaint.

Quader and several other ministers, state-ministers, and lawmakers also made inciting comments.

Following the directives of Sheikh Hasina, Obaidul Quader and other accused, leaders and activists of Awami League, Jubo League and Chhatra League and law enforcers attacked the protesting students and people, shot and hacked them to death, and therefore, committed crimes against humanity and genocide, the complaint reads.

Following the directives of Palak and Arafat and other accused, genocide was committed keeping the internet service shut across the country in an attempt to hide the offence and spread rumors. The accused "forcibly controlled the electronic and print media" to keep people from knowing about the genocide, it adds.

As the DB chief, accused Harun mentally and physically tortured many, including the organisers of the student protests, and kept them confined to the DB office, it reads.

As per the directives of the named accused, 286 "false cases" were filed against 4.5 lakh people, and over 12,000 were arrested and then tortured in prisons, reads the complaint.

MORE CASES AGAINST HASINA

Yesterday, another murder case was filed against Hasina and 23 others over the death of college student Faizul Islam Rajon, 18, in the capital's Kafrul on July 19.

Rajon's brother Rajib filed the case with Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Court.

The other accused include former ministers Asaduzzaman, Quader, Anisul, former IGP Chowdhury Abdullah Al-Mamun, former DB chief Harun, former DMP commissioner Habibur Rahman, and former DMP joint commissioner Biplob Kumar Sarkar.

The court asked the officer-in-charge of Kafrul Police Station to register the case.

Another case was filed against Hasina and four others over the abduction and torture of Supreme Court lawyer Sohel Rana in February 2015.

The other accused are Asaduzzaman, Anisul, former IGP Shahidul Haque, former Rab DG Benazir Ahmed, and 20-25 unnamed others.

A court asked the OC of Uttara West Police Station to register the complaint.

Sohel Rana mentioned in the complaint that members of law enforcement agencies in plainclothes abducted him from Uttara in 2015 and released him after over six months.

A total of four cases have been filed against Hasina so far.

'The architect of default culture'

With Tk 5,245 crore loans to seven banks at that time, Beximco, in a letter to the central bank, called for urgent debt restructuring to survive. On January 29, 2015, the Bangladesh Bank issued a new large loan restructuring policy, under which the central bank entertained applications from borrowers of Tk 500 crore and above.

Some 11 business groups quickly grabbed the opportunity and restructured about Tk 15,000 crore of their defaulted loans -- and Beximco alone accounted for a third of the amount, according to a report published by this newspaper at that time.

The borrowers were given a lenient rescheduling benefit of only a 1-2 percent down payment instead of the usual 10 percent and a maximum repayment tenure of 12 years. The policy allowed banks to withdraw the facility if any borrower failed to repay two consecutive installments.

The Bangladesh Bank added that the lenders may sue the borrowers in case of failure to repay the loans. The subsequent actions of Beximco showed that it did not bother.

Under the policy, state-owned Sonali Bank had restructured Tk 1,070 crore in Beximco's loans for 12 years to 2027 at an interest rate of 10 percent, which was much lower than the 13-14 percent interest rate prevailing then.

After a year's grace period, effective from September 2016, the borrower was supposed to pay Tk 57.4 crore each quarter to Sonali. By December 2017, the borrower was obliged to pay six installments, but Beximco made only two payments. And it became a defaulter at the end of December 2017.

Sonali did not withdraw the facility, nor did it sue Beximco.

Rather, it rescheduled the loans given to Beximco again in March 2018. In doing so, Beximco was not required to make any down payment although the central bank's rules said at least a 10 percent down payment of the defaulted loans was necessary to restructure the loans.

"Salman F Rahman has become synonymous with a loan defaulter despite his contribution to the industrial sector," said Faruq Mainuddin, a banking sector analyst.

"When Beximco began, it was the first conglomerate to establish a corporate culture in Bangladesh," he said, adding that the company's loan default culture goes as far back as the regime of the late military ruler HM Ershad.

"But it enjoyed leverage everywhere because of its enormous industrial presence," said Mainuddin, noting that banks were shy of taking legal steps against Salman's company.

Beximco has operations and investments across a wide range of industries, including textiles, pharmaceuticals, ceramics, real estate, food, information and communication technology, media, DTH, financial services, and energy. Beximco Group employs over 70,000 people worldwide and generates $2 billion in revenue a year, according to the company's website.

HIS DARK PAST IN GMG AIRLINES

Salman's dark past in GMG Airlines is a textbook case of manipulation. GMG had been sliding financially since starting operations in 1998, accumulating a loss of Tk 42 crore until 2006. In 2007, it started making a trivial annual profit of Tk 1 crore. Then it got a messiah. Beximco suddenly bought half the equity stake in GMG in 2009, and things started looking up since.

The profit of GMG jumped to Tk 79 crore in 2010 without any discernible reason, and it showed a golden dream to the public by offering Tk 300 crore in a private sale at a 400 percent premium with the promise that it would soon be traded on the stock markets. New planes would be bought and GMG would fly to new skies.

None of them happened though. The Securities and Exchange Commission discovered financial fraud in the company's books and found its profits fictitious. It did not allow GMG to offer IPOs. Those who bought its shares in private placements never got back their money.

Sonali Bank, which lent GMG Tk 247 crore with a guarantee from Beximco, also never got back its money.

Salman successfully halted a move by Sonali Bank to auction his and his brother's property in 2016 for the failure of GMG Airlines to repay loans.

RUINED DEBENTURES MARKET

Salman is still accused of ruining the debentures market in Bangladesh as he delayed the repayment of around Tk 100 crore in funds that he raised in the 1990s.

A debenture is a type of debt instrument that is unsecured by collateral and investors rely on the creditworthiness and reputation of the issuer while corporations and governments issue debentures to raise capital or funds and pay interest for holding the debentures.

Beximco issued four debentures in 1994-95 for a tenure of 10 years. Although their tenure ended in 2004 and 2005, the issuer did not repay the funds to investors until 2021.

As Beximco was preparing to issue sukuk to raise Tk 3,000 crore in the same year, the company's debenture default issue came to a head. Public criticism by investors prompted the SEC to order the company to repay the dues. Beximco repaid the funds 15 years after the cut-off time.

BOND MARKET

Beximco issued the country's largest sukuk in 2021 through which it raised Tk 3,000 crore. Salman used his political leverage for the bond sales. No banks and non-banks were interested in subscribing to the bonds.

Salman pressurised institutional investors to park money in his company's sukuk, with some banks hesitatingly investing a low amount. So, the SEC had to extend the subscription time at least twice.

Salman went as far as to "force" Bangladesh Bank to change rules so that banks can invest in sukuk by borrowing funds from a scheme designed only for the stock market, not for shariah-compliant bonds.

His company has never admitted wrongdoing, but people familiar with the issue say the central bank was forced to issue a circular allowing the banks to invest borrowed funds in sukuk.

ENFORCED DISAPPEARANCES

'Arrest guilty officials in 24 hours'

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Mayer Daak yesterday issued a 24-hour ultimatum to the government demanding the arrest of law enforcement officials involved in enforced disappearances.

The ultimatum was announced by Sanjida Islam Tulee, one of the coordinators of Mayer Daak, a platform for the families of victims, at a human chain at Jatiya Press Club.

Six days have passed since the formation of the interim government, and only three people have been released from "Aynaghor", she said.

However, the remaining missing persons have not yet been found.

"We are issuing a 24-hour ultimatum for the arrest of Ziaul Hasan, Tarique Siddique, and other officials involved in these disappearances."

Rizwana vows stern action against corruption

BSS, Dhaka

Environment Ministry adviser Syeda Rizwana Hasan yesterday warned that stern action will be taken if anyone from her ministry is found involved in corruption.

She made the remarks at a meeting with Forest Department officials.

Rizwana said the Wildlife Crime Control Unit should monitor bird markets at Katabon regularly.

"Legal action should be taken against all types of illegal bird trade and traders who are cruel to animals. She sought cooperation from students to this end.

Earlier, the adviser visited the DoE and gave instructions to take effective steps against hill razing and river pollution.

She urged for transparency and accountability from the DoE.

CITY CORPORATIONS

CEOs now in charge of cities

LGD empowers them with full admin, financial power

HELEMUL ALAM

The interim government yesterday decided to give chief executive officers (CEO) full administrative and financial power to run the city corporations where mayors and panel mayors are absent.

In an office order, the Local Government Division said many mayors and panel mayors have been absent due to the existing circumstances. The LGD tried to communicate with them but to no avail.

Due to their absence, works and services remain halted. So, the decision was taken for the sake of people's interest and to continue services as well as administrative works, said the order, signed by Abu Hena Morshed Zaman, secretary to the LGD. It came into effect yesterday.

There are 12 city corporations -- Dhaka south, Dhaka north, Khulna, Chattogram, Rajshahi, Rangpur, Barishal, Cumilla, Sylhet, Narayanganj, Gazipur and Mymensingh.

According to sources, several mayors including Dhaka north and south, Chattogram, Khulna, Barishal, Mymensingh and Cumilla were absent from their offices since the ouster of Awami League government on August 5.

All the absentee mayors were elected with AL support. This is the first time such a decision was taken in the country.

Mohammad Atique, a resident of Gandaria, has been visiting the local councillor's office for the last several days as he needs a citizenship certificate for his son.

However, Atique could not manage the certificate as the ward-46 councillor's office has remained closed since August 5, following the fall of the Awami League government.

Similarly, many councillors' offices of two Dhaka city corporations are non-operational, as most of those came under attack following the resignation of Sheikh Hasina.

With the two mayors and councillors absent, the regular activities of the two city corporations of Dhaka have been severely disrupted.

As per media reports, Dhaka South City Corporation Mayor Sheikh Fazle Noor Taposh left the country on August 3, while Dhaka North City Corporation Mayor Atiqul Islam is said to have gone underground.

However, a DNCC official said Atiqul is still in the country and providing them with instructions virtually.

Of the councillors, some have reportedly fled the country, while many are in hiding and are not joining work, fearing further attacks.

In addition, a good number of DNCC and DSCC officials are currently absent from their duties.

Demand transparency from govt at MJF discussion

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

University students expressed their support for student politics on campus, but were against allowing traditional party-affiliated groups like Chhatra League, Chhatra Dal and Chhatra Shibir, during a discussion organised by Manusher Jonno Foundation yesterday.

They also emphasised the need for transparency and accountability from the government.

The session brought 25 young men and women from various parts of the country, who took part in the anti-discrimination student movement, to share their experiences and demands for the future of Bangladesh.

Speaking about how the quota reform movement turned into a mass uprising, the youth shared that when former prime minister Sheikh Hasina called the protesting students "Razakars", it angered everyone.

Journo Rozina Islam cleared of charges

COURT CORRESPONDENT

Prothom Alo senior journalist Rozina Islam has been cleared of the charges in an Official Secrets Act case.

Dhaka Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate Sultan Sohag Uddin yesterday exempted Rozina, accepting a final report in the case, a court staffer told The Daily Star.

Earlier in the day, the PBI submitted the final report before the court, clearing Rozina of the charges in the case.

On May 17, 2021, Rozina was sued by a deputy secretary of the Health Services Division on allegations of stealing and capturing photos of "highly sensitive" government documents.

Ban AL, its associate bodies: Gono Odhikar

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Gono Odhikar Parishad yesterday called for the banning of the Awami League, Jubo League, and Chhatra League, which it labelled as "terrorist organisations".

After a one-and-half-hour meeting with the Home Affairs Adviser Brig Gen (retd) M Sakhawat Hossain at the secretariat, the parishad president Nurul Haque Nur and general secretary Rashed Khan laid out the party's eight-point demand.

They also demanded that the interim government appoint new superintendents of police and officers-in-charge in all 64 districts.

They urged the home adviser deploy a 10-member military team in vulnerable police stations to increase the morale of the cops and to normalise the law-and-order situation.

Gono Odhikar Parishad also demanded a people-friendly police system free of bribery and corruption.

OUR CORRESPONDENT,

Upon arrival at Sayed's home in Zafarpur Babanpur village in Pirganj around 1:45pm, Fakhrul offered prayers at Abu Sayed's grave and met his family members.

Later, he addressed a rally at Zafarpur Madrasa field at 3:00pm. He urged his party men to refrain from any attacks on minorities and resist evil plans by Awami League.

Primary schools reopen after 28 days

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Classes at all primary schools across the country resumed yesterday after a 28-day closure due to the quota reform movement, which was followed by widespread violence.

All government primary schools under eight city corporation areas of the country were declared closed for an indefinite period on July 17 amid tension over students' quota reform movement.

After nearly a month of closure, the Ministry of Primary and Mass Education issued an order on Tuesday to resume academic activities. The directive instructed all government primary schools under the ministry, primary schools operated by the Children's Welfare Trust, and learning centres run by the Bureau of Non-Formal Education, to take necessary measures to fully resume classroom activities.

However, despite an earlier announcement by the Inter-Services Public Relations (ISPR) on August 6 about the reopening of all educational institutions, student attendance remained low.

temples, churches, and houses of minorities and to prevent attacks, which deserve special recognition.

"At the same time, we are observing that some groups have become very active in confusing the public by spreading exaggerated news, false information, and rumours regarding the attacks on the houses of minorities," the statement added.

It cited various reports published in certain sections of the Indian media as examples.

"We urge everyone to be cautious of rumours and propaganda on social media," said the statement.

"We are especially concerned that there is a possibility that vested interests associated with the ruling party in India may be involved in this propaganda. We believe this is undermining the credibility of the Indian media," the statement said.

It urged the Indian media authorities to refrain from publishing such misleading, false, and distorted information. "We believe that they should do this in the interest of maintaining and strengthening the good historical relations between our countries," it read.

The signatories of the statement include Sultana Kamal, rights activist; Khushi Kabir, coordinator of Nijera Kori; Anu Muhammad, former teacher at Jahangirnagar University; Iftekharuzzaman, executive director of TIB; Rasheda K Chowdhury, former adviser of the caretaker government; ZI Khan Panna, senior advocate of the Supreme Court; Prof Gitiara Nasreen, teacher at Dhaka University; and photographer Shahidul Alam.

Students for political

Following that, Chhatra League and the police attacked their peaceful movement, leaving students, especially female students, beaten, bruised and bleeding.

The "unjust" actions taken by the former government, one after another, strengthened their movement.

Shaheen Anam, executive director of MJF, said, "We have a lot of hope for this generation. They will bring change to our society. We are all looking up to them. They just have to work together."

Fariha S Aumi, chairperson of youth-led non-profit organisation Brighters, said, "Abu Sayed was shot dead. Public universities were closed. We were worried about the movement being stopped. But when students from private universities joined the protests, along with students from schools and colleges, the movement gained more momentum. Soon, people also joined in. Parents even stood by the students with food and water. That is how this became a mass uprising."

Five killed in Dhaka in a day

Some people rescued and took them to Jatrabari Police Station, said Samrat Sheikh, a scout member who was discharging duty at the police station.

Of them, two were taken to DMCH, where doctors declared them dead, said Bachchu Mia. Later, people brought the other youth's body to DMCH in the afternoon.

Samrat said they came to know that locals beat them up over an allegation that the three youths raped a woman, tying up her husband in the hotel.

Shilpi Akhter, mother of Yasin, denied the allegation.

"Yasin was working as a volunteer on the streets for the last couple of days. On Tuesday morning, he left the house at Dhalpur Boubazar, saying he would work at night. An unknown caller called me this morning saying Yasin's condition was not good, and told me to go to Jatrabari Police Station. I immediately went there and found Yasin in serious condition," she said.

Shilpi said her son was still able to speak while being taken to the hospital.

"My son told me that they were beaten on false charges. They did not commit any crime," she said.

Disruption of services leave

Consequently, services provided by the city corporations, such as financial activities, birth and death registrations, holding tax collection, and trade licence issuance, alongside issuing marriage and citizenship certificates, have remained halted.

Only the waste management and mosquito control programmes are running partially, according to sources.

This newspaper tried to contact at least 103 councillors of the two city corporations and could only reach 39 of them.

Among the councillors who The Daily Star contacted, 19 of their offices were vandalised and looted and three faced arson, while 18 councillors said they have already resumed their operations and 20 are waiting for the government's direction.

The Daily Star found the mobile phones of 41 councillors switched off while 41 did not receive the phone calls.

Among the 75 general councillors of DSCC, 67 are pro-AL, while 51 out of 54 general DNCC councillors are pro-AL.

Md Abu Nasher, public relations officer of DSCC, said their birth registration, mosquito control, and garbage management activities are going on. However, the activities of the councillor offices are being hampered, he added.

DNCC Chief Executive Officer Mir Khairul Alam also gave a similar statement.

Contacted, Shahid Ullah, councillor of ward-46 at DSCC, said his office was vandalised after Hasina fled the country.

"If our security is ensured, we will start our regular activities," said Shahid.

Mujib Sorwar Masum, councillor of ward-9 at DNCC, said his office was vandalised and looted for which services have remained halted.

He said they usually provide 17 types of services, along with various certificates, but all activities are stopped now.

Masum said when they get proper security and the necessary equipment to run the office, they will start operation.

"The interim government urged us to continue services; but how will we start doing so without security and refurbishment?" he asked.

Abdur Rouf Nannu, DNCC ward-5 councillor whose office was not vandalised, said he did not make any trouble for anybody for which he did not face any problems.

Mohammad Jahir Ahmed, DNCC ward-15 councillor, said he attends the office regularly but stays there for a brief time.

"My office at Balurghat came under attack but the Bhashantake office is still okay as locals protected it. However, I am still feeling insecure," he said.

M Ali Akbar, DNCC ward-46 councillor, said they are providing service but not in full swing yet.

"We are conducting anti-mosquito drives three days a week instead of six days due to a shortage of insecticide. We hope the drives will resume in full swing from next week," he said.

Chittaranjan Das, DSCC ward-5 councillor, said they have been conducting garbage management and mosquito control activities over the phone since August 7.

However, 28 other services are not functional currently, he added.

"We are waiting for the direction of the interim government, as without security we can't join the office," said Chittaranjan, whose office was vandalised and looted.

Chittaranjan said their insecurity derives from the non-operation of the local police station.

Arrest guilty officials

Information regarding the missing persons should be obtained from these officials and the victims should be freed and returned to their families.

"I stand with my family and everyone for my brother, who went missing 12 years ago. I have been on the road for the last 11 years, hoping that after the country's 'second independence', we will get back all those who went missing," she said.

Earlier on Tuesday, Mayer Daak met with Muhammad Yunus, chief advisor to the interim government, requesting information about their missing relatives.

On August 6, a day after the fall of the Sheikh Hasina government, members of Mayer Daak gathered in front of the DGFI office to demand to know the whereabouts of their missing relatives. Several victims of enforced disappearances have been released since then.

At yesterday's event, Adiba Islam Hridi, 12, daughter of Parvez Hossain, general secretary of Bangshal Thana Chhatra Dal, was present. Law enforcement agencies picked up Hossain on December 2, 2013. "I was only a year old when I last saw my father... I have only one demand -- to get my father back," Hridi said.

Laima Akhter Mim, 13, daughter of driver Kawsar Hossain, who was picked up by law enforcers on December 4, 2013, along with six BNP leaders, including Sajedul Islam Suman, general secretary of the Ward 38 Unit BNP, urged the interim government to provide the whereabouts of all the enforced disappeared persons.

CR Abrar, a former professor of Dhaka University and the president of Odhikar, said, "We have enough information about those behind these enforced disappearances. Law enforcement agencies also have this information. Merge all the information, find out the whereabouts of the victims and free them."

Mahmudur Rahman Manna, convener of Nagarik Oikya; Faizul Hakim Lala, secretary of Jatiya Mukti Council; Saleh Uddin Sifat, president of Students Against Torture; Tarek Reza, one of the coordinators of the Anti-Discrimination Students Movement; and family members of the enforced disappeared persons also spoke at the programme, among others.

At a separate human chain in the area, DSA Victims' Network urged the government to scrap all repressive laws, including the Cyber Security Act.

Their demands included release of those convicted under the law and the dismissal of ongoing cases filed under the Digital Security Act. They called for the CSA and other repressive laws to be scrapped.

They emphasised that all accused should be compensated.

Merit, quality to be basis of all evaluations

Chief justice says on judiciary

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Chief Justice Syed Refaat Ahmed yesterday said merit and quality will be the basis of evaluation in all spheres of the judiciary.

"We [judiciary] are not an elected body. So, I think our accountability to the people is much higher," he also said, adding that he aspires to ensure excellence and run the judiciary based on merit.

He made the remarks when leaders and members of Law Reporters Forum, an organisation of journalists covering constitution, law, justice and human rights issues, met him at his Supreme Court office.

Replying to a query, the chief justice said activities of all the High Court benches will resume from next Sunday. Of the 50 HC benches, only eight have been functioning for the past few days.

He also said steps will be taken immediately so that all the HC benches mention the results of daily cases on the website.

Barguna AL leader held for 'talking to Hasina over phone'

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Patuakhali

Police have arrested Md Jahangir Kabir, general secretary of Barguna District Awami League, who purportedly had a phone conversation with former prime minister Sheikh Hasina after her ouster and escape to India.

The law enforcers arrested him around 6:00am yesterday.

The charges against Jahangir include conspiring with Hasina to create chaos by speaking to her, said Abdul Halim, additional superintendent of police (Sadar Circle).

He said a team of the Police Bureau of Investigation from Dhaka arrested Jahangir and took him to the capital.

A call record of about three minutes purportedly between Hasina and Jahangir went viral recently. The phone call took place at 8:10pm on August 12.

In that phone call, a woman believed to be Hasina instructed Jahangir to conduct party activities in a disciplined manner and observe the National Mourning Day on August 15.

Probe attacks on minorities

Demand 37 eminent citizens; urge Indian media to refrain from circulating misinformation

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Condemning attacks, arson, and looting incidents at minority communities' homes, businesses, and places of worship in several districts across the country, 37 eminent citizens issued a statement yesterday.

They demanded a fair investigation and legal action against those involved, and called for strengthening the sense of security among the people.

"In recent days, the homes, businesses, and temples of hundreds of minority people, especially Hindus, have been attacked, looted, and set on fire in different parts of the country. We have also received information that miscreants have attacked the homes of indigenous people in some areas and vandalised or set fire to the houses and places of worship of the Ahmadiyya community in two districts," the statement said.

"We have received reports from most places indicating that not all attacks have been motivated by religious reasons or property grabbing. In many cases, the attacks were carried out due to political anger and vengeance," it said.

At the same time, the historic sculpture of Shashi Lodge in Mymensingh, the sculpture of Sidhu-Kanu in Dinajpur, and the sculpture on the High Court premises were also vandalised.

"We condemn and protest all these attacks -- every act of violence and every attempt that destroys communal harmony. Our clear and unequivocal demand is that every incident be properly investigated and those involved be identified and punished immediately according to the law," the statement said.

The statement also mentioned that they are receiving reports of students, political party activists, and common people coming forward in many areas to protect

Five killed in Dhaka in a day

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Five people, including two siblings, were stabbed and beaten to death in two separate incidents in the capital's Sayedabad and Wari areas yesterday.

Al Amin Bhuiyan, 41, joint secretary of Ward 41 unit BNP, and his brother Nurul Amin Bhuiyan were beaten and stabbed in Wari's Hatkhola area in the morning.

Al Amin's wife Munmun Akter Bhuiyan said he had a dispute with some local Awami League leaders over a flat he bought in Hatkhola area.

"My husband had a scuffle with those Awami League men on Tuesday night. When he and his brother went to the flat this [yesterday] morning, those men hacked them to death," she alleged.

She also alleged that the killers worked for the real estate company that sold the flat to Al Amin.

The bodies were sent to the Dhaka Medical College Hospital morgue for autopsy, said Inspector Bachchu Mia, in-charge of DMCH police outpost.

Meanwhile, Saif Arafat Sharif, 20, Saidul Islam Yasin, 19, and an unidentified youth, aged around 25, were beaten to death in the morning at a hotel in the Sayedabad area.

Hindu family's house torched in Thakurgaon

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Thakurgaon

Unidentified miscreants torched the house of a Hindu family in Thakurgaon on Tuesday night.

The incident occurred around 7:30pm at Farabari Mandirpara village in Sadar upazila, said Shubrata Barman, chairman of Akcha Union Parishad.

Shubrata said the miscreants set fire to Kaleshwar Barman's house when his wife was in the kitchen.

As the fire quickly spread, locals rushed to the scene and managed to bring the blaze under control.

Just a few days ago, another arson attack took place in the same union, where miscreants set fire to Ananta Barman's house in Nimbari Kamarpara village.

‘False cases to be withdrawn by August 31’

But it did not happen as most of the police officials could not work on this, he added.

Over 400 people, including students and police personnel, were killed in the violence centring the protests.

According to the court records, over 270 cases were lodged with 39 police stations in the city between July 16 and August 4. The complainants in most cases were police personnel.

The charges in the cases include illegal gathering, rioting, assaulting law enforcers, damaging assets, and arson.

According to the police sources, at least 10,134 people, including students, leaders and activists of BNP and Jamaat-Shibir, were arrested in 872 cases filed in the capital and 51 districts between July 18 and 30.

Asif Nazrul, also a teacher at Dhaka University, said they decided that the trial for the killings that took place between July 1 and August 5 will be held at the International Crimes Tribunal.

He said they were trying to ensure that the investigation by the ICT is held under the supervision of the United Nations. They will sit with the UN resident coordinator in Bangladesh and seek its cooperation, he added.

Asif Nazrul said victims of enforced disappearances and their families can file cases with the ICT.

Asked whether the trial will be held at the ICT, he said, “You can go to the International Criminal Court only if you are unwilling or unable to try the cases at your own criminal court. We are not incompetent.”

The adviser said a list of the repressive laws on media has been prepared and sections the sections used for harassing journalists “will either be cancelled or amended”.

He said the murder case of journalist couple Sagar-Runi will be tried.

Asif Nazrul asked officials and employees of the judiciary to submit their wealth statements within 10 working days.

He said they have taken some initiatives to reform the judiciary, he added.

“The law ministry has cooperated in appointing the chief justice and the judges of the Appellate Division.

“We’re getting praise from all over the country. We are focusing on quality and integrity.

“Partisan appointments were earlier made by the Attorney General’s Office. About half the officers have already resigned.”

Asif Nazrul said they appointed a number of law officers hurriedly subjected to as much scrutiny as possible. “There may be a couple of mistakes, there will be scope to correct those.”

He said they banned the use of plastic products at courts to improve the environment.

Asked whether the special act on electricity and energy will be repealed, the law adviser said he would talk to the chief adviser. “I believe it will be revoked very soon.”

‘Our govt mishandled the protests’

judicial system to handle it,” the daily quoted Joy as saying.

Joy, who was Hasina’s IT adviser, reiterated a foreign intelligence agency was behind the violent turn the protests took.

“I firmly believe that a foreign intelligence agency was involved, especially because many of the demonstrators, starting from July 15, were armed with firearms. Firearms are very difficult to obtain in Bangladesh due to our successful control of militancy over the last 15 years. The only organisation capable of smuggling firearms into the country and supplying them to demonstrators would be a foreign intelligence agency,” he said.

Joy’s claims of students using firearms on police remain unverified as no media outlet reported such occurrences during the protests. However, there have been published articles in several media outlets of Awami League activists using firearms during clashes with protesters.

Describing the events of the 24 hours leading up to his mother’s departure from Bangladesh on August 5, Joy said neither he nor Hasina anticipated how rapidly the situation would deteriorate even a day before the situation spiralled out of control.

“She [Hasina] had no intention of leaving the country. She was going to resign, submit a resignation to the president and announce it in a public statement. I believe she was drafting the statement and preparing to record an interview. Everything was planned. In fact, she was about to start recording when the special security said, ‘Ma’am, there’s no time. We have to go now’,” according to Joy.

He said Hasina was adamant on not leaving but he convinced her to do so.

“The Special Security Force took her to a safe location inside the military air base, they had a helicopter ready for her, but she did not wish to go ... that’s when my aunt [Sheikh Rehana, Hasina’s younger sister] called me. I convinced my mother that ‘no, for your safety you have to leave’. If this mob finds you, catches up with you somewhere and there’s shooting, lots of people will die. Either you’ll get blamed or, if they catch you, they will kill you. So, your best option is to leave the country. And I’m the one who convinced her to leave.”

Asked what his message to India would be, Joy said he would urge New Delhi to take a leadership role and ensure the constitution of Bangladesh is upheld.

“...especially this being on India’s doorstep... I would hope India would ensure that elections are held within the constitutional timeframe of 90 days, that the mob rule is stopped and that the Awami League is allowed to campaign and reorganise. If that is ensured, I’m still confident that we will win the election... We still remain the most popular party,” he said.

Delhi eager to work with interim govt minorities in Bangladesh.

He said these reports, along with former prime minister Sheikh Hasina’s statements while in India, were “not conducive to friendly relations or to fostering better bilateral relations”.

Asked about Verma’s reply on these issues, Touhid said the Indian envoy would inform New Delhi about his concerns and then India would make a decision on these matters.

Speaking about the attacks on minorities, the adviser said the interim government is committed to investigating each of the incidents and bringing the perpetrators to book.

The government is also pledge-bound to ensure the safety and security of all religious and ethnic groups, he added.

UK High Commissioner Sarah Cooke, Chinese Ambassador Yao Wen, Saudi Ambassador Isa bin Yusuf Al-Duhailan, and EU Deputy Chief of Mission Bernd Spanier also called on the foreign affairs adviser.

Touhid briefed all of them about how the interim government was formed. He informed them that the government’s objective is to make political, state and economic reforms as mandated by the students and the people, whose movement forced Hasina to resign and flee to India on August 5.

All the diplomats said corruption should be kept on check, according to the adviser. “The corrupt enjoy impunity. A few people looted banks and laundered money,” he said.

Saudi Ambassador Isa bin Yusuf Al-Duhailan said the embassy resumed issuing visas to Bangladeshi workers on Wednesday after a pause amid the recent demonstrations.

“The Saudi Embassy is now providing all types of services. Under normal circumstances, an average of 5,000 visas were issued daily,” he told the media.

About his meeting with Touhid Hossain, Yusuf said they discussed a number of issues, including economic matters and visa issuance, hoping for quick restoration of stability and peace.

Asked whether former prime minister Sheikh Hasina sought asylum in the Gulf kingdom, the ambassador said he had not heard anything like that.

EU’s Spanier in a post on X said the bloc looks forward to supporting the interim government and the transition process with a range of instruments at its disposal.

In a statement, the British High Commission said the UK will support the interim government in its efforts to restore peace and order, ensure accountability and chart a peaceful pathway to an inclusive, prosperous and democratic future for the people of Bangladesh.

British High Commissioner Cooke said she discussed with Touhid how the UK can support the interim government’s work towards a democratic and prosperous future, and other issues of mutual interest, including the Rohingya crisis.

Cooke praised the students and the people for their bravery in the protests for a different future for Bangladesh.

In a statement, Dan Jørgensen, the minister for development cooperation and global climate policy of Denmark, yesterday said his country wanted the interim government to focus on good governance, respect for human rights and democracy, including impartial investigations into the many tragic deaths during the protests.

August 15, the darkest of dawns

A few tanks stopped at the entrance to Road 32 while a few others went in, coming to a stop at the gate of the residence.

Bangabandhu’s personal assistant AFM Mohitul Islam was on night duty at the residence. Suddenly the phone rang, and he sleepily picked up the receiver.

“Serniabat’s [Bangabandhu’s brother-in-law Abdur Rab Serniabat] house is under attack!

“Get the police control room immediately,” Bangabandhu spoke on the phone from his first-floor bedroom.

Mohitul dialled the police but failed to get through. Just then Mujib came down to the office room and asked whether he could contact the police control room. Mohitul replied in the negative.

Mohitul finally got the line of the Gono Bhaban exchange. Someone picked up the phone there but would not speak. Impatient, the president took the handset himself and spoke into it: “This is President Sheikh Mujib speaking.”

Just then a barrage of bullets shattered the windowpanes and hit the wall of the office room. The gunshots continued for a while. Bangabandhu’s assassination mission by a group of disgruntled army officers had begun.

As the gunfire abated for a moment, Bangabandhu managed to talk to Gen Shafiullah over phone and asked him to send force immediately as his house was under attack. Shafiullah replied: “I am doing something; can you get out of the house?”

House help Abdul brought Bangabandhu’s white punjabi and glasses from the first floor. Putting those on, the president came out on the veranda.

“There are shootings all around. What are you doing?” he shouted at the sentries. And then he went back to the upper floor.

Sheikh Kamal came down to the ground floor. He requested the army and police members to come with him.

At that moment three to four soldiers in khaki and black fatigues entered the premises. Mohitul recognised one of them as Captain Bazlul Huda, who shot Kamal dead.

The army men asked some soldiers to keep watch on Mohitul and others gathered near the gate and hurried to the first floor.

Havildar Md Quddus Sikder, who had arrived at the residence around 4:45am on his regular duty, was detained as soon as the soldiers entered the house. He saw Captain Bazlul Huda, Major Nur and Major Mohiuddin at the gate.

What unfolded next before Quddus was the terrible events.

Huda and Nur ordered him to follow them as they went up to the first floor along with their troops. As they walked up to the landing of the staircase, they saw Major Mohiuddin and his soldiers leading Bangabandhu down.

“What do you want?” Bangabandhu had asked.

Nobody answered.

Suddenly, Huda and Nur aimed their Sten guns at Bangabandhu and pressed the triggers. Burst fire from the submachine guns hit him.

The president collapsed on the stairs.

After killing Bangabandhu, the soldiers ran riot all over the residence. Bangabandhu’s family members had taken shelter inside the bathroom of the main bedroom. But they were not spared.

The soldiers knocked on the door and fired a few rounds at it. Begum Mujib opened it and begged for the lives of her family.

The killers gunned Begum Mujib, Sheikh Jamal, his wife Rosy, and Kamal’s wife Sultana. The bodies fell in a heap.

Then they took Sheikh Naser and Sheikh Russell to the ground floor and made them stand in a line. Naser pleaded to live, but the killers took him into the bathroom attached to Mohitul’s office and shot him.

Naser begged for water, but a soldier shot him again.

Then happened the cruellest thing.

Trembling, Russell, Bangabandhu’s 10-year-old son, wailed to be taken to his mother. Clutching Mohitul he asked: “Bhaiya, will they kill me too?”

“No Bhaiya, they won’t kill you,” Mohitul had tried to console him.

One of the soldiers took Russel upstairs to the spot where his mother lay dead. Then came a burst of gunfire.

After a while, Major Farooq Rahman met Bazlul Huda at the gate and asked him something.

“All are finished,” Huda replied.

BNP focused

Talking to The Daily Star, BNP Standing Committee member Amir Khasru Mahmud Chowdhury said, “We were busy over waging movements for many years. But now it is the time to do politics, and we will do whatever required to do so. Withdrawal of politically motivated cases against our party leaders and workers is at the top of our agenda as an oppressive regime filed the cases.”

He said they placed their demand in this regard before the interim government.

According to party sources, the BNP leaders will continuously create pressure on the interim government to hold elections at the soonest.

But the party will not have a confrontational stance since it has decided to give the government the time required to create an atmosphere conducive to polls.

After meeting Chief Adviser Muhammad Yunus on Monday, BNP high-ups believe that the gap between the interim government and the party was narrowing. They think they will be able to have their demands fulfilled by having a good relationship with the government.

At the meeting, withdrawal cases against party chairperson Khaleda Zia and BNP’s acting chairman Tarique Rahman and others had come up for discussion.

Party insiders said the party wants to influence the interim government to have its like-minded people at top positions in the bureaucracy, police force, and other places.

It will also try to bring back to work those who had been sent into forced retirement by the previous government for their soft spot for the BNP. Those who are now above 60 would be posted under contracts, they said.

The BNP will also go for trust-building programmes like market monitoring, curbing food inflation, they said.

To this end, the party has already started work. It has expelled or suspended about 100 of its leaders for their involvement in violence and breach of party discipline after the fall of the AL government to send the message that there is no room for violence in the party.

Around 50 more party leaders were served showcase notice for their alleged involvement in vandalism.

Beximco leaves Janata parliament from Dhaka-1 (Dohar-Nawabganj) from 2018 until the dissolution of the 12th parliament on August 6, took out huge volumes of loans with the help of the Janata board and central bank higher-ups bypassing banking rules and regulation, The Daily Star has learnt from several Janata officials of past and present.

And the loans have increased at a brisk pace over the last three years.

In 2015, Beximco and its concerns’ loans amounted to Tk 2,045 crore, which increased to Tk 6,400 crore in 2020. At the end of June, the figure hit Tk 25,000 crore.

Between July 2021 and July 2022, Beximco opened nine new companies; in just one month of 2022, it created eight new companies and availed loans in the name of those companies, documents show.

Salman, vice-chairman of Beximco Group, used his clout in the Sheikh Hasina administration to get the central bank to grant special approval for large loans, the Janata officials said on the condition of anonymity to speak candidly on the issue.

For instance, on August 1 last year, the Bangladesh Bank gave a no-objection certificate to extend loans amounting to Tk 479 crore to Beximco although the amount violated Janata’s single borrower exposure limit.

Despite objection from the Department of Off-Site Supervision, the central bank wing responsible for monitoring and regulating banks, then governor Abdur Rouf Talukder gave the exemption to Beximco.

“This kind of exemption from the top undermines our efforts to establish good governance in the sector,” said a top BB official on the condition of anonymity.

At that time, BB Spokesman Md Mezbaul Haque told The Daily Star that the exemption was granted for the purpose of recovering the loans.

SM Mahfuzur Rahman, chairman of Janata Bank, told The Daily Star then that the lender provided the loan only after getting approval from the central bank.

Salman also used his political clout to always reschedule loans and get easy terms such that Beximco was not grouped with bank defaulters, the Janata officials said.

For instance, the business group -- which has interests in textiles, pharmaceuticals, PPE, ceramics, real estate, construction, trading, marine food, ICT, media, DTH, financial services and energy -- rescheduled a major portion of its loans in June 2022 and the rest in June last year.

A large portion of those loans had defaulted and a fresh rescheduling package was placed at the bank’s board meeting on July 30.

The proposal was not approved, documents show.

“That’s why, about Tk 18,000 crore of Beximco’s loans have turned bad,” said a Janata official on the condition of anonymity for fear of reprisal.

Of the loans that have gone sour, Tk 5,030 crore is from the Export Development Fund, which was formed by taking funds from the country’s foreign currency reserves.

Asked about Janata’s hazardous exposure to Beximco, Md Abdul Jabbar, the bank’s managing director, said some of the loans were approved or extended from the branch level and were not placed at the board meeting.

As much as 60 percent of the loans were taken from one branch: Janata’s local office in Dilkusha, Motijheel, documents show.

“That is why a single group availed a huge amount of loans. That type of misuse has come down after my appointment as the MD. I did not allow further deterioration of the financial health of the bank,” he told The Daily Star yesterday.

Jabbar was appointed the MD on a three-year contract on April 13 last year.

Once one of the most reputed banks in Bangladesh, Janata’s financial health worsened thanks to a series of loan scams involving AnonTex and Crescent.

Its other large borrowers are S Alam Group, AnonTex, Crescent, Orion Group and Ratanpur Group

In 2017, Janata Bank’s bad loans stood at Tk 5,818 crore. At the end of June, it stood at Tk 48,000 crore.

At the end of June last year, Janata had a capital shortfall of Tk 2,189 crore, according to data from BB.

Beximco Group declined The Daily Star’s request for comment.

Islami Chhatra Shibir.

The leaders and activists of leftist organisations, including Student Union, Samajtantrik Chhatra Front, had participated in the programmes of the Anti-discrimination Student Movement, but they did not take part in yesterday’s rally.

However, leaders of Chhatra Dal and Islami Chhatra Shibir spoke at the rally.

The rally attendees also took an oath that they would never compromise with the national dignity and sovereignty and to raise their voices against the state power if it became oppressive or attempted to be so.

Attending the rally, Santosh Sharma, general secretary of Bangladesh Puja Udjapan Parishad, said, “The minorities are still being subjected to torture in our country due to a culture of impunity. We want to see a Bangladesh where no place of worship will be attacked.”

Afterwards, the students brought out a procession around 5:45pm, which ended at Dhanmondi 27. Students offered prayers for those killed in the July-August violence. The students stayed at Dhanmondi 27 until midnight, according to witnesses.

Similar rallies and processions were held in Chattogram, Khulna, Barishal and Rangpur.

Army, BGB, and additional police personnel were deployed on the court premises.

Salman and Anisul were arrested in Dhaka’s Sadarghat on Tuesday in a case filed with New Market Police Station over the killing of Shahjahan, 24, during quota reform protests on July 16.

Shahjahan was critically injured and later died at Dhaka Medical College Hospital, according to the case statement.

In the police forwarding report, the investigator said the accused’s involvement in the incident was preliminary found.

Salman and Anisul were trying to flee through the waterway, police earlier said.

Coast guards detained them in Narayanganj’s Pagla area and handed them over to police, said the media wing of Bangladesh Coast Guard on Tuesday night.

Sudan ceasefire talks start despite army no-show

AFP, Geneva

US-sponsored talks on agreeing a ceasefire in the devastating conflict in Sudan kicked off in Switzerland yesterday, despite the Sudanese government staying away.

War has raged since April 2023 between the Sudanese army under the country’s de facto ruler Abdel Fattah al-Burhan and the paramilitary Rapid Support Forces (RSF), led by his former deputy Mohamed Hamdan Daglo.

“The talks have started,” a spokesman for the US mission in Geneva told AFP, adding that there was “no change” to the non-participation of the Sudanese government.

The brutal conflict has triggered one of the world’s worst humanitarian crises.

While the RSF is taking part in the talks, the Sudanese armed forces (SAF) are unhappy with the format arranged by Washington.

“The RSF delegation has arrived in Switzerland. Our US delegation, and the collective international partners, technical experts and Sudanese civil society, are still waiting on the SAF. The world is watching,” Tom Perriello, the US special envoy for Sudan, said before the talks began.

He urged the government to “seize the opportunity”, saying after the opening session that it was “high time for the guns to be silenced”.

The talks, which could last up to 10 days, are being held behind closed doors in an undisclosed location in Switzerland.

They are co-hosted by Saudi Arabia and Switzerland, with the African Union, Egypt, the United Arab Emirates and the United Nations acting as a steering group.

Sudanese Media Minister Graham Abdelkader said ahead of the talks that the government was rejecting “any new observers or participants” -- after Washington “insisted on the participation of the United Arab Emirates as an observer”.

The Sudanese army has repeatedly accused the UAE of backing the RSF.

Without the SAF, other attendees will press on with the talks’ agenda.

The fighting has forced one in five people to flee their homes, while tens of thousands have died. More than 25 million across the country -- more than half its population -- face acute hunger.

J&K CLASHES

Indian soldier, suspected rebel killed

AFP, Srinagar

Soldiers in Indian-administered Jammu and Kashmir battled insurgents yesterday, with a captain and a suspected rebel killed in clashes in the territory, the army and police said.

The Indian army, in a post on social media platform X, offered its "deepest condolences" over the death of the officer.

Police said in a statement that "during the ongoing operation, one terrorist has been neutralised", a term they use indicating a gunman had been killed.

The violence is the latest in a string of clashes in the Hindu-dominated southern Jammu region this year.

Indian Defence Minister Rajnath Singh called a meeting with army, security, and intelligence chiefs yesterday after the latest clashes in Jammu.

In May 1971, the Pakistan authorities put several of his family members under house arrest when they were living in House Number 26 on Road Number 18 in Dhanmondi.

DHANMONDI HOME OVER GONO BHABAN

After liberation, Sheikh Mujib chose to live in his Dhanmondi house rather than in Gono Bhaban, the official residence of prime minister.

Journalist ABM Musa in his book titled "Mujib Bhai" notes that it was because of Begum Mujib, who wanted to maintain her own identity beyond the role of the prime minister's wife.

In independent Bangladesh, this house hosted many international figures, including Indian prime minister Indira Gandhi, Egyptian president Anwar Sadat and Yugoslav president Josip Broz Tito.

The walls of this house have witnessed tragedy too.

On the fateful night of August 15, 1975, the house became a scene of horror as Sheikh Mujib and 16 of his family members were assassinated in a military coup.

FROM HOME TO MUSEUM

After Bangabandhu's assassination, the house was sealed off until 1981.

Meanwhile, the residence was put up for auction by the House Building Finance Corporation in June 1981. Sheikh Hasina, Mujib's daughter, reclaimed its ownership upon her return to Bangladesh that year by paying Tk 12,000 in principal amount and interest.

Subsequently on August 14, 1994, the house was turned into a memorial museum after extensive renovation.

The museum was open to the public for the past 30 years, from August 1994 to August 5, 2024.

Following the ouster of Sheikh Hasina on August 5 in the face of an uprising against her rule, most historical records, including books and memorabilia, were destroyed in an attack by a mob who vandalised and set almost everything on fire.

"While past regime changes have seen violence and vandalism, the extent of destruction this time is unprecedented," said eminent history professor Muntasir Mamun.

"These incidents are a stark reminder of our nation's alarming oblivion towards history. The Liberation War and Bangabandhu are the heritage of all Bangladeshis, and we will be held responsible by future generations for failing to safeguard these national symbols," said Prof Muntasir, also president of 1971: Genocide-Torture Archive and Museum.

POST-COUP MYANMAR

Military denies junta chief detained by generals

AFP, Yangon

Myanmar's military yesterday said rumours top generals had detained the embattled junta chief in a new coup were "propaganda" spread by "traitors" ahead of a visit by China's foreign minister.

Junta chief Min Aung Hlaing has faced public criticism from military supporters in recent weeks as government troops lose territory to ethnic minority armed groups and other opponents battling to overturn its 2021 coup.

On Tuesday several social media posts claimed that top generals had detained Min Aung Hlaing in the capital Naypyidaw in a bid to change the junta's top leadership.

The claims were "propaganda... with the aim of disrupting the country's peace and stability," the junta said in a statement, accusing those sharing the news of being "traitors".

"The head of state and authorities are fulfilling their national responsibility together," it said. Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi was due to arrive in Myanmar yesterday for talks with Min Aung Hlaing. The visit is "aimed at deepening bilateral mutually beneficial cooperation in various fields," an unnamed Chinese foreign ministry spokesman said on Tuesday.

China is a major ally and arms supplier to the junta but analysts say it also maintains ties with ethnic armed groups. In recent weeks an alliance of ethnic armed groups has seized territory from the junta in northern Shan state, which borders China's Yunnan province.

Hamas to stay out of new Gaza truce talks

Demands adoption of Biden-backed proposal; 36 more Palestinians killed in Israeli attacks

REUTERS, Cairo

The Palestinian group Hamas said yesterday it would not take part in a new round of Gaza ceasefire talks slated for today in Qatar, dimming hopes for a negotiated truce that Iranian sources say could hold back an Iranian attack on Israel.

The US has said it expects indirect talks to go ahead as planned in Qatar's capital Doha today, and that a ceasefire agreement was still possible. However, Axios reported that US Secretary of State Antony Blinken has postponed a trip to the Middle East that had been expected to begin on Tuesday.

Three senior Iranian officials have said that only a ceasefire deal in Gaza would hold Iran back from direct retaliation against Israel for the assassination of Hamas leader Ismail Haniyeh on its soil last month.

The Israeli government said it would send a delegation to today's talks, but Hamas, the Palestinian group that controls Gaza, requested a workable plan to implement a proposal it has already accepted rather than more talks.

"Hamas is committed to the proposal presented to it on July 2, which is based on the US Security Council resolution and the Biden speech and the movement is prepared to immediately begin discussion over a mechanism to implement it," Senior Hamas official Sami Abu Zuhri told Reuters.

Israel intensifies shelling on eastern areas of Khan Younis

Gaza death toll rises to 39,965

There has been no let-up in fighting in Gaza, where residents of the southern city of Khan Younis said Israeli forces blew up homes in the east and intensified tank shelling on eastern areas of the city centre.

Israel said it was responding to Hamas rocket fire towards Tel Aviv on Tuesday and had struck "rocket launching pads and militants among 40 military targets over 24 hours, including in central Gaza, Khan Younis, and western Rafah in the south".

Armed groups of Hamas and the Islamic Jihad said they had attacked Israeli forces in several areas, while Palestinian health officials said Israeli strikes had killed at least 14 people yesterday, mostly in the centre and south.

Israel's military offensive in the Gaza Strip has killed at least 39,965 Palestinians and wounded 92,294 since October 7, the Palestinian enclave's health ministry said yesterday. A total of 36 Palestinians have been killed and 54 wounded in the past 24 hours, the ministry said in a statement.

Paltan around 7:30pm on July 19. A little later, Fatema came to know from a neighbour that her husband was lying on the road, bleeding.

Fatema and her daughter went there and took Kamal to Dhaka Medical College Hospital, but the doctors pronounced him dead around 7:55pm, reads the case statement.

Fatema again went to the scene and came to know from locals that quota reforms protesters had gathered at VIP Road intersection on July 19.

"At one stage, criminals opened fire at police personnel and the cops also fired shots in the air. As the two sides chased and counter-chased each other, my husband was hit. Criminals then left the scene firing shots. My husband fell on the road after being hit by bullets," Fatema said in the complaint.

She accused unidentified assailants of the murder.

Interestingly, Palak and Shaikat were earlier detained at Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport when they were attempting to leave the country, according to reports run by different media outlets on August 6.

An airport official had told The Daily Star that some airport employees had barred Palak from going abroad, kept him confined to the airport lounge and informed the army about the incident.

On the same day, the authorities detained Shaikat along with another Chhatra League leader at the Dhaka airport, reported Prothom Alo.

According to the HSIA sources, the two BCL leaders went to the airport to depart the country, but the immigration authorities prevented them from leaving.

Remembering Bangabandhu

Reflecting on his legacy and the struggle for independence

Today, August 15, marks the 49th anniversary of the assassination of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman and nearly his entire family. We remember his pivotal role in uniting the people of Bangladesh and leading them towards independence with reverence. Emerging as a major opposition figure in Pakistani politics between 1948 and 1971, he became a key leader who rallied opposition to President Ayub Khan and his oppressive regime. It was Bangabandhu who catalysed public support across the then East Pakistan for the Six-Point Movement, advocating for greater autonomy for the region. As the movement garnered widespread support, it became a crucial milestone on the path to Bangladesh's independence.

Sheikh Mujib's most significant contribution came during the tumultuous period leading up to the Liberation War of 1971. Under his leadership, the people of East Pakistan were inspired to fight for independence when West Pakistani leaders refused to acknowledge and respect their wishes. Through his charismatic leadership, Bangabandhu mobilised the masses—particularly through his historic March 7 speech at the Racecourse Ground in Dhaka—to take up whatever arms they could muster and fight for the nation's liberation. Following his call for resistance, millions of brave Bangladeshis put everything they had on the line to liberate the country from the oppressive Pakistani regime led by the ruthless military leader Muhammad Yahya Khan.

Although Sheikh Mujib was arrested and imprisoned in West Pakistan during the war, his indomitable spirit and the leadership he had instilled in the nation kept the fight for freedom alive. The significance of his role in uniting the people of Bangladesh to both dream of and pursue independence cannot be overstated.

The assassination of Bangabandhu in 1975 was a devastating blow to the country. This tragic event marked a dark chapter in our history, bringing the military into our politics—a major issue that the Bangladeshi people had previously struggled with during the Pakistan era. This shocking turn of events set back his vision of creating a fair and just society where every individual would be equal in the eyes of the law. To this day, Bangladesh has yet to fully establish some of the basic principles that Mujib and other independence leaders had advocated for.

That said, on this day, we must recognise the tremendous contributions of Bangabandhu in our history of independence. Without his leadership, the independence of Bangladesh might have been delayed for much longer and achieved at an even greater cost. While his ideals have yet to be fully realised in the independent Bangladesh, the best way to honour his memory is to work tirelessly to establish the Bangladesh that he and countless others struggled and sacrificed so much for.

Biman can no longer be a law unto itself

Revelation of yet another scandal shows urgency of reforms

The Daily Star's revelation of a syndicate within Biman Bangladesh Airlines that manipulated ticket prices for Malaysia-bound flights in April-May is yet another reminder of the systemic corruption that has been plaguing the national carrier. According to our report, a civil aviation ministry probe found that several Biman officials, including those at the highest levels, were complicit in blocking tickets and inflating prices. What this means is that Biman was directly responsible for the crisis that saw several thousand migrant workers failing to fly before the May 31 deadline, when the Malaysian labour market was closed for Bangladesh. This is totally unacceptable.

Reportedly, between April 15 and May 31, the price of an economy class ticket on Biman flights from Dhaka to Kuala Lumpur soared from Tk 20,475 to an outrageous Tk 73,710. It was the result of a deliberate scheme where the syndicate blocked seats—often all of them on a single plane—for the benefit of 14 travel agencies, depriving other agencies of access to tickets (a total of 480 agencies are registered with Biman). The syndication allowed these companies to sell tickets at exorbitant rates. It also led to flights departing with empty seats, while migrant workers were either forced to pay the high price or left stranded. The failure to go, having already paid enough for it, eventually plunged them into further financial hardship.

For years, this is all Biman has been doing—causing one corruption scandal after another, and getting off scot-free. In this column, we have repeatedly commented on the airline's dysfunction, procurement and recruitment irregularities, operational inefficiencies, etc. Its decisions to purchase aircraft were also frequently criticised. Every decision it made seemed to be affected by parochial interests, while the lack of any functional accountability mechanism allowed unscrupulous officials and dubious entities to commit corruption with impunity.

Such corruption and mismanagement led to repeated financial losses, damaging our credibility and reputation on the global stage. The plight of the migrant workers denied passage in May is but the tip of a huge iceberg of sufferings caused over the years. This has to stop. The air of change brought by the recent mass uprising, which saw almost all government institutions and pillars of power being shaken, must reach Biman, too. The urgency for reforms cannot be overstated. We urge the government to take decisive actions to cleanse Biman of its corrupt elements, ensure accountability at all levels, and implement policies that can meet the demands of the new age.

THIS DAY IN HISTORY

Omagh Bombing in Ireland

On this day in 1998, a car bomb exploded in Omagh, Northern Ireland, killing 29 people and leaving more than 200 injured. The Real Irish Republican Army (Real IRA), an IRA splinter group, claimed responsibility for the bombing, which was the deadliest attack in Northern Ireland since the eruption of violence there in the late 1960s.

The end came as it does inevitably to all autocrats and dictators. The five-time prime minister with questionable electoral credentials, who mutated from an elected prime minister in 1996 to the worst autocrat the country has suffered, was forced out of the illegal power she had acquired in the face of a popular uprising, the tide of which no state machinery could stem.

Her deft application of the principles of CMR and her investment in the military in the 15 years of her misrule paid off. She was given a safe exit. Not only that—she, after being ferried to the nearest Indian airport, was eventually deposited in New Delhi, in a BAF C-130, where she is now happily ensconced. Her personally close connection with the Indian authorities and her over-all India policy have paid good dividends, because Delhi is likely to be her next abode for the foreseeable future, a denouement to Hasina's political career that most people had anticipated.

I feel the time is past to dwell on whether she should have left sooner and avoided the killings that she presided on. Enough it is to say that she could have, but drunk in the elixir of power, she suffered from a psychological state that all autocrats and dictators who use the state institutions to validate the usurpation of political power suffer from—a euphoria, a feeling of perpetuity, had engulfed her. She wanted to stay in power on the blood of the youths. No movements in the history of Bangladesh have taken so many lives in so few days as the quota reform movement. Even if one were to take the official count, the numbers will shame even the Kim Ill Sungs and Stalins. What is reprehensible is the attempt by ministers to put the blame on so-called miscreants, washing all responsibilities of the killings off the hand of the law enforcement agencies.

As reports reveal, she wanted sterner action by the army. Providence and good sense helped avoid a catastrophe whose consequence one shudders to think. All credit to the CAS for the subsequent development.

As many had predicted, Hasina's departure came through a mass uprising, the spark provided by a non-political issue that morphed into a political issue, the nine-point demand becoming a single-point demand asking for her departure. As before, this movement was also given the lead by students. No political party was capable of providing the lead, primarily because the Hasina regime over the last 15 years had unleashed such repressive and coercive measures on the opposition that it was all but neutered. However, political opposition was not the only thing that Hasina had neutered; effectively all the state institutions were made completely dysfunctional, becoming an appendage of the ruling party.

The end came in the way it did for the autocrat because of the ham-handed and amateurish way the issue of quota was handled by the advisers surrounding Hasina. Suppressing the demand by force was what they wanted, proving once again that "History is not a teacher but a warden: it does not teach anything but punishes severely for unlearned lessons." Hasina and her close cohorts and confidants didn't learn from the Pakistanis that the Bangalee spirit needs more than bullets to be suppressed.

The mistake not only cost Hasina the throne, but the nation also lost hundreds of young people who fell victim to one person's lust for eternal power that manifested in unchecked police brutality.

Unlike the cliche "the past is past," I say the past is not past. There is a lot to answer for on the part of Hasina, her party and all those elements in society that helped prop her illegal ascendancy to, and repeated usurpation of, power through the help of state agencies. I am confident that the present dispensation will go into the litany of misdeeds of the erstwhile government over the last 15 years and those responsible for the desecration of people's rights, subversion of the country's interest for partisan gains, destruction of the state institutions and machineries, crippling of the country's economy, gross violation of human rights like enforced disappearance and extrajudicial killings, and the overall breakdown of law and order, will be put in the dock. Not only the past regime, but those government functionaries who knowingly participated in persecuting the regime's plan must also be held to account.

But now, for the matter at hand.

An interim government is in place, and its members are persons with not only national and international repute but of impeccable character. But in a situation like this, no one will envy their position nor covet their job.

They have a huge task in hand, an Augean stable caused by long years of accretion of muck will have to be cleared. Every single institution will have to be cleansed: the derailed administration, the partisan Election Commission and the Anti-Corruption Commission, whose application of the rules, it is alleged, varied depending on who the alleged offender it was dealing with. Standard of application differed, depending on whether one belonged to the ruling party or the opposition.

The police should be a major concern for the interim government. Hardly have I seen, if ever, the police being subjected to such public wrath. But by the same token, hardly have I seen the police act with such impunity, disregard for the rule of law and human rights. That is the inevitable outcome of a political regime's use of the state law enforcement and intelligence agencies to come to and retain power. The police wanted its pound of flesh from the Awami League and got it, even more, by way of a carte blanche for repression and coercion.

But I have a different take on the attack on police stations following the flight of Hasina. I believe it may have been part of a well-constructed conspiracy to destabilise the country.

The job is not done. It is only the beginning. Hostile intelligence agencies are busy spreading propaganda and falsehood about the situation in the country. Creating communal strife was, I believe, an alternative plan by hostile elements to start an internal division in the country to create grounds for reversing the result of the student revolution. I am confident that Bangladesh will never see a Gujarat. All sorts of attempts to undermine the student revolution have been thwarted, but many more attempts may be on the anvil to negate the gains.

The country has witnessed a new dawn, a second independence. We must not let our guard down and allow anyone to negate our new dawn.

Are we ready for Bangladesh 2.0?

What just happened in Bangladesh is a revolution led and staged by students with people's support. In this historical moment when Gen Z and reformists are driving Bangladesh, I feel charged and would like to reflect on the call made by Dr Muhammad Yunus for people to come forward and work with him. The Yunus-led interim government along with the student leaders have the task for reform and the establishment of justice cut out for them. So let us take a step in the direction of our action and commitment to materialise this agenda.

Should we call for a new social contract—an agreement among individuals within a social group to abide by rules and laws for collective good—that reflects inclusion and equity? Are we ready to decolonise our minds and refrain from the "fear narrative" across all levels? Can we commit to stop celebrating violence in all possible narratives? If not, can there be a change until we shed old habits and work on our sense of responsible citizenship, moral values, and integrity?

Are we ready to stop discriminating based on gender, class, and caste, responding to the movement's call for an end to discrimination? Will we refrain from oppressing the marginalised? Will society commit to ending patriarchy? Can we commit to ending abuse due to structural causes as well as child abuse, child marriage, domestic violence, harassment, and sexual abuse perpetrated by individuals in both private and public spaces? Would this be possible in a society where 51 percent of girls in the age group of 15-18 yearsin Bangladesh are still being married off?

One way to address these will be by taking legal measures and bringing systemic change. However, these efforts will fail if we do not work to end socially acceptable harmful practices, sustained by society. Arguments put forward for harmful practices have always been about the safety and security of the girls and women in society. Did anyone ask if they need protectors or would rather opt for the end of male dominance? Are we ready to acknowledge the toxic traits of the oppressors that have inadvertently infected everyone even though the nation collectively hate them? I, however, understand that patriarchy and oppression by the powerful will take time to wear off.

Also, are we willing to restrain from arrogance and self-promotion, self-interest, and power aggrandisement? Experts have repeatedly stated that one of the reasons for the fall of the autocrat is her arrogance that grew from a sense of power over others and intolerance to dissent.

Are we ready not to impose our beliefs and thoughts on others and instead work on universal values? Are we ready to rise above our comfort zones and sit at the same table with those with opposing views to be truly inclusive? Can we agree not to force our decisions on children, and respect women and girls? Will we commit not to grab power, business, land, and property? Youth should be aware when the elders try to rationalise these practices as something necessary to secure their future.

No one is safe until all can participate and enjoy their entitlements. Therefore, society's agenda should be: how will we make everyone feel welcome and comfortable to share their thoughts and be heard as a mark of us respecting knowledge leadership, community, women, and youth leadership?

We believe malpractice and exploitation cannot be the foundation of any stable or sustainable future. However, can we expect corporate actors to move away from extractive and exploitative practices and engage in business interests with the environment, ecology, climate change, and climate justice in mind? Will they commit to the transition from fossil fuels to green growth and invest as necessary to make that critical change? Youth engagement in climate justice is increasingly vital for fostering lasting change, particularly in Bangladesh, where recent political shifts have amplified the voices of young people. Their collective demands include accountability and transparency in the management of climate funds, alongside the eradication of corruption in environmental projects. As we rebuild the country, strong advocacy for a green economic recovery emphasising sustainable job creation in renewable energy and eco-friendly industries is needed. Addressing the challenges youth face at the grassroots level is essential, particularly in the context of climate justice. The actions today will shape the future.

No one is safe until all can participate and enjoy their entitlements. Therefore, society's agenda should be: how will we make everyone feel welcome and comfortable to share their thoughts and be heard as a mark of us respecting knowledge leadership, community, women, and youth leadership? Can we be connected to people, thoughts, ambitions, ideas, approaches, and energy in a way that has not been the case before?

Can we commit ourselves to work with women, girls, youth, the discriminated, and the marginalised to build their agency and voice in Bangladesh 2.0?

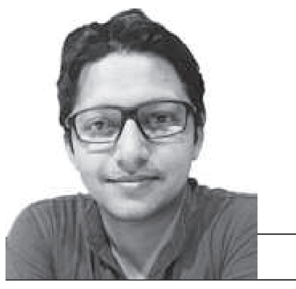
Time for a re-reading of Bangabandhu



OF MAGIC & MADNESS

Badiuzzaman Bay

BADIUZZAMAN BAY

A historic leader, no matter how great or powerful, needs to be discussed, debated, and learnt from—not blindly followed. That goes for Bangabandhu, too. Until recently, saying this out loud would have been tantamount to sacrilege in an environment of total adulation cultivated over the past 15 years or so. But the sheer, unadulterated disregard shown for the chief architect of our independence soon after the Awami regime's collapse has upended all calculations. Perhaps equally telling has been the relative lack of surprise or even sympathy—at least of the kind you would have expected—which calls for a re-evaluation of Bangabandhu's legacy in this new era of revolution.

An argument can be made about how much of the anger directed at Bangabandhu's statues and murals on August 5 was really aimed at the man himself. Indeed, during the mayhem that followed Sheikh Hasina's escape, many other monuments and landmarks of historical significance were also attacked. Even the parliament building, Gono Bhaban, and the Prime Minister's Office (PMO) were not spared, as mobs swarmed and vandalised them, many making off with furniture, bedding, potted plants, etc. However, if there was a common target in this outburst of raw emotion, it was the key symbols of power—and what better symbol of it than the figure that Awami League had so unabashedly exploited to assert its supremacy? Many of the 1,220 statues and murals the party had erected of him across the country were damaged or pulled down. The historic Mujibnagar Memorial Complex in Meherpur, where he stood tall among other sculpted heroes of the Liberation War, lies in ruins. Even his residence-turned-museum in Dhanmondi was looted and burnt down.

Observers have offered various explanations about the men behind this vandalism. One involved angry mobs taking it out on anything associated with Awami League. Another involved a vague reference to the re-rise of anti-liberation forces. Some observers simply blamed unruly elements taking advantage of a fluid security situation. But few acknowledged that Bangabandhu's murals or statues had been destroyed even during Awami League's iron-fisted rule. This suggests that the latest vandalism was not just a momentary madness—any resentment was long in the making. And the fact that the national holiday on August 15 would be cancelled soon after, in a unanimous decision by the Council of Advisers and political parties, further represents the shifting ground beneath the once-inviolable image of Bangabandhu.

How have we come to this point? How has a man who deserves the highest honour for his role in our independence struggle come to be treated with such disrespect? At the risk of sounding clichéd, let's just say this is what happens when respect is imposed, legislated, and weaponised. Over the years, we have seen how the Awami regime and intelligentsia cultivated blind adulation, suppressing any attempt at a nuanced, dispassionate study of the man who led a very eventful life. We have seen how the personality cult around him was continually enhanced through an infinite mix of Bangabandhu-centred monuments, billboards, textbooks, notes and coins, postage stamps, etc. His posters were churned out and plastered everywhere, his portraits hung in every government office. From hospitals to universities to safari parks to planetariums to high-tech centres to bridges and expressways—everything bears his name. His words were turned into catchphrases, his life sainted. And anyone who dared to say anything remotely critical would be silenced through various legal tools.

Even Bangabandhu would have found this deification quite distasteful, had he been alive today.

This is unprecedented not just in the subcontinent, but perhaps anywhere in the world. In India, where we saw Congress live off Mahatma Gandhi for decades, he was not subjected to such wholesale deification. In Cuba, you will hardly see any statues of Fidel Castro. While he, too, still lives bathed in absolute adulation, his name is not as ubiquitous. Even the idolatry encouraged by other communist leaders, such as Mao Zedong, Josef Stalin or North Korea's Kim family, would pale in comparison.

For many in today's Bangladesh, Bangabandhu was a story narrated to us through a carefully chosen medley of pictures, historical accounts, audio clips, and video footage. It kept you in awe of the person. It kept you at a distance. We were raised to bow before his altar without really understanding him, and marvel at his greatness without knowing, beyond the highlights of his career, what made him great to his people. He was, for us, not someone we could easily relate to—a mortal man with human triumphs and failings—but one shrouded in reverent mystique.

But the way to appreciate a great leader is not by ignoring his past deeds or his humanness, but by acknowledging how those helped him become the man he was destined to be. A leader doesn't have to be flawless. Englishmen do not deny that millions of Bangalees starved to death in 1943 when Winston Churchill diverted food to British soldiers and other countries while a deadly famine swept through Bengal. In China, Mao-bashing is very much a thing. Even though he and his descendants mounted campaigns that developed the country and simultaneously elevated his cult of personality, many associate his legacy with mass murder and violent class struggle. Similarly, many other leaders who led their nations to their most glorious moments had to face the bitter test of time as their legacy was subjected to harsher interpretations—often as an opposite reaction to their deification.

Coming back to Bangabandhu, he was known for his remarkable affinity with the ordinary people. The ease and candour with which he interacted with them is legendary. He commanded their respect, rather than forcing it upon them. However, like many revolutionaries who later became statesmen, Bangabandhu was not without his fair share of mistakes. Sometimes he learnt from them, sometimes he failed to. Sometimes he made bad judgement calls, distanced himself from trusted aides. Sometimes his decisions had the inadvertent effect of isolating those very people he loved and fought for. Those were not his brightest moments—those were his "human" moments. But this is precisely what makes him relatable for a generation who would like nothing better than to see a role model they can identify with.

The challenge of the post-truth age is that no legacy is innately secure, and truths in politics are invariably partial and contingent. In post-truth politics, you appeal to emotion rather than objective facts to shape public opinion. Emotion excites the mind and lasts for a while, but for a lasting impact, there is no alternative to a narrative based on facts and truths. Bangabandhu as a subject of study should be approached with an openness to embrace truths, however unflattering.

In the new age of revolution, Bangabandhu can be just Bangabandhu—or Sheikh Saheb, or Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, or plain "Mujib"—without the obsessive, cultist praise but also without meaningless criticism along party lines. He will still remain the Father of the Nation, but more human, more relatable, more in alignment with other heroes of our independence. And for that, it is necessary that he be restudied, reimagined, and reinvented by subjecting his life and work to broader interpretations.

Can a proportional representation system ensure better democracy?

Kazi Habibul Awal
is the chief election commissioner of Bangladesh.

KAZI HABIBUL AWAL

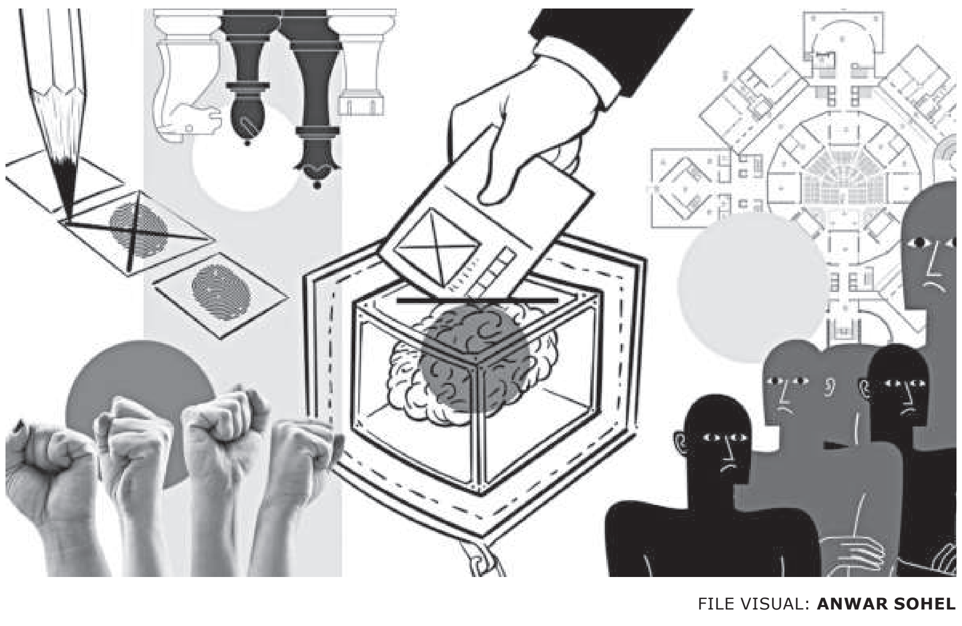
In Bangladesh elections, we practise the first-past-the-post (FPTP) system. The candidate receiving the highest number of votes in a constituency wins a seat in parliament. The political party winning the highest number of seats in parliament forms the government alone, or through coalition. If the FPTP system is changed to the proportional representation (PR) system, in full or in part, it may bring about improvement in the existing political system of the country, providing for peaceful elections and more free, fair and credible representation of voters through their elected representatives in parliament.

In the PR system, an election is among registered political parties. There will no longer be 300 constituencies; the whole country will be one single constituency. Each party may declare names of its candidates well ahead of the day of election (three to six months ahead). In the alternative, for convenience's sake, lists of candidates may be closed ones. Except for a few top members, no one in a party will know the names of nominated candidates, until the results are declared.

In the PR system, each party may be required to pay a certain amount of money as security fee against each of its nominated candidates. A party believing that it may win only 100 seats based on proportion should field 100 candidates or a few more, like 130 candidates. That will help the party save security money. A provision may be there that if a party, for instance, fields 100 candidates but gets 120 seats based on proportion, it will be allowed to give 20 new candidates to be declared elected, subject to payment of higher (as penal) security fees against the additional candidates. In the alternative, a provision may be made that those 20 seats shall stand forfeited to be redistributed by a re-election, or that those 20 seats may be distributed to other winning parties according to the ratio of proportion subject to payment of additional security fees. A provision may be made that a party winning less than 10 seats, as against 100 candidates fielded, shall be deregistered for future elections, and the seats won shall be forfeited so as to be distributed among the remaining qualified parties proportionately. Or, if not, the security fees of those 90 candidates not elected shall be forfeited. That may act as a deterrence to help sensitise parties to field a reasonable number of candidates.

For an easier understanding, the matter may be illustrated as follows in the context of Bangladesh's unicameral legislature. If four parties—namely parties A, B, C and D—contest, each nominating 300 candidates from the centre, and after polling and counting it appears that Party A has received 50 percent of the total votes cast, Party B received 30 percent, Party C 10 percent, and Party D 10 percent, then Party A will take 50x3=150 out of 300 seats, Party B will take 30x3=90 seats, Party C will take 10x3=30 seats and Party D will take 10x3=30 seats. Thus, all 300 seats will be occupied. If a party gets only one percent of the votes cast, it will get three seats in parliament. If a party gets only 0.34 percent votes, it will get one seat in parliament. If the ratio of votes received by a party is less than 0.34 percent, that party may or may not get a seat, based upon an arithmetical formula to be made regarding that. If a party gets fewer than 150 seats, it will have to make a coalition to raise its seats to more than 150. This system is working in many countries, and can be further studied by examining how it works in countries practising the PR system.

No by-election will be necessary in case of deaths, etc of a member of parliament. The party concerned will fill in the position of the demised member from the original list as per the order of precedence for the rest of the tenure. Or in the alternative, that party may be allowed to auto-elect a new candidate as the new MP. This way, the proportional representation system may reduce expenses as well as hassles of holding by-elections. Reserved seats for women may be done away with. To ensure adequate representation of women in parliament, each contesting party may be required to declare two lists, i.e. a general list for all and a reserved list for women only. If 10 percent of the seats should be reserved for women, a provision of law may be that any party nominating candidates shall be required to enlist two women candidates among each 10 candidates. In that case, a party proposing 300 candidates shall propose 60 women candidates. Hence, there shall be 60 women MPs among 300 MPs. A separate election to reserved seats for women shall not be necessary then. That also simplifies the overall electoral process.



FILE VISUAL: ANWAR SOHEL

If a party does not win more than 50 percent of the seats, and a coalition is, therefore, needed to be made and cannot be made readily within a certain specified time, the largest party may be allowed to make government, and its seats in parliament may be declared deemed (by legal fiction) raised to 151 for the formation of the government and all ordinary voting purposes in the legislature. No right-away stalemate in government or parliament will be created in that case. If a coalition can be made, a coalition government can run for a full term of five years or as long as the coalition endures. If a coalition breaks, and no further coalition is made, a fresh election may be held within 90-120 days of that.

If the PR system is introduced, the provision of contest by independent candidates may be repealed. In the present FPTP system, a genuine, strong candidate may field a few fake or dummy independent candidates in order to obtain polling agents for them and to control polling stations by them. Individual candidates in constituencies may resort to multiple malpractices in order to win at any cost, whether voters support them or not. In the PR system, one cannot do that for more than one seat. Originally, one could contest in all 300 seats by virtue of the constitutional provision. Then by the 1984 amendment of the Representation of the People Order (RPO), 1972, it was made five seats. Then by further amending the RPO in 2008, it was made three seats. There was no rationale for it. In the PR system, there will be no scope of that. Constitutional amendments will be necessary to introduce the PR system. Not many amendments—only a few amendments may do.

Such a system, if introduced, will do away with many prevalent malpractices like muscle and money power, bribing, violence in and around polling stations, ballot snatching, ballot stuffing, rigging, etc. The hassle of maintaining 300 constituencies will no longer be there. Delimitation of constituencies will not be necessary. The hassle of contest by independent candidates will be done away with. The hassle of contest in more than one seat by one candidate may also be done away with. Another major advantage of the system will be that the hassles of nomination submissions locally all over the country will be substantially reduced. Nomination will be submitted centrally in Dhaka, the capital, directly or online. All (100 percent) voters will be represented in parliament. Now a party, receiving only 25 percent of the votes cast, may form government. That never happens in the PR system.

Parliamentary elections may be more transparent, free, fair and credible in the PR system. In the existing FPTP system, incidents of false voting, centre-capturing, ballot-snatching and ballot stuffing, rigging, manipulation, influencing the police, administration and polling officers with money or threats, etc are quite many and random. If the proportional representation system is introduced, such incidents will reduce substantially.

More than a hundred countries in the world practise some form of the PR system in national elections. The demographic homogeneity in Bangladesh may be conducive to the introduction of this system. The pros and cons, merits and demerits of the proportional representation system may be studied in the context of Bangladesh, and if found suitable and introduced, the conduct of elections in Bangladesh may become much easier. Elections will be far less expensive. That may help develop a healthy political culture and a better democracy.`

Is the antidote itself a virus?

The constitution of Bangladesh and the rise of autocracy

ILLUSTRATION: AMREETA LETHE

This crisis goes back to the first constitution of 1972. Many critics have pointed out that the process of forming the Constitution of 1972 was unsatisfactory.

SADMAN AHMED SIAM

During the 53 years of Bangladesh's existence, its people have had to endure and take down two autocratic regimes; not only did they oust an autocrat in July 2024 through a mass uprising, but 1991 also saw the downfall of the autocrat, Hussain Muhammad Ershad, through another rebellion. This begs the question: why does this cycle of autocracy continue to repeat itself? Can the Constitution, the highest law of the land, not give us a solution by putting in checks and balances? The book Maron Rajneeti: Rashtro, Khomota O Shohingshotar Boyan (Adarsha, 2024) by Sarwar Tushar and Sohul Ahmed Munna explores this question, asking if the antidote we find ourselves seeking is itself a virus.

Broadly speaking, the answer is yes. The book is a collection and modification of different articles the writers had written and published elsewhere, all connected by a common thread: the ways in which the constitution of Bangladesh is itself the source of the problem in the power structure.

This crisis goes back to the first constitution of 1972. Many critics have pointed out that the process of forming the Constitution of 1972 was unsatisfactory. The elected officials of the 1970 election, the first and last fair election in undivided Pakistan, sat down to write the constitution. However, this should not have been the case; in the transformed context of post-Liberation War Bangladesh, all parties and organisations involved with the war should have been consulted in forming the constitution. This lack of representation from different groups was a major flaw in the constituent assembly. It not only led to issues like discrimination against indigenous groups by categorising them as "Bangalis", but also led to the formation of several undemocratic clauses.

As the writers explain, the constitution is supposed to represent the fundamental character of the state and its citizens. As such, the constitution should reflect the wishes of the people in its purest sense. Not only was this principle violated in 1972, but clause 142, which allows the parliament to change the constitution with a two-thirds majority, makes the constitution vulnerable to the whims of whoever is in power. The right to change the constitution should remain with the citizens, not the parliament. This clause has been misused by almost every regime Bangladesh has seen, modifying the constitution according to their need.

But there's more. The notorious clause 70, which restricts parliament members from opposing any decision taken by their party leader, results in the consolidation of power by the party which has the majority. Clauses like these essentially transform the parliament into a constitutionally valid autocracy.

As the writers explain throughout the book, the constitution doesn't guarantee any citizen fundamental rights such as freedom of speech or freedom of association, only mentioning how the state can prohibit them. These loopholes are exploited to create laws such as the Cyber Security Act, which has been protested by all forms of media since its inception. The vague description of the CSA, or its predecessor, the DSA (Digital Security Act), has been heavily criticised both nationally and internationally. However, the government wasn't obligated to scrap it. Why? Because the 39th clause mentions that freedom of speech can be restricted if the security of the state, friendly relations with foreign countries, or decency and morality are threatened. Without qualifications, almost each of these is vulnerable to misuse, which has been the case in forming the CSA.

Another case in point can be extra-judicial killings, which have been justified by using the 32nd clause, which states that life or personal liberty cannot be violated save under the law. This too, has been twisted to justify extra-judicial killing in Bangladesh done by different forces. Like the War On Drugs conducted in the Philippines during the reign of Rodrigo Duterte, the general public may be satisfied that the people being killed are drug peddlers or criminals. But this implies that legal procedures are not being followed, and creates a ground where any dissident may be harmed with the excuse of them being a threat without a proper legal process.

Another fact that the authors show is how the legacies of colonialism are spread throughout the power structure of this country. The bureaucracy and law enforcement agencies in Bangladesh still follow the system which was set up during the British period, when the main motivation of colonial power was to suppress the native people. But a sovereign country, which has fought against colonial powers and defeated them, deserves to have a new formation of the power structure which allows them to have their independence and freedom valued—a system which doesn't treat them as colonial subjects, but as citizens of a democracy.

These flaws in the constitution, bureaucracy, and law enforcement agencies are important to understand certain events, such as how writer Mushtaq Ahmed was detained under DSA and subsequently murdered, or the role of police in the July massacre. Although this particular book was not banned, many books were, in the name of protecting national security. As the generation has changed from being proudly apolitical to starting to learn the intricacies of politics, state, law, and history, books like Maron Rajneeti can be a starting point for many to get into discussions about the constitution, how it has been misused, and how it can be rectified. This education is important in order to build a democratic Bangladesh which ensures the rights of everyone.

BOOK REVIEW: TEXTBOOK

It's all crimson inside 'SHAHITTOPATH'

The match grows dirty and the battleground today is covered in wounds and regret. The book also houses the beloved short story, "Raincoat", in which Akhtaruzzaman Elias eloquently paints a damp yet nerve-wracking day of 1971 Dhaka through the eyes of another Nurul—Nurul Huda, a seemingly neutral person in this chess match.

ZARAFET

"Mr Nurul Amin couldn't realise what bureaucracy had dragged him down to". Remember how you needed to absolutely memorise this line with context and underlying meaning for answering comprehension-based questions? Well, that was to earn a couple of marks in exams. Turns out, it is also a 101 guide on how to earn a nation back.

Say, it is like a chess match. The chessboard is a rocky field that is to be conquered for justice. The 11-12th grade National Curriculum and Textbook Board (NCTB) textbook on Bangla literature, Shahittopath is, in fact, an undying testament to the rebellious hearts that are prescribed to read it. The spirit of rising against injustice and turning up your voice just a tad bit to speak the truth is strong in this book. And you know what? A book that is read by over one and a quarter million blooming hearts every year, every individual's "tad bit" is enough to let the words run over trillions of miles of land.

There are several Nuruls in Shahittopath. One is Chief Minister Nurul Amin in "Bayannor Dinguli", narrated by Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman. Standing with his dignified corporals, Nurul Amin stands at one side of the chessboard. Nurul Amin fired against the protesting students who wanted a reformation of the state language. Bangabandhu talks about the cowardice that the then-governors showed by shooting the students who ignited the streets with passion.

On the other side stands another Nurul—Nuruldin. In Syed Shamsul Haque's "Nuruldiner Kotha Mone Pore Jay", Nuruldin chants the lore of Bengal's much-awaited freedom with the rhythm of united marching steps against fascism. Let the match begin.

A passion of youth. The time when they want the jury to announce nothing but the verdict of life—the verdict of valid existence. In Shahittopath, Shukanto Bhattacharjee depicts the passion soulfully in his poem, "Atharo Bochhor Boyosh". He says,

"This age knows the virtue of sacrificing blood
As they sprint in the speed of pressurised vapour,
The pouch containing departed lives stay unemptied
Sucking the souls with a vigorous promise."

A compilation of revolutionary literary creations is never complete without the words of the rebel poet Kazi Nazrul Islam. In "Amar Poth", he reminds us about the urgency of embracing one's individuality and unique righteousness, even in the face of certain oppression. "My truth will show my way...One who is certain about their own identity has the spirit of never bowing their head to anyone but the truth"—such words swing in the air like an irreproachable sword. He echoes the words of the brave warrior within him throughout "Bidrohi" by bringing up the age-old mythical and historical legends who raise their heads against injustice. From Bheem to Orpheus, he is reincarnated as the emperor of destruction and the composer of ballads as sweet as honeysuckles. Lastly, he invites many others to be revolutionaries as long as injustice remains.

The match grows dirty and the battleground today is covered in wounds and regret. The book also houses the beloved short story, "Raincoat", in which Akhtaruzzaman Elias eloquently paints a damp yet nerve-wracking day of 1971 Dhaka through the eyes of another Nurul—Nurul Huda, a seemingly neutral person in this chess match. Through witty humour and subtle satire, Elias pulls out the cruel culprits of several massacres caused during that time. From Ishak Mia to the college principal Dr Afaz Ahmed, every war criminal has been unveiled by this powerful wordsmith. Nurul's dramatic commute to work through a military-occupied Dhaka is bone-chilling. "An umbrella won't be enough in this rain, honey. You better take Mintu's raincoat with you." "Raincoat" demonstrates the pain and concerns of a teacher and the sheer helplessness he experiences in the face of atrocities.

Shahittopath proudly upholds the legacy of the people who built the foundation of triumph against persecution by grinding down the very shackles binding their hands. In Abu Jafar Obaidullah's "Ami Kingbodontir Kotha Bolchhi", the poet shows the benevolence and strength of the common people, including farmers, fishermen, helpless widows, and tortured slaves—they symbolise the people's freedom.

"I'm speaking of legends
I'm speaking of my ancestors
His palms were fragrant earth
Whose backs had wounds as bright as a rokto joba"

Lastly, "February 1969" by Shamsur Rahman also carries the spirit of "Ami Kingbodontir Kotha Bolchhi". The chess match is escalating at this point. Both sides are struggling to checkmate the other. The rooks of Nuruldin recall the bloodshed of the revolutionaries of 1952 and 1969 as they march straight towards their final nemeses. The scattered bloodstains of '52's Salam and Barkat mingle with that of '69's Shamsuzzoha and Shaheed Asad.

The crusade of Shahittopath has come to an end, but the chess match is still ongoing. Nuruldin and his comrades fetch more stories to warm their shattered hearts and move forward to write some themselves. Nurul Huda needs to take a stand before his legs are tied.

There will be a checkmate. The echoes of emancipation have been howled beyond the chess field. Nurul Huda's raincoat has been taken off by the brute pawns, but by now he has learned to rise in spirit. There's only one row of squares left to be conquered by Nuruldin's army—the only row where Nurul Amin is standing.

Checkmate. The game has come to an end. The fascist has fallen.

Now, Nuruldin's people look back at the bloodied chessboard, wretched and adrift. They hum the words of "Manob Kollan" by Abul Fazal and absorb the juvenile spirit in "Aparichita" by Rabindranath Tagore as they mend the field. They bring about a new dawn.

Zarafet sits by the end of the horizon and hums the tunes of songs sung by the unsung.

Can rivals step up the fight against Real?

AGENCIES

After a summer dominated by Spain, with La Roja storming to Euro 2024 triumph and their youngsters claiming gold at the Paris Olympics, the focus now turns to Spain once again as LaLiga kicks off on Thursday.

Athletic Club will begin proceedings by hosting Getafe tonight before Real Betis face Girona at home later on the day.

But the big guns will be back in action a bit later. Barcelona travel to Valencia for their opener on Saturday night while defending champions Real Madrid, who were scheduled to vie for a record sixth UEFA Super Cup against Atalanta in Warsaw last night, will be hosted by Mallorca in exactly 24 hours.

Real the favourites

It will be no surprise that Real, the reigning Champions League winners, are overwhelming favourites for another successful domestic run with Kylian Mbappe boosting Carlo Ancelotti's already enviable squad.

Real will be without Toni Kroos after his retirement. Luka Modric and Federico Valverde are in the squad to plug gaps but don't provide the ability to spread passes and read the game as well as the German midfielder did.

While Real might have a few problems in midfield, the long-awaited arrival of Mbappe to form a deadly forward line alongside established stars like Vinicius Junior and Rodrygo. To add to the firepower, Real will have Brazilian teenage sensation Endrick who will put Real ahead of most teams in the league.

They will also have first-choice goalkeeper Thibaut Courtois and defender Eder Militao, who had missed almost the entirety of the previous season, available from the beginning.

German era at Barca

In a major change at Barcelona, Hansi Flick has taken over the role of head coach from club legend Xavi.

Flick recently had a rough spell as Germany manager and is hoping for a more positive experience as he returns to club football. He had spoken of emulating Pep Guardiola and Johan Cruyff's style but the fact that they lost 3-0 to Monaco in the Joan Gamper Trophy shows the tough task ahead.

Barca have brought in one of Spain's Euro 2024 heroes Dani Olmo from RB Leipzig but the club have not been able to register their £46m signing with LaLiga owing to their financial constraints.

Moreover, Barcelona also have injury issues going into the season. Ronald Araujo, Pedri, Gavi, and Frenkie de Jong are all nursing injuries, meaning Flick will have his work cut out if he plans to overthrow Real from the throne in his debut season for which he might need to depend on 17-year-old Spanish sensation Lamine Yamal to continue his stellar form.

Atletico rebuild to end Real-Barca dominance

After winning the title in 2020-21, Atletico Madrid have finished third, third, and fourth last season -- being pipped by Girona.

But Diego Simeone's men will hope to rectify that and give Real and Barcelona a run for their money as they have made some significant changes in personnel for the season. The headline signing has been the one of Argentine World Cup winner Julian Alvarez from Manchester City in a reported deal worth approximately $104 million.

Upfront with Alvarez, Alexander Sorloth will play a key role after arriving from Villarreal fresh from scoring 23 goals in last league campaign.

They have also bolstered their backline by signing Robin Le Normand from Real Sociedad.

Who could cause a surprise?

Girona did that job last season. Real Betis may do it this time, but maybe not to the extent that Michel's side did. Managed by Manuel Pellegrini, playmakers Isco and Nabil Fekir can help Betis beat anyone on their day.

Bangladesh all-rounder Shakib Al Hasan hits one at the nets of the Gaddafi Stadium in Lahore during Bangladesh's first practice session in Pakistan yesterday. Is the current BCB board legitimate?

AL-AMIN

The board of directors of Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) might face a legitimacy crisis as they were elected under the 2017-amended BCB constitution, which entitled six top-flight Dhaka clubs to nominate two councillors each to vote, instead of the previous one-entity-one-vote system.

This preferential treatment of the clubs could be interpreted to be illegal under the country's constitution, an article which states that all citizens are equal before law and are entitled to equal protection of law.

The current 25-member board of directors led by BCB President Nazmul Hassan Papon was elected on October 6, 2021 polls for a four-year term.

Papon was elected as one of the 12 directors from the Club Category, where six clubs -- Abahani, Prime Bank, Prime Doleshwar, Gazi Group, Sheikh Jamal and Mohammedan -- were granted two councillors each in accordance with the 2017 (amended) BCB constitution.

In Section 9, titled 'Formation of General Council', it was stated that the six clubs that make it to the Super League in the Dhaka Premier League will have two councillors each. The aforementioned six clubs had finished among the top six in the Dhaka Premier League in the season that had preceded the October elections.

The allocation of two councillors in the general council was an exception considering other national boards' constitutions, including that of Board of Control for Cricket in India (BCCI), it is categorically said that one full member shall have one vote.

Contacted on Tuesday, longstanding BCB CEO Nizamuddin Chowdhury acknowledged the exception.

He said he was not aware of the option of such multiple voting in any other national cricket association.

The BCB scrapped the multiple councillors' option in the constitution after the 2021 election in an annual general meeting in 2022.

However, lawyers said,for fairness the anomalies in the 2017 BCB constitution could still be relevant and the legitimacy of an election under it could still be questioned.

According to Supreme Court lawyer Shishir Manir, two votes for one entity is a discrimination and can be challenged in any competent court of the country.

"For the same footing, for the same purpose and in the same breadth, if an entity enjoys more than one vote, it is a discrimination under Article 27 and 28 of the constitution," said Manir.

Article 27 of the constitution, under the headline "Equality before law", states that all citizens are equal before law and are entitled to equal protection of law.

The Daily Star tried to communicate Papon for his comment. However, his phone was switched off and he has not showed up at the BCB headquarters in Mirpur ever since the student-led mass upsurge toppled the Awami League government on August 5.

Papon was a lawmaker from the ruling AL and also the Minister for Youth and Sports in former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's cabinet.

FIFA rules out BPL transfer window extension

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh Premier League (BPL) outfits must complete their players' registration formalities by the existing deadline of August 19, as FIFA did not agree to extend the transfer window.

Following the resignation of former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, the premises of a few clubs like Abahani, Sheikh Jamal DC, and Fortis FC were vandalised by miscreants.

Clubs such as Sheikh Jamal, Sheikh Russel KC, Rahmatganj MFS, and Brothers Union verbally requested Bangladesh Football Federation (BFF) to extend the players' registration window, citing possible changes to their respective executive committees as well as difficulties in contacting their donors.

BFF thus officially requested the relevant department of FIFA to extend the transfer window but got a negative response.

"They told us that it is not possible to extend the deadline for player transfers once the window has been opened. We have already informed all participating clubs verbally about FIFA's decision," said BFF competition manager Zaber Bin Taher.

The players' registration window for BPL opened on June 1, with only Abahani having officially completed the registration of 14 players as of Wednesday.

Shaheens batter Bangladesh 'A'

SPORTS REPORTER

Pakistan Shaheens' batters made merry against Bangladesh 'A' bowlers on the second day of the opening four-day match as they were 367-4 at stumps at the Islamabad Club Ground on Wednesday.

Umar Amin struck a valiant 177 off 211 balls while skipper Saud Shakeel made 76 off 132 balls as the hosts a first-innings lead of 245 runs after bowling Bangladesh 'A' out for just 122 runs on the opening day.

Saad Khan and Kamran Ghulam remained not out on 31 and 20 runs respectively for the hosts, who resumed the day at two for none.

The Bangladeshi side made a bright start as pacer Tanzim Hasan Sakib dismissed opener Saim Ayub for 11 before Mohammad Huraira and Umar shared a 96-run stand for the second wicket.

Off-spinner Nayeem Hasan then broke the partnership by sending Huraira (39) back but Umar continued to frustrate the Bangladeshi bowlers by adding a 195-run partnership with Saud for the third wicket.

Left-arm spinner Hasan Murad (2-49) removed both batters in quick succession but an unbeaten partnership of 45 runs by Saad and Kamran took their lead close to the 250-run mark.

U-20s eye elusive SAFF trophy

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh have kept their sights on the elusive trophy of the SAFF U-20 Championship, despite having less than a two-week preparation under the guidance of coach Maruful Haque, with the team departing for Nepal on Friday.

Six teams, split into two groups, will take part in the regional youth football extravaganza -- which has been held five times before, involving U-18, U-19, and U-20 age groups -- from August 18 to 28 in Kathmandu.

In previous five editions, Bangladesh had to be content with finishing second three times -- in 2017, 2019, and 2022 -- behind India. In 2023 the boys in red and green exited the race at the group stage after losing to India and Bhutan.

The charges of Maruful will compete against hosts Nepal and Sri Lanka in Group A, beginning their campaign by taking on the hosts on August 20 at the Dasharath Stadium, while Group B comprises India, the Maldives, and Bhutan. The top two teams from each group will progress to the semi-finals, scheduled for August 25 and 26, before the tournament's curtain closes on August 28.

"Though I initially aimed to reach the final, after observing their dedication and focus during nearly two weeks of preparation, I see the hunger in the boys, and I think they will fight for the championship," said UEFA-licensedcoach Maruful at an official press conference at the BFF house yesterday, where team leader Khandokar Rakibul Islam and players Shakil Ahmed Topu and Mirajul Islam also spoke on the occasion..

Maruful began training with around 35 footballers on July 31 at Birshreshtha Shaheed Mostafa Kamal Stadium in Kamalapur before moving the camp to the Bashundhara Kings Arena, as the Army made the former a temporary camp due to the country's deteriorating situation at the time.

After yesterday's training session, Maruful was expected to select a 23-member squad from the trimmed list of 27 players, most of whom have featured in Bangladesh Premier League. Of the 27 players, only five came from the Bangladesh Championship League, and two from the BFF Elite Academy.

Maruful informed, "As the Bangladesh Premier League ended two months ago, most of the players have been idle. It was challenging to bring the players up to fitness. We had two sessions of fitness and tactical training in the first 10 days, and the remaining days comprised single training sessions.

"I believe the players, most of whom played in the Bangladesh Premier League, are experienced and talented in the context of Bangladesh. The dedication, effort, and energy they have shown in training are positive signs, and I believe we can aim for the championship."

AL attempt to create chaos will be resisted

Says student leaders at rally

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Leaders of different student organisations, including the Anti-discrimination Student Movement, declared they would resist any potential chaos by the Awami League leaders and activists centring August 15.

The students made the announcement at a rally titled "Sampriti Samabesh" in the capital's Shahbagh.

"The leaders and activists of the Awami league will try to create chaos on Thursday in the name of observing National Day of Mourning. We will remain on the streets to resist any such attempts," said Sarjis Alam, a key coordinator of the Anti-discrimination Student Movement.

"We will be on the streets until a government elected by the people assumes power," he said.

The rally was organised as a part of a week-long resistance movement as announced by the quota reform platform. It was attended by student activists of different student organisations, including Jatiyatabadi Chhatra Dal and

'False cases to be withdrawn by August 31'

Says law adviser; cases in Dhaka to be withdrawn by today

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The interim government would withdraw by today all "false and harassment" cases filed in Dhaka against students and ordinary people during quota reform protest, Law Adviser Prof Asif Nazrul said yesterday.

Similar cases lodged across the country during the student movement, which led to the ouster of Sheikh Hasina-led government, will be withdrawn by August 31, he told a press conference at the secretariat.

The adviser said his ministry officials are working day and night for withdrawal of the cases filed between July 1 and August 5.

He mentioned that they earlier said the ministry would take steps within three working days to withdraw the cases.

KILLING OF SHOPKEEPER

Salman and Anisul placed on remand

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday placed Salman F Rahman, private industry and investment adviser to former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, and former law minister Anisul Huq on a 10-day remand in a case filed over the death of a shopkeeper in the capital's New Market area on July 16.

Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Md Mamunur Rashid passed the order in the presence of the duo after investigation officer Sajib Mia, a sub-inspector of New Market Police Station, produced them before the court with a 10-day remand appeal in the evening, said a sub-inspector working in the court.

In the courtroom, pro-BNP-Jamaat lawyers did not allow any lawyers to represent Salman and Anisul.

Two lawyers, who came to represent Salman and Anisul, could not stand inside the courtroom. They were assaulted by some unruly lawyers inside the courtroom, said witnesses.

Chaos inside the courtroom ensued when a man, claiming to be the father of the victim Shahjahan Ali, started shouting and demanding that the accused be hanged.

On the court premises, a group of lawyers even threw eggs at the accused before and after the hearing.

The hearing, where Salman and Anisul were also not allowed to speak to

BNP focused on getting thousands of cases withdrawn

PARTHA PRATIM BHATTACHARJEE

The BNP is now focusing on getting the cases against its leaders and activists withdrawn and revamping the party after giving the interim government the time required to create a congenial atmosphere for polls.

Getting the cases withdrawn will be an uphill task since 1,41,633 cases have been filed against around 50 lakh BNP activists between 2009 and September 2023, according to the party.

The BNP believes now is the time to reorganise the party as it could not hold councils and extended meetings at grassroots units for over a decade since most leaders and activists were either in hiding or in jail. It had also been busy waging movements to oust the government.

The party leaders said almost all the cases were "politically motivated" and that most cases were filed by law enforcers, not by Awami League leaders.

"Withdrawal of politically motivated cases against our party leaders and workers is at the top of our agenda as an oppressive regime filed the cases."

AMIR KHASRU MAHMUD CHOWDHURY
BNP Standing Committee member

According to the BNP, in the nine city corporation areas, 35,284 cases had been filed against 8,90,516 BNP leaders and activists until September 2023.

Besides these, 11,461 cases were filed against 7,63,565 leaders and activists in BNP's Rajshahi division; 13,482 cases against 3,72,635 in BNP's Chattogram division; 6,265 cases against 1,15,199 in Cumilla division; 9,704 cases against 3,81,471 in Rangpur division; 15,079 cases against 6,61,553 in Dhaka division; 6,394 cases against 2,51,117 in Mymensingh division; 8,662 cases against 30,35,21 in Barishal division; 26,871 cases against 9,65,173 in Khulna division; and 8,434 cases against 2,21,744 BNP leaders and activists in Sylhet organisational division.

The party also said 513 cases had been filed between November 15, 2023, when the polls schedule was announced, and January 29 this year accusing 13,530 BNP leaders and activists.

'Our govt mishandled the protests'

Joy says it shouldn't have waited for court to settle quota issue

OUR CORRESPONDENT,
New Delhi

Former prime minister Sheikh Hasina's son Sajeeb Wazed Joy has admitted that mistakes were made in handling the recent student protests in Bangladesh.

The government should have engaged with the protesters from the very beginning and spoken out against the quotas much earlier, Joy told The Indian Express in a video interview from Washington DC. The interview was published yesterday.

"I believe our government should have spoken out against the quotas and met with the protesters from the beginning instead of leaving it to the courts... Our government filed an appeal with the Supreme Court to reduce the quotas. I recommended we take a public stance, stating the court made a mistake and we don't want the quotas. But our government chose not to, expecting the

Thai court sacks PM over ethics case

Says Srettha lacked integrity in cabinet appointment

REUTERS, BANGKOK

Thailand's Constitutional Court yesterday dismissed Prime Minister Srettha Thavisin for "grossly" violating ethics by appointing a minister who had served jail time, raising the spectre of political upheaval and a shakeup in the governing alliance.

Real estate tycoon Srettha becomes the fourth Thai premier in 16 years to be removed in verdicts by the same court after its judges ruled 5-4 in favour of dismissing him for failing to perform his duty with integrity.

Srettha's exit after less than a year in power means parliament must convene to choose a new premier, with the prospect of more uncertainty in a country dogged for two decades by coups and court rulings that have brought down multiple governments and political parties.

"The court has found 5-4 that the accused is terminated as prime minister due to his lack of honesty," the judges said, adding his behaviour "grossly breached ethical standards".

The ruling underlines the central role the judiciary has played in Thailand's unrelenting crisis, with the same court last week dissolving the anti-establishment Move Forward Party after ruling its campaign to reform a law against insulting the crown risked undermining the constitutional monarchy.

Move Forward's surviving lawmakers regrouped last Friday under a new party. Parliament will convene tomorrow to vote on a new premier, Srettha's chief of staff, Prommin Lertsuridej, a veteran of the Pheu Thai party, told Reuters without elaborating.

Delhi eager to work with interim govt

Says Indian envoy after meeting with foreign affairs adviser

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

India is keen on working with the interim government of Bangladesh led by Prof Muhammad Yunus "to fulfil the shared aspirations of peoples of both countries", said Indian High Commissioner Pranay Verma yesterday.

"We are eager to work with the interim government and advance the bilateral relationship," he told the media after paying a courtesy call on newly appointed Foreign Affairs Adviser Md Touhid Hossain at the foreign ministry yesterday.

Touhid said Dhaka also wanted to work closely with New Delhi to promote bilateral relations, and stressed more people-centric engagement in future.

He emphasised some key issues like putting an end to border killings, sharing the water of the Teesta river, and ensuring supply of essential commodities.

Touhid, however, accused the Indian media of carrying out a campaign by "highly exaggerating" attacks on

UN team to visit Bangladesh to probe killings

Volker Türk tells Prof Yunus

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A team of UN experts will visit Bangladesh soon to investigate the killings during the student-led movement that toppled Sheikh Hasina, UN human rights chief Volker Türk has said.

Türk revealed the information in a phone conversation with Chief Adviser Professor Muhammad Yunus, according to Shafiqul Alam, press secretary to the head of the interim government.

"The UN rights chief said a UN-led investigation will be launched very soon to probe the killing of the protesters during the Student Revolution. A team of UN experts would soon visit the country to set up an investigation," Shafiqul said on Facebook.

Describing UN Secretary General Antonio Guterres as a "longtime friend", Prof Yunus thanked him and Türk for supporting the students' revolution and championing their rights during unprecedented and devastating killings of student protesters.

The 2006 Nobel Peace Prize winner said human rights would be the

S Alam, Nassa got Tk 2,544cr waiver in breach of rules

MD MEHEDI HASAN

Chattogram-based conglomerate S Alam Group and garment manufacturer Nassa Group were given interest waivers amounting to Tk 2,544 crore bypassing banking rules, in a testament to the outsize influence oligarchs had on the banking sector during the Awami League-led government of the past 15 years.

What is more baffling is that the central bank provided the no-objection certificate (NOC) in favour of the two business giants, who are led by individuals with easy access to former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, for getting the waiver facility.

> What is more baffling is that the central bank provided the no-objection certificate (NOC) in favour of the two business giants, who are led by individuals with easy access to former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, for getting the waiver facility.

Founded in 1985 by Saiful Alam, a relative of former AL politician Akhtaruzzaman Chowdhury Babu and former Land Minister Saifuzzaman Chowdhury, S Alam Group has grown into one of the largest conglomerates in Bangladesh. The business giant owns controlling stakes in eight banks.

Nassa Group is led by Nazrul Islam Mazumder, who is the chairman of Exim Bank and the private bank owners' forum Bangladesh Association of Banks since 2008.

As per the central bank rules, banks can waive the partial or whole interest in the case of the death of the borrower or the closure of the project due to natural calamity, pandemic, flood or any other act of God.

Besides, a Bangladesh Bank notice on April 21, 2022 barred the waiver of interest that had already been transferred to their income segment.

But the companies of S Alam Group and Nassa Group that were given the interest waiver facilities were operational; no natural disaster took place in that time.

And the lenders -- National Bank in the case of S Alam Group and Janata in the case of Nassa Group -- waived the interest by halting the income segment, which was a violation of the banking rules.

On December 22, 2021, the central bank provided NOC through seven letters to National Bank for allowing the interest waiver facility to the loans, taken from the bank's Khatunganj branch in Chattogram

The National Board of Revenue (NBR) has asked for bank account details of Chattogram-based businessman Mohammed Saiful Alam and his family members to check if they have been paying their taxes properly.

The NBR wrote to 91 banks and financial institutions to this effect on Wednesday, said Ahsan Habib, commissioner of taxes, Tax Zone-15, an NBR field office in Dhaka, yesterday, adding that the move was part of their "routine job".

In the letters, information on the bank accounts and credit cards of S Alam, his brother Mohammed Abdullah Hasan, mother Chemon Ara Begum, and wife Farzana Parveen have been requested.

Additionally, details about any personal or business accounts jointly held in the names of S Alam's sister, daughter, or son have been sought.

People beaten up, harassed at Dhanmondi-32

Their phones checked; journos stopped from taking photos; student leaders condemn it

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

On the 49th death anniversary of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, students and people took control of Dhanmondi Road-32 and obstructed those who they believed wanted to pay tribute to the leader.

Hundreds of students and members of the public were at the area. They stopped pedestrians, questioned them, checked their identification documents and phones, and prevented people from taking photos of what they were doing. Several people were beaten up, tied up, and handed over to law enforcers.

The Daily Star reporters and photographers on the spot observed at least 25 people being beaten up by people wielding sticks and rods. Some of them were tied up and dragged around before being handed over to law enforcers.

UN team to fly in next week to probe atrocities

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The United Nations will send a fact-finding team to Bangladesh next week to probe atrocities committed during the student-led protests in July and earlier this month.

UN human rights chief Volker Turk announced the move when he called Chief Adviser (CA) Professor Muhammad Yunus on Wednesday, the press wing of the CA's office said yesterday.

This will be the first UN fact-finding mission to Bangladesh since its independence in 1971 to investigate widespread human rights abuses in the country, according to a UN official.

During the phone conversation, Volker Türk said a UN-led investigation would be launched very soon to probe the killing of the protesters during the "Student Revolution" and that a team of UN experts would soon visit the country to set up the investigation.

Yunus thanked him for supporting the students' revolution and championing their rights during the "unprecedented and devastating killing of student protesters".

The 2006 Nobel Peace Prize winner said human rights would be the cornerstone of his administration, and the protection of every citizen is the utmost priority of the interim government.

AL leader hacked to death in Sylhet

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Sylhet

An Awami League leader was hacked to death while he was returning home after praying at a local mosque in Sylhet's Bishwanath upazila on Wednesday night.

Md Maniruzzaman Lilu, 50, was the vice president of Awami League's Rampasha union unit in the upazila.

He was also a businessman and a resident of Nawdhar village.

Around 8:30pm, Maniruzzaman was returning home alone after offering Esha prayers in the village mosque when a group of assailants swopped on him with sharp weapons, police and locals said.

Hearing his screams, locals rushed to the spot and took him to Sylhet MAG Osmani Medical College Hospital, where the duty doctor declared him dead.

His nephew, Abu Foyez, said, "We do not know whether he had previous enmities, so anyone could have killed him."

Rama Prasad, officer-in-charge of Bishwanath Police Station, said, "The body was handed over to family after an autopsy. We will take the necessary action after a case is filed."

Foreign ministry recalls seven envoys

Five other officials posted overseas also ordered to return

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs has called back seven of Bangladesh's ambassadors who are on contractual postings overseas.

In addition, orders to return home have been issued for five other officials who are on contract or deputation abroad.

The development is part of the interim government's decision to make personnel changes in various ministries.

The foreign ministry yesterday issued separate orders in this regard.

The envoys who were asked to return to Dhaka are Mohammad Imran, ambassador to the US; Kamrul Hasan, ambassador to Russia; Rear Admiral SM Abul Kalam Azad, ambassador to the Maldives; Javed Patwary, ambassador to Saudi Arabia; Shahabuddin Ahmed, ambassador to Japan; Mosharraf Hossain Bhuiyan, ambassador to Germany; and Abu Zafar, ambassador to the UAE.

The five other officials who were ordered to return are Wahiduzzaman Noor and Arifa Rahman Ruma, first secretary and counsellor at the Bangladesh Embassy in Washington; Aparna Rani Pal and Mobashira Farzana Mithila, counsellors at the Bangladesh Embassy in Ottawa; and Asib Uddin Ahmed, third secretary at the Bangladesh consulate in New York.

secretary, who was appointed as special assistant to this interim government's chief adviser on August 12, and Muhammad Fouzul Kabir Khan, former power secretary, also received the invitation.

Officials of the Cabinet Division and the Bangabhaban could not disclose the number and names of new advisers.

"I don't know the new advisers' names," Joynal Abedin, press secretary of President Mohammed Shahabuddin, told The Daily Star.

However, state-run news agency BSS reported that "four to five more advisers" are set to take oath.

The interim government is going to expand its advisory council a week after its advisers took the oath of office.

Besides Prof Yunus, 16 advisers are now in this government. Prof Yunus and 13 other advisers -- Salehuddin Ahmed, Asif Nazrul, Adilur Rahman, Hassan Ariff, Touhid Hossain, Syeda Rizwana Hasan, Sharmeen Murshid, Brig Gen (retd) Sakhawat Hossain, AFM Khalid Hossain, Farida Akhter, Nurjahan Begum, Nahid Islam and Asif Mahmud -- were sworn in on August 8, four days after the fall of Hasina-led government amid an uprising.

Supradeep Chakma and Bidhan Ranjan Roy Poddar took oath as advisers on August 11 and Farooq-e-Azam the next day.

Chief Adviser Prof Yunus himself is overseeing 24 ministries and divisions, including Cabinet Division, and ministries of defence, education, and road transport and bridges.

and Gulshan branch in Dhaka in 2003.

The ailing National Bank waived Tk 2,283 crore as interest on the loans of eight companies of S Alam Group: S Alam Super Edible Oil got Tk 715 crore interest waiver, S Alam and Company got Tk 456 crore, S Alam Vegetable Oil got Tk 322.77 crore, NAF Trading Tk 249.96 crore, Adil Corporation Tk 185.23 crore, Pusti Vegetable Ghee Tk 158 crore; Fairy Trade international Tk 122.87 crore and S Alam Brothers Tk 73.14 crore.

As a result, S Alam Group ended up repaying the principal amount of Tk 4,928 crore and no interest, according to central bank documents.

Some companies of Sikder Group, which held controlling stakes in National Bank then, had loans in three Shariah-based banks controlled by the S Alam Group and National Bank provided the interest waiver facility to S Alam Group on the assurance that Sikder Group would be afforded the same facility in the Islamic banks, The Daily Star has learnt from people with knowledge of the tacit deal.

Thanks to the huge interest waiver to S Alam Group, National Bank, one of the earliest private sector banks in Bangladesh, logged a loss of Tk 3,260 crore for 2022. The lender is yet to recover from this hit, according to National Bank officials informed with the proceedings.

"As far as I know, S Alam Group do not have any loan in our bank," said Touhidul Alam Khan, managing director of National Bank.

The companies have repaid all their loans and closed the accounts with the bank, said Khan, who joined the lender on January 25 this year from Premier Bank.

Similarly, at the 654th board meeting of Janata Bank in 2021, a Tk 261 crore interest waiver facility was approved for two companies of Nassa Group: Nassa Taipei Spinners and Nassa Spinners.

Janata had acquired the Tk 120 crore loans of the two Nassa companies in 2008 from Southeast Bank and Islami Bank.

The state-owned bank gave Nassa Taipei the facility subject to the collection of Tk 156.12 crore by August 31, 2021, as per the meeting minutes.

The central bank in June of 2021 rejected the facility as Janata approved the waiver violating banking norms. BB later walked back on the decision and approved the interest waiver.

Md Abdul Jabbar, current MD of Janata Bank, and Md Abdus Salam Azad, former MD, could not be reached for comment despite repeated attempts.

"The interest waiver facility by violating rules creates a bad example in the banking industry and other borrowers are motivated by the example," said Anis A Khan, the former chairman of the Association of Bankers Bangladesh, a platform of banks' chief executives.

This practice goes against good governance in the banking sector, said Khan, also a former MD of Mutual Trust Bank.

The Daily Star could not reach Alam and Mazumder for comment, while BB declined the request for comment.

People beaten up, harassed at Dhanmondi-32

The media were also being obstructed from doing their duty. Several journalists, including those of this newspaper, were harassed and made to delete photos they took. A man announced on a loudspeaker, "Do not take photos and videos. Those inside buildings looking down, do not take out your phones."

Kader Siddique Bir Uttam, the president of the Krishak Sramik Janata League, was attacked when he attempted to pay his respects.

Kader Siddique told The Daily Star, "I went to pay respect [to Bangabandhu] at 7 in the morning, but I couldn't. It felt nice that a few people respectfully asked me to go back... I was inside the car. However, some people threw stones and vandalised the car. After that, I left. Today, I saw some people tied up with ropes [near the Dhanmondi 32 area], which is unacceptable."

The officer-in-charge of Dhanmondi Police Station, Emran Hossain, said that 16 people were handed over to policemen and some were injured and needed medical attention.

Sohel, 45, was beaten up by the people. He was left reeling with split knuckles and knees, and a swollen left arm he could not move. A rickshaw-puller rescued him.

"I am from Panchagarh. I came to Dhaka because my son just got admitted to Notre Dame College and I wanted to drop him off. I was on the back of a motorcycle with a brother of mine, and I was not going to Dhanmondi-32. I was just passing by," he told this reporter.

Police and army personnel were present there but did not intervene.

Md Azim, a student, said they were holding the ground to prevent the Awami League from using this as an opportunity to organise. "We have been here since morning. If anyone tries to take away the freedom we earned with our blood, we will resist."

The students' platform against discrimination had announced "resistance week" centring the day.

ICT Adviser of the interim government Nahid Islam in a Facebook post yesterday evening condemned the act of checking phones and swooping on unarmed innocent people.

"Our revolution is based on justice and principles. The aim of our student-citizen revolution was to abolish the fascist system, establish security of life and justice in society. We have to continue the resistance, on the other hand we have to uphold our spirit of the rebellion," read his post.

One of the central leaders of the students' platform, Hasnat Abdullah, on his social media page said, "Bangladesh Chhatra League members used to stop us and check our phones to find evidence of resistance. Today we heard that students, claiming to be from the Anti-discrimination Student Movement, had been checking phones and violating the privacy of the people. We protest against this and warn them about repeating this in the future.

"We have also heard that the media have been obstructed from taking photos and filming. We believe in the independence of the press. We criticise those who had harassed journalists."

In past years, Awami League leaders and workers of every level thronged Dhanmondi-32, often with camerapersons in tow, to lay wreaths at the mural in front of the Bangabandhu museum. This visit of homage was mandatory to prove allegiance to the party.

The museum was torched after the fall of the Hasina-led government on August 5.

The interim government on August 13 withdrew the public holiday.

The national flag was at full-mast at Bangladesh Secretariat yesterday, unlike previous years when it was at half-mast.

Even though there were no government programmes to mark the day, there were small events organised by some organisations.

The Communist Party of Bangladesh held a discussion marking the National Day of Mourning at its party office in Paltan.

CPB President Shah Alam presided over the meeting while General Secretary Ruhin Hossain Prince and economist MM Akash took part in the discussion.

Udichi Shilpigoshthi too organised a discussion at their central office to mark the day.

-- Mirpur-10 and Kazipara -- halting the metro rail operations.

The government directed DMTCL on August 11 to complete necessary technical checks within seven days to resume the service.

However, the operation of the two stations will remain suspended until those are repaired.

On the same day, the advisory council of the interim government decided to resume metro rail service tomorrow.

"But due to unavoidable situation, it was not possible to start necessary technical checks," reads the press release signed by Mohammad Abdur Rouf, company secretary of DMTCL.

"In this situation, it would not be possible to resume metro rail operation as per plan. DMTCL regrets for it cordially," it added.

The Daily Star could not reach DMTCL Managing Director MAN Siddique and Abdur Rouf for comments over phone.

However, sources said the employees of grade 10 to 20 have been on strike since August 6 to press home their six-point demand, including pay hike.

The top officials of DMTCL and even the immediate past secretary of the Road Transport and Highways Division talked to the employees and assured them of meeting the demands, but they refused to call off the strike, the sources said.

"So, the operation is not going to resume from Saturday [tomorrow]," an official said, wishing to be unnamed.

Responding to a query, the official said once the employees withdraw their work abstention, it would take at least five days to complete necessary preparation, so it is not possible to say when the metro rail operation will restart.

Never-ending

Taqsem was appointed Wasa MD on October 14, 2009. His tenure was extended for the seventh time on October 14, 2023.

There are allegations that Wasa supplied contaminated water and overspent funds on projects that did not bear fruit while Taqsem was at the helm.

Many say that the cost of Dhaka Wasa water increased 16 times because of him.

In May 2023, former Wasa chairman Gholam Mostofa wrote a letter to the LGD, highlighting the irregularities at Wasa.

The ministry then responded by promptly removing Mostafa from his post and keeping Taqsem, a US citizen, as the MD.

Mostafa told this newspaper at that time that Taqsem's monthly salary increased by 421 percent over the years and stood at Tk 6.25 lakh. Even during the Covid-19 pandemic, his salary was bumped by Tk 1.75 lakh.

Talking to reporters at his office yesterday, LGRD Adviser AF Hassan Ariff said, "The stories of his corruption are known to people."

The corrupt individuals who used to surround Taqsem are still active, he said.

"We will take legal action against them," he added.

In 2019, Taqsem caused public outrage after saying that Wasa water was fully safe for drinking.

He made the claim at a press conference arranged to refute allegations made by Transparency International Bangladesh (TIB).

TIB, after a year-long study titled "Dhaka Wasa: Challenges of Good Governance and Way Forward", revealed their findings in April 2019, mentioning how 91 percent of the 2,728 service recipients of Dhaka Wasa water had to boil the water to make it drinkable.

In the process, they burnt gas worth Tk 332 crore a year.

But many Dhaka dwellers are still buying dirty and smelly water, facing acute shortage of drinking water, being deprived of access to the sewerage network, and encountering the same old water logging.

Mizanur Rahman, a resident of Jurain's Mistir Dokan area, said many of around two lakh residents of Purba Jurain are still facing similar problems and some do not even have running water.

Mizanur is one of a few hundred residents from Jurain, Shyampur, Madhya Badda, Rampura and Tejgaon who demonstrated in front of the Wasa's Karwan Bazar headquarters on April 23, 2019.

The image of him carrying a jug full of dirty water as a sarcastic gift of "sherbet" to Taqsem is still fresh in the minds of Dhaka residents.

Mizanur and several others held a human chain in front of Wasa yesterday demanding that Taqsem be arrested and punished.

The city dwellers did not get the benefit of Wasa's treatment plants due to absence of a supply network, experts say.

Widespread corruption and delays in project implementation also plagued Wasa, said a report of the Anti-Corruption Commission in July 2019.

The ACC report said Wasa kept extending deadlines and increasing the costs of projects to create room for corruption.

Corruption and irregularities also took place during the selection of consultants and contractors during revenue collection and overtime bill disbursements, said the report.

Manual metre reading is also an area where cartels have been formed to misappropriate money and deny the government its revenue, said the report that identified eight projects and three areas in Dhaka where corruption took place, and made a 12-point recommendation to prevent graft.

Hasina faces another ICT case

Chittagong highway in Narayanganj on July 20.

Eight others accused in the complaint are Obaidul Quader, Awami League general secretary and former road transport minister; Asaduzzaman Khan Kamal, former home minister; Zunaid Ahmed Palak, former state minister for telecommunications and IT; Mohammad Ali Arafat, former state minister for information; Chowdhury Abdullah Al Mamun, former inspector general of police; Harun Or Rashid, former additional commissioner (DB) of Dhaka Metropolitan Police (DMP); Habibur Rahman, former DMP commissioner; and Harun Ar Rashid, former director general of Rab.

Investigation of this complaint and the one filed on Wednesday will be held simultaneously, Ataur Rahman, deputy director (admin) of the investigation agency, told The Daily Star last night.

Once the probe is done, the agency will submit the report to the Chief Prosecutor's Office of the tribunal so that the next procedures can begin.

On Wednesday, Supreme Court lawyer Gazi MH Tamim filed a similar complaint on behalf of Bulbul Kabir, father of Alif Ahmed Siam, a 9th grader who, as per the complaint, was shot dead by police in Savar.

The Hasina-led government in March 2010 formed the International Crimes Tribunal to try those who committed crimes in 1971.

One of yesterday's two murder cases against Hasina was filed by Tejgaon resident Abdullah Abu Sayeed Bhuiyan who accused Hasina and 15 other named and several unnamed people of killing Jobaid Hossain Imon, 12, in the capital's Mohammadpur on July 19.

The complaint said the boy was shot dead by police during the protests for reforming quotas in government jobs.

The case was filed with the court of Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Rajesh Chowdhury.

The other accused are Obaidul Quader, former ministers Asaduzzaman, Anisul, Tajul Islam, Jahangir Kabir Nanak, Hasan Mahmud and Mohammad A Arafat, former private industry affairs adviser to the prime minister Salman F Rahman, former lawmaker Mostofa Jalal Mohiuddin, former IGP Chowdhury Abdullah Al Mamun, former Rab DG Harun, former DMP commissioner Habibur, former additional IGP Kh Mahid Uddin, former DB chief Harun, former DMP joint commissioner Biplob Kumar Sarker, and several unnamed Rab members.

After a hearing, the magistrate recorded the complainant's statement and directed the officer-in-charge of Mohammadpur Police Station to register the complaint as a first information report (FIR), said Nur Alam, an employee of the court.

Sher-e-Bangla Nagar resident Abul Kalam filed the other case accusing Hasina, 10 named, and several unnamed others of killing Shahabuddin, 35, in the capital's Agargaon on August 5.

The case was filed with the court of Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Faraha Diba Chanda.

The other accused are Quader, Asaduzzaman, Anisul, Hasan Mahmud, Arafat, Salman, Chowdhury Abdullah Al Mamun, Habibur Rahman, Harun Or Rashid (DB) and Biplob Kumar Sarker.

The magistrate recorded the complainant's statement and directed the officer-in-charge of Sher-e-Bangla Nagar Police Station to register the complaint.

The previous government fell after Hasina on August 5 fled to India amid a mass uprising that began as a student protest for reforming quotas in government jobs.

Over 550 people, including students and law enforcers, were killed in violence during the uprising.

S Alam Group was founded by Saiful Alam in 1985, and has since risen to become one of Bangladesh's largest conglomerates.

The group's business interests range from commodity trade to fishing, building materials to real estate, textiles to media, intercity buses to shipping, and power and energy to banking and insurance.

S Alam's wife Farzana and brother Hasan are directors of S Alam Luxury Chair Coach Service and S Alam Cold Rolled Steel Limited. S Alam's mother, Chemon Ara Begum, on the other hand, is a director of S Alam Luxury Chair Coach Service.

The NBR asked banks that the information be provided as soon as possible.

S Alam he did not pick up our calls yesterday. Subrata Kumar Bhowmick, an executive director of S Alam Group, could not be reached over the phone. He also did not respond to text messages.

The move by the NBR's field office comes in less than two weeks after a mass uprising forced former prime minister Sheikh Hasina to step down, ending her 15-year rule.

There have been various allegations, including money laundering, against S Alam Group, which was one of the industrial groups to benefit during the tenure of the ousted Awami League government.

A year ago, an investigation by The Daily Star found, S Alam built a business empire in Singapore worth at least S$1 billion, although there is no record of him taking any permission from Bangladesh Bank to invest or transfer any funds abroad.

Two days later, on August 6, 2023, the High Court, on a suo motu (voluntary) move, directed the authorities concerned to conduct an inquiry into the allegations against S Alam and submit reports in two months.

However, on August 23, the Supreme Court chamber judge put on hold the inquiry against S Alam.

Later, on February 4, 2024, the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court discharged the High Court Division's suo moto rule.

The BNP chief's adviser says media outlets to be set on fire if they do so

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Natore

If any television channel or newspaper airs or publishes pictures of Sheikh Hasina, those media outlets will be set on fire, said Ruhul Quddus Talukder Dulu, adviser to the BNP Chairperson, yesterday.

Dulu made the remark while speaking as the chief guest at a sit-in in front of the BNP office in the Alaipur area of Natore town. The district BNP organised the programme.

He said once Tarique Rahman's picture and speech could not be shown or printed on TV or newspapers.

"If Jamaat is banned for genocide, then why shouldn't the Awami League be banned for brutally killing students? We demand that the Awami League is banned as soon as possible," he said.

Dulu claimed that Hasina is plotting a counter-coup. The students and the people of this country will build a resistance once again, he added.

"They have no chance of coming to power," he said.

Intercity train services resume after nearly a month

UNB, Dhaka

After nearly a month of suspension, intercity train services resumed across the country yesterday.

The services resumed with the departure of Mohanganj Express from Kamalapur Rail Station in Dhaka around 1:15pm.

Other intercity trains have been departing as per schedule from various destinations for Dhaka.

Passengers expressed satisfaction at the full restoration of train services after the long hiatus.

The Bangladesh Railway suspended operations of passenger trains on July 19 amid the violence centring the quota reform movement.

Although operations of passenger trains resumed on a limited scale on August 1, the authorities on August 3 suspended it for August 4 and later halted the operations of all kinds of trains until further notice.

We will resist all counter-revolution attempts: Sarjis

STAR CORRESPONDENT

Sarjis Alam, a key organiser of the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement, issued a stern warning yesterday against those attempting to launch a counter-revolution, saying their existence will be erased.

"Let us be clear: if anyone dares to do this [mount a counter-revolution] again or if we witness any such attempts, you will not live to see the consequences from the students and people," he declared.

Sarjis further warned, "If you wish to preserve your existence, do not dare to utter a single word against the students and people."

He made these remarks to reporters during a demonstration in front of the National Museum as part of "Resistance Week", which was called for thwarting any potential counter-revolution on August 15.

Sarjis said the government ruled and exploited the people for the last 16 years, and the student and people unitedly made this revolution.

"In these circumstances, if someone mistakenly tries to speak against the revolution, they are declaring themselves against the entire student body and the masses of Bangladesh. We want to make it clear that those who are doing this do not have honest intentions. Their motives are not aligned with the interests of the students and the people of the country, but rather with exploiting the country and its people...

"Their goal is to hand over some of their interests to malevolent forces outside the country, potentially selling this country, either partially or wholly, to them. We understand that," he added.

RICE PRICE RISES

So do prices of other essentials; traders point at supply shortage, rising production costs

SUKANTA HALDER

Prices of several daily essentials, including rice, soybean oil, and sugar, have surged in the capital's kitchen markets, causing hardships for the city residents, particularly the lower and middle-income ones.

Apart from those, prices of palm oil, broiler chicken, green chillies, eggplant, and tomatoes have also increased.

During visits to the kitchen markets in Duaripara, Mirpur 1, Karwan Bazar, and Mohammadpur Krishi Market yesterday, The Daily Star found these products to be sold at increased prices.

According to data from Trading Corporation of Bangladesh, the price of medium rice increased by 2.68 percent, coarse rice by 2.88 percent, soybean oil by about 1 percent, and sugar by about 2 percent in the past week.

Traders attributed the price hikes to a supply shortage, rising production costs, and the country's volatile economic situation.

Mohammad Jashim Uddin, a rice wholesaler at Mohammadpur Krishi Market in Dhaka, reported that the price of coarse rice increased by Tk 2-3 per kg last week, citing millers' claims that higher paddy prices were driving up rice costs.

In the retail market, medium rice is being sold at Tk 55-60 per kg, while the price was Tk 54-58 a week ago, said Mehedi Hasan, a retailer at Karwan Bazar kitchen market.

Coarse rice is being sold at Tk 52-55, while the price was Tk 50-54 in the last week, he added.

The vegetable and broiler chicken markets have also witnessed a significant surge in prices.

Abdul Mannan, a vegetable seller at Karwan Bazar kitchen market, said the price of eggplant increased from Tk 30 to Tk 40 per kg over the past week, while green chilli prices rose from Tk 200 to Tk 240, potatoes from Tk 55 to Tk 60, and cabbage from Tk 30 to Tk 50 per piece.

The price of tomatoes increased from Tk 140 to Tk 180 per kg, he added.

Mohammad Zafar, a retailer at Duaripara Bazar in the Rupnagar area, said the price of broiler chicken rose from Tk 160 to Tk 170 per kg within the same period.

Wholesale traders attributed the increase in broiler chicken prices to higher production costs.

Meanwhile, the prices of soybean oil and palm oil increased by Tk 100 per drum (204 litres) over the last week, said Alam Sheikh, a wholesaler at the Mirpur 1 kitchen market.

The prices of potatoes, onions, eggs, garlic, ginger, and pangas fish have decreased, while the price of tilapia remains unchanged.

Amid the situation, consumers are facing severe challenges.

According to the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics, the consumer price index, which includes food and non-food inflation, rose by 1.94 percentage points to 11.66 percent in July, amid the recent unrest.

Meanwhile, food inflation surpassed 14 percent in July, the highest in 13 years, driven in part by a nationwide supply chain disruption caused by weeks of protests ahead of the fall of Sheikh Hasina.

AL observes August 15 in three districts

STAR REPORT

Awami League supporters and grassroots yesterday observed National Mourning Day, marking the 49th anniversary of the assassination of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, in at least three districts.

In Gopalganj, AL men offered prayers in the morning at the mausoleum of Bangabandhu in Tungipara.

They placed floral wreaths at Bangabandhu's portrait, while several hundred partymen held a rally there.

They also vowed to bring Sheikh Hasina -- who fled the country on August 5 -- back home and demanded punishment for the perpetrators who torched the Bangabandhu Memorial Museum at Dhanmondi 32 in the capital.

In Narayanganj, city corporation Mayor Salina Hayat Ivy paid homage to Bangabandhu by placing wreaths at his portrait at the office of Narayanganj district unit AL in the city.

Ivy, senior vice president of the district unit AL, was accompanied by a few party leaders and activists.

In Shariatpur, Jazira upazila AL also observed the day.

The day was observed at a time when most of the AL men across the country have been on the run since the fall of Hasina on August 5.

"We opened one of the four tollbooths at the ramp at 5:00pm today and is collecting toll manually," Captain (retd) Hasib Hasan Khan, manager (operations and maintenance) of First Dhaka Elevated Expressway Company Ltd (FDEE), which operates the expressway, told The Daily Star.

He said they will open manual operation of three other booths there within a few days.

Power outage hits rural areas

ASIFUR RAHMAN and SUKANTA HALDER

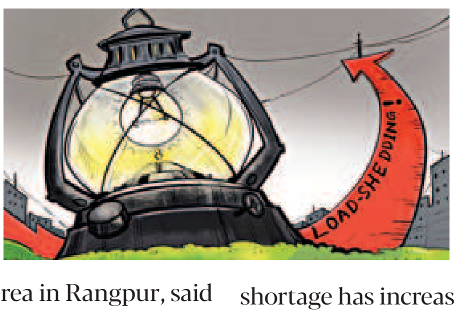
The country, especially the rural areas, is experiencing frequent power cuts over the last couple of days due to insufficient electricity production from coal-based power plants, alongside the prolonged delay in increasing LNG regasification facilities.

According to the data of Power Grid Bangladesh PLC, the average generation shortage stood as high as 1,500 megawatts (MW) a day for the last week. The country has been producing around 13,500MW to 14,000MW daily, while the demand is over 15,000MW.



LOAD-SHEDDING!

Shiuly Akhter, a resident of CO Bazar area in Rangpur, said frequent power cuts started there about a week ago after a three-week respite.

"The situation stays normal from midnight till 6:00am. Then the power goes out at one or two-hour intervals throughout the day," she said, adding that it was unbearable amid the sweltering heat.

Ayesha Begum, a resident of Habiganj Sadar area, said the power cut happens every alternate hour for the entire day -- meaning they stay without electricity for six hours during daytime.

It stabilises after 11:00pm. However, power cuts sometimes happen at midnight as well, she added.

Officials said they have been getting insufficient electricity from the coal-based power plants due to various technical issues, while gas shortage became a regular scenario.

At least 10,000MW of generation capacity has been sitting idle due to fuel shortage or maintenance -- 6,100MW for fuel shortage and 3,800MW for maintenance. Compared to last month, idle power capacity due to fuel shortage has increased significantly.

Among the 6,100MW -- at least 4,079MW are caused due to shortage in gas supply, according to data of Bangladesh Power Development Board (PDB). The country has a total of 11,428MW installed capacity from gas sources.

The data shows that at least 25 gas-fired power plants remain closed due to gas shortage since May 27, when cyclone

Constable injured on Aug 5 dies

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A police member, who was beaten and pushed off the rooftop of Shyampur Police Station during clashes with protesters on August 5, died at a hospital in Dhaka yesterday evening.

The deceased was identified as Khalilur Rahman, 53, a constable of the police station.

On the afternoon of August 5, a group of people beat him up and threw him off the roof of the police station. With severe injuries, he was admitted to a private hospital in Dhanmondi, where he breathed his last around 5:00pm, his colleague, Sub-Inspector Torgul Hasan, mentioned in the inquest report.

The body was sent to Dhaka Medical College Hospital morgue for autopsy.

Along with him, at least 43 police personnel were killed so far during the mass protests, during which many police stations and offices across the country were attacked and looted as law enforcers opened fire indiscriminately, killing many protesters.

Over 500 people, including many students, were killed during the protests, which eventually forced prime minister Sheikh Hasina to resign and flee the country on August 5.

RAJBARI GOVT POULTRY FARM

28 years of neglect

SUZIT DAS, from Rajbari

Established in the 1981-82 fiscal year, the Rajbari Government Poultry Farm, spanning 2.88 acres in the Bhabanipur area of Rajbari town, was once a beacon of hope for the local meat industry.

It aimed to alleviate poverty by encouraging chicken rearing among locals.

However, the farm's hatchery operations have been non-functional since 1996 due to mismanagement, negligence, and a severe shortage of workers.

Now, the farm imports chicks from government hatcheries in Kushtia and neighbouring districts, and sells them to locals after 28-50 days at Tk 80-100 each.

The warehouse, residential quarters, water tank, hatchery shed, and two of the four chicken rearing sheds are in a state of disrepair. The only vehicle available for farm operations has been out of order for a long time.

An official said, "If the sheds are made operational again, the farm could produce 100,000 chicks, rear 18,000-20,000 chickens for meat, and raise 150,000 egg-laying hens annually. However, only two sheds are currently in use, with around 12,000-14,000 Fayoumi and Sonali chicks being reared."

The farm, which requires 13 workers to function smoothly, is currently operating with only four.

Local poultry farmer Jasim Mondal said Sonali chicks from the farm are significantly cheaper than those from private farms, costing Tk 15 per chick compared to Tk 35-50 elsewhere.

However, supply is inconsistent, often leaving buyers empty-handed.

Md Kamal Bashar, the acting manager of the farm, said, "The annual demand for chicken in Rajbari is 20,000, but we receive only 10,000-12,000 chickens yearly. We have requested an increased budgetary allocation to ensure a regular supply of chicks and meet local demand."

Remal hit the coastal areas. One of the country's two floating storage and regasification units (FSRU) was damaged, reducing the LNG regasification capacity to 600 million cubic feet per day (mmcfd) from 1,100 mmcfd.

The affected Summit-run FSRU was repaired later from abroad, but it is yet to start operations due to technical glitches in the subsea landing pad in Cox's Bazar's Moheshkhali area. It was supposed to be completed by July 15, as per the then-government announcement. But still the Summit Group said it will take more time.

Summit Corporation International in a statement told The Daily Star that it may take up to September to resume ship-to-ship transfer.

"Assuming favourable weather and sea conditions, Summit anticipates completing the repositioning and the reconnection of the DTM (Disconnectable Turret Mooring) plug by the end of August 2024 and for the ship-to-ship transfer to be ready in September 2024."

Due to adverse weather conditions at sea and almost zero underwater visibility, the damage identified by the internationally licensed subsea diving team has posed significant obstacles to rectify the issue in July, Summit noted.

"We have contracted 'Oriental Dragon', a Diving Support Vessel (DSV) for a stronger and higher capacity crane to move the DTM, which is expected to reach Moheshkhali from Singapore on August 22," it added.

Besides, the highest single power producer -- 1,500MW Adani Power Plant, located in India's Jharkhand, has shut one of two units due to fresh technical glitches, according to PDB officials.

Khandaker Mokammel Hossain, PDB member (generation), said Adani power plant was shut once due to a leak in a valve of the boiler circulating pump last month.

"It was repaired later and the production increased. But a new leakage was identified on August 13, leaving half of its unit shut," he said.

Contacted, Adani Group shared a statement through a PR agency in Bangladesh, saying, "Adani Power supplied 769MW to Bangladesh today [yesterday] from an alternate unit, as one unit of the Adani Power plant had to be shut down on August 13 for a technical issue."

"We regret any inconvenience caused by this technical fault. We are working hard to fix the issue at the earliest and restore the full capacity of power generation," reads the statement.

Besides, Hossain said the Matarbari power plant, which was under trial run, but providing great support amid the gas shortage, has also stopped production recently. Also, one out of two units of Chattogram's SS power plant is also under maintenance.

The PDB data shows that currently around 2,300MW -- or one third of total coal power capacity of 6,604MW -- remain idle.

The country's total power generation capacity is 26,947MW.

were destroyed. The scene was chaotic; you can't imagine the fear we felt."

A CULTURAL AND HISTORICAL LOSS

The destruction is not just physical but also cultural.

Nikhil Krishna Majumdar, a renowned flute player and instrument maker, lost his collection of musical instruments, which had been housed in a museum at the station.

"I've been making and playing instruments for Khulna Betar since 1985. The loss of those instruments and documents is heartbreaking. They were not just tools but symbols of our cultural heritage," he said.

Prof Anwarul Kadir, a prominent educationist and civic leader in Khulna, condemned the attack.

"This was not a random act. Many documents and artefacts related to our folk music and history were destroyed. This loss is irreplaceable and deeply disturbing."

THE ROAD AHEAD

The attack has left over 200 staff members, including 16 officers, in disarray. The centre's infrastructure, equipment, and archived data are irreparably damaged, and broadcasts have been suspended for over a week.

Bangladesh Betar Director General Rabindrashri Barua visited the site on August 13, vowing to restore operations as soon as possible. "We are committed to resuming broadcasting, either by renovating the damaged building or setting up operations elsewhere," Barua said.

Netai Kumar Bhattacharje, its regional director, said, "Everything in the centre was reduced to ashes. Our immediate goal is to clean and repair the facility, but it will take time."

Khulna Betar, which began with a modest 10 kW transmitter on December 4, 1970, and expanded to 100 kW by 1981, had earned the affection of listeners not only in Bangladesh but also in West Bengal, India.

It started its journey in the administrative building of Khulna University in Gallamari, a suburb in Khulna city.

Its programmes were a lifeline, offering everything from news to entertainment, and its loss is deeply felt by the community.

Rice price

Golam Rabbani, a private sector employee shopping at Mirpur-1 kitchen market, said the prices of many essential items have remained high for over a year, as the previous government failed to curb the high prices.

"I am forced to buy less than what we need, as there's no other option," he said.

On Wednesday, Salehuddin Ahmed, finance and planning adviser to the interim government, stated that inflation in Bangladesh is expected to decline within a reasonable timeframe.

On the same day, newly appointed Bangladesh Bank Governor Ahsan H Mansur said the burden of rising prices may be reduced to tolerable levels within the next five to six months.

The government will focus on improving supply and production to curb inflation, he said after a meeting at the Secretariat.

power project can continue without being hampered.

"I said we will definitely continue it. A big investment has been made there. If it is not completed, we will not get its result," Touhid Hossain said.

Mantytskiy also handed over a letter from Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov to Touhid Hossain, congratulating him on his appointment as foreign adviser.

Meanwhile, the Japanese ambassador told Hossain that under the "Strategic Partnership," Japan will continue its support for Bangladesh's development and prosperity, and stand by its side during the transition process.

He said Japan will keep up with the existing projects related to the Rohingya refugees.

The UN resident coordinator told the media that a UN team of independent experts would visit Dhaka next week to investigate the killings during the students' protest.

"They will assist us so that we can rightly probe the killings and punish those responsible," Hossain told the media.

They also discussed economic cooperation, LDC graduation, climate change, and the ongoing UN humanitarian operations concerning Bangladesh.

"During its tenure, the Awami League did not have the courage to allow any other party to legitimately win 50 seats in Bangladesh. Like thieves and robbers, they have placed their members or candidates in all 300 seats, without any actual election in every constituency. Additionally, they have placed their patrons in the 50 reserved seats as well."

"Those who occupied these 350 seats are fascists and nurturers of a fascist ideology," he said, adding that the AL, Jubo League, and Chhatra League members involved in wrongdoing will also be held accountable.

"They need to answer for the torture inflicted on the people over these 16 years. They must face punishment. Then the people will decide whether AL can vie in the next election or not," he added.

Another key coordinator, Hasnat Abdullah, said members of the AL-led government and its associated bodies have smuggled thousands of crores of taka abroad over the last 16 years, with some portion of the money being used to spread propaganda.

"You [Sajeeb Wazed Joy] don't have the right to make decisions about the country while sitting in the US. Your boat [electoral symbol of the Awami League] leaked a long time ago. You no longer have a boat, so there is no point in finding a baitha [a wooden stick used to steer a boat]. Do not expect that you will run the boat of Bangladesh through Modi's baitha," he added.

about opening the Mohakhali entrance ramp within a week. Tolls will be collected manually, he added.

He, however, could not say when the exit ramp at the FDC gate (Karwan Bazar) could be opened as one of the pillars there was torched.

Miscreants torched the Banani toll booth on July 18 and the Mohakhali toll booth the following day amid unrest centring the quota reform movement, causing the suspension of its service.

The authority resumed the operation of the expressway, except for the three ramps, from August 11.

Before the suspension, over 50,000 vehicles used the flyover daily on average, and the number of users remains almost the same now, he said.

IT'S RADIO SILENCE IN KHULNA

Arson attack on August 5 leaves Betar centre in ruins

DIPANKAR ROY, Khulna

In the heart of Khulna, the Bangladesh Betar centre stood as a beacon of community, culture, and information. Established in 1970, it quickly became a cherished institution, bridging gaps between rural life and broader societal developments.

But on the afternoon of August 5, this vibrant hub was devastated by an arson attack that left it in ruins, silencing its broadcasts and disrupting the lives of countless listeners and staff.

A LIFELONG CONNECTION TO RADIO

For Proshad Roy, a farmer from Khalashibunia in Batiaghata upazila, Khulna Betar was more than just a radio station. Since the age of 12, Roy has been an avid listener, following in the footsteps of a family tradition that began with Santosh Radio of India.

This radio tradition has been a cornerstone of Roy's life, offering him and many others vital information on agricultural practices and local affairs.

"I've always been a regular listener to Khulna Betar. Programmes like 'Hridoye Bangladesh,' which delves into our Liberation War history, and 'Unstoppable Agrajatra Bangladesh,' which highlights regional development, have been crucial for my understanding of our community and country," Roy said.

A DEVASTATING BLOW

On August 5, after the fall of Sheikh Hasina, a group of people attacked the centre.

They ransacked the centre, setting fire to the reception room, artists' lounge, research room, officers' lounge, and multiple studios. The fire consumed over 39 rooms, reducing everything from office furniture to musical instruments to ashes. The looting and vandalism left the centre unrecognisable and halted all broadcasting operations.

Sudip Kumar Kundu, an announcer at the station, said, "I was on duty with my colleagues when the attack occurred. We managed to escape, but all our belongings

Nabiganj's vanishing hills

Illegal razing puts locals at risk, raises environmental concerns

MINTU DESHWARA, Moulvibazar

Unabated hill cutting by unscrupulous syndicates has become a serious concern in Nabiganj upazila of Habiganj.

Local communities residing at the base of the hills are also living amid the escalating risk of landslides.

Visiting the upazila's Debpara, Ghaznaipur, Paniumda unions, and the hilly areas of Dinarpur Pargana recently, this correspondent observed that a number of hills are being razed, ignoring a 2017 High Court order to preserve the hills in the district that directed the authorities concerned to take steps to this end.

Locals alleged that soil is being extracted from the razed hills and sold to different companies at high prices.

A contractor named Sohel Mia from Bahubal upazila has been cutting a hill owned by Abdur Rahim of Shatak village on Janata Bazar-Moulvibazar road in Ghaznaipur union, putting residents adjacent to the hill at risk.

The contractor has deployed excavators and trucks to extract soil and transport it to Athangiri in Moulvibazar Sadar upazila.

Contacted, Sohel Mia said Abdur Rahim, owner of the hill, is razing it to build a house at its base. He, however, could not show any documents supporting his claim.

Oli Mia, Mubed Mia, Pabel Ahmed, and Aminur Rahman, residents of Shatak village, said they formally complained to the Nabiganj UNO, requesting immediate administrative intervention to halt the illegal hill cutting.

Tofazzal Sohel, general secretary and central executive member of Bangladesh Poribesh Andolon's Habiganj unit, said, "Not only in Nabiganj upazila, but also Bahubal, Chunarughat, and Madhabpur upazilas have been witnessing hill razing over the years, causing irreparable damage to the environment and biodiversity."

Tofazzal called for urgent action to protect the environment and hold those negligent in their duties accountable.

Visiting the upazila's Debpara, Ghaznaipur, Paniumda unions, and the hilly areas of Dinarpur Pargana recently, this correspondent observed that a number of hills are being razed, ignoring a 2017 High Court order to preserve the hills in the district that directed the authorities concerned to take steps to this end.

Contacted, Shaheen Delwar, assistant commissioner (land) in Nabiganj upazila, attributed the matter to the ongoing situation of unrest. He suggested contacting the army for further assistance.

"We are aware of the matter. A patrol team has already visited the site. The owner did not have permission from the DC in this regard... We are looking into the issue," said Major SM Tanvir Islam, commander of Nabiganj camp.

Despite a High Court ban, unabated hill cutting continues in Nabiganj upazila of Habiganj. Locals say some unscrupulous syndicates are involved in this illegal activity. Meanwhile, people residing at the base of the hills are also living amid the escalating risk of landslides.

155 AL activists sued for attacking student protest

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Moulvibazar

A case has been filed against 155 Awami League leaders and activists, including two former lawmakers, and 200 other unidentified individuals in connection with an attack on an anti-discrimination student movement in Moulvibazar on August 4.

Abdul Qadir Talukder, a coordinator of the student movement, filed the complaint with Moulvibazar Police Station on Wednesday night, Officer-in-Charge KM Nazrul Islam told The Daily Star yesterday.

According to Abdul Qadir, the incident occurred when general students, as part of a central programme, took out a procession in the district town on August 4.

Awami League, Jubo League, and Chhatra League leaders and activists, allegedly acting on instructions from former lawmakers Zillur Rahman and Neshar Ahmad, intercepted the procession.

3 organisers hurt in BCL attack

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Tangail

Three coordinators of the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement were injured in an attack by Chhatra League activists in Tangail's Mirzapur upazila yesterday.

The incident took place on the premises of Shaheed Bhabani Prasad Saha Government College around 12:15pm.

The students detained one BCL activist during the attack and later handed him to over to Mirzapur Police Station.

"We are trying to nab other culprits involved in the attack," said Salah Uddin, officer-in-charge of the police station.

What good is fame, if I can't speak for the people: Badhan

PHOTOS: COLLECTED

Badhan walked from Mirpur 11/5 to Banani, reaching around 1:30pm. "Upon learning that Sheikh Hasina had fled, I discarded my burka and hijab, wrapped myself in the Bangladeshi flag, and joined my friends in Banani, Kamal Ataturk," she shared.

RAKSHANDA RAHMAN MISHA

"The state that fires upon innocent civilians and issues arbitrary orders for mass arrests cannot truly embody democracy," her voice trembled as she spoke through the megaphone.

"My daughter might have been among those children killed in the protests; I could have been among those harmed. This government has failed to protect us and must be held accountable. If I take to the streets to assert my rights, no one should use violence against me. I demand my rights. I have no passport to another land; this country is my home. I refuse to live under oppression, and I will not let my children grow up in such a hostile environment. This country is ours, and together we will bring about change," declared Azmeri Haque Badhan as the artistes rallied in demand for justice on August 1.

As the rain soaked her through, cascading like tears from a grieving sky, it did nothing to dampen the searing fury and sorrow that burned deeply in her heart on that day. Adorned in a black salwar kameez with a bright red scarf draped around her neck, her eyes blazed with fierce determination as she denounced the horrific acts sanctioned by the tyrannical regime.

During the protest, many netizens criticised the silence of celebrities. Badhan, tormented by depression, simply couldn't comprehend expressing herself by penning her emotions that time. Yet, the tragic losses of Abu Sayed and Riya Gope profoundly shook her, causing her to overcome her fear and break free from the shackles of oppression.

"Abu Sayed's and Riya Gope's deaths devastated me. Amid the protests, my daughter and father would often loiter around the terrace while we were confined indoors. The helicopters' fires could have claimed their lives, or I might have been the mother who perished at the window. The thought broke my heart, leaving me unable to write or speak during those times," she revealed.

"On July 25, I changed my profile and cover photos to black, replacing a previous image with former prime minister Sheikh Hasina. Many warned me that this act and using a VPN might lead to arrest. On July 26, I posted: 'The accountability system of our democratic country has been shattered. As a Bangladeshi citizen, I am devastated, traumatised, and unsafe.' Despite threats of arrest under the Digital Security Act (DSA), I was determined to speak out," she said.

On July 27, director Akram Khan urged artistes on a WhatsApp group which consisted of 900 people, to support the student protests. While younger actors were eager, many seniors hesitated, fearing arrest if they supported the nine-point demand. The platform, titled "Drissho Madhyam Shilpi Shomaj" (Visual Artiste's Society), decided to protest in front of Sangsad Bhaban.

"When we arrived at Kamarbari, the police forbade us from protesting at the Sangsad Bhaban without permission. When Mamunur Rashid bhai arrived, the DC preferred to negotiate with him, thinking he might be more pliable, but we pressed on and successfully held our procession at Farmgate. Despite being barred from displaying placards and banners, I was supported by Rajib bhaiya, Piplu bhai, Dhrubo bhai, Akram bhai, Monem bhai, and Lima apa.

As the rain soaked her through, cascading like tears from a grieving sky, it did nothing to dampen the searing fury and sorrow that burned deeply in her heart on that day.

On August 3, students consolidated their demands to a single point: the resignation of Sheikh Hasina.

"I received numerous threats, one even threatening to throw acid on my face. When the police tried to block students in Shahbagh, I intervened, standing in their way and insisting that the protest continue. The strict curfew on August 4 deeply distressed me, fearing that the former PM might not resign despite the danger. My family was anxious and begged me to stay home on August 5, but I promised to attend the march disguised in a burka," said the Esha Murder famed actress.

Badhan walked from Mirpur 11/5 to Banani, reaching around 1:30pm. "Upon learning that Sheikh Hasina had fled, I discarded my burka and hijab, wrapped myself in the Bangladeshi flag, and joined my friends in Banani, Kamal Ataturk," she shared.

On that very day, widespread looting and vandalism targeted Hindu homes and temples. Indian media, however, falsely portrayed the situation as "mass genocide" and "widespread rape of Hindu women" linked to the student protests.

To counter these false claims, Badhan spoke with Kolkata's media to explain the truth. Despite her efforts, manipulated videos of her circulated on X, falsely alleging that Hindu women were being coerced to convert to Islam or leave the country. In response, she posted:

"I must address the blatant lies and propaganda spread by Indian media and far-right groups about Bangladesh. As a proud Bangladeshi, I'm sharing my video from a recent protest where I advocated for student rights and condemned the Hasina regime. Yet, Indian media continues to distort the truth, spreading falsehoods and escalating tensions by manipulating videos like mine."

"In the past few days, I've done my best to present my perspective, talking with various Kolkata-based channels. Despite this, they continue pushing a narrative involving the former PM and her son, likely for political reasons that I'm unaware of. My Indian friends in Kolkata frequently check on me for updates, and Tabu ji has also expressed concern for my safety. I've tried to clarify the situation from my viewpoint," the actress stated.

Regarding the new interim government, Badhan is hopeful for significant reforms, particularly the scrapping of the DSA, which the former PM used to harass journalists, actors, directors, and cartoonists. "The torture Nawshaba faced in 2018 was unjust and horrible. They tried to control artistes by threatening them with similar treatment. I deeply regret the injustice Nawshaba suffered; she was blacklisted and even denied housing. As an artiste, I strongly condemn such acts," affirmed the Khufiya actress.

Dhaka to decide whether to seek

"That creates an embarrassing situation for the Indian government," he said, adding India "knows this and I am sure they will take care of it". He did not elaborate.

India's foreign ministry did not immediately respond to a request seeking comment.

Hasina fled the country for India on Aug 5 after a violent uprising against her led to nearly 300 people getting killed, including many students. She has been named in two murder cases already, along with senior members of her cabinet.

Ataur Rahman, deputy director of the investigation cell of International Crimes Tribunal, a domestic court, said it had launched a third case - an investigation against ten people, including Hasina, for murder, torture and genocide during the period of the protests.

At least three of Hasina's former ministers and advisers have already been arrested in Bangladesh.

In her only statement since her ouster, Hasina has demanded a probe into the killings and vandalism during the protests. She has not commented on the charges against her.

Hossain, a retired diplomat, is the adviser on foreign affairs in the interim government led by Nobel laureate Muhammad Yunus, which was sworn in last week after Hasina's ouster. The council of advisers includes other retired officials, lawyers, student leaders of the protests and some opposition politicians.

In his first interview to international media since taking over, Hossain said Yunus is "very unhappy about the way the statements are coming from India, from the former prime minister" and he conveyed this to the Indian envoy in a meeting on Wednesday.

He added that Dhaka wants good ties with everyone, including India, China and the US.

Discussing possible elections in Bangladesh, the adviser said that there will be more clarity on the timeline by September.

"Because everyone, all my colleagues in the council of advisers, they are extremely busy with bringing back normalcy" which should be restored by early September, he said.

He said the interim's government priority is to bring "irreversible" reforms, "because our system has been thoroughly corrupted and the institutions have been destroyed and they have to be restored."

Once elections are announced, he said, "we fade away", referring to senior members of the interim government.

"None of us have any political ambitions."

ROHINGYA REFUGEES

Hossain also asked India, and other countries, to take in more Rohingya refugees from Myanmar, as Bangladesh was not in a position to accept any more.

Hossain said other countries need to put pressure on the Arakan Army rebel group in Myanmar to "ensure this does not happen", referring to attacks on Rohingyas in their native Rakhine state.

"The world community has to create a situation that they (the Rohingya) can go back," he said.

"It is a humanitarian issue that involves the entire world, not only Bangladesh. We have done more than our share," Hossain said.

Palak, Tuku

Magistrate Md Rashidul Alam passed the order after investigation officer Mohammad Yusuf, a sub-inspector of Paltan Model Police Station, produced them before the court with a 10-day remand appeal, said a court staffer.

In the remand application, investigator Yusuf said involvement of the accused in the incident was primarily found. Moreover, as per their directives, the other accused committed such offences.

He said the three need to be question in remand to find out where the other accused are.

The defence lawyers sought bail along with cancellation of the remand appeal.

In the courtroom, pro-BNP-Jamaat lawyers chanted slogans demanding their execution.

Army, BGB, and additional police personnel were deployed on the court premises.

On Wednesday, police arrested Tuku, Palak, and Shaikat from the capital's Nikunja residential area in Khilkhet.

A day after the killing on July 20, the victim's wife Fatema Khatun, 36, lodged the case with Paltan Model Police Station against unidentified assailants.

Kamal, 39, was a resident of Shantinagar,

According to the case statement, Fatema came to know around 7:30pm on July 19 that her husband, who was waiting for passengers near the VIP Road intersection in Paltan, was hit by bullets and lying on the street.

Fatema and her daughter took Kamal to Dhaka Medical College Hospital, but doctors declared him dead around 7:55pm, said the statement.

Fatema later went to the spot and learnt from locals that quota reform protesters gathered at VIP Road intersection on July 19.

At one stage, miscreants opened fire at police personnel and the cops fired shots in the air. As the two sides chased and counter-chased, her husband was hit and he fell on the street, Fatema said in the complaint.

US in touch with India

"On the topic of Bangladesh, we have been in touch with our Indian partners as well as other countries in the region to discuss recent events," Patel said.

"Our push for an end to violence in Bangladesh as well as for accountability and the respect for rule of law is on," he said.

Asked about the two letters sent by two Indian American congressmen -- Raja Krishnamoorthi and Shri Thanedar -- to US Secretary of State Antony Blinken seeking his intervention in protecting the lives of Hindus in Bangladesh, he said he is aware of them.

"I'm not going to get into specific letters or engagements.... We welcome Dr Yunus's call for calm and an end to the violence... We welcome the new government's focus on restoring security and the protection of members of minority communities as well," he added.

"They [the conspirators] should be dismissed from their duties. Those identified as terrorists who have acted in favour of the last government must be arrested and brought to book," he added.

About the former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, Fakhrul said, "Hasina crossed the line. What arrogance she had! She had to flee back to the place where her roots belong."

"I am telling the Awami League, there is still time; stop stirring up trouble. If you continue like this, you won't survive," he added.

Fakhrul also criticised the attempt by AL leaders to lay flowers at the Dhanmondi-32 residence of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman.

"Even today, you went to Dhanmondi-32 to lay flowers. No one objected, but the students didn't let it happen because no one wants to see that person anymore. People no longer want to see Hasina's face."

Fakhrul said, "Using the minority community as a shield, the Awami League is trying to create instability..."

"Their main goal is to create instability within the country, hoping that if they can secure India's help again, they might be saved."

Fakhrul urged the AL party leader and activists to surrender.

"For your own good, stop causing trouble and surrender. Those of you still outside, hiding here and there, take a look at what happened yesterday. See how the [former] law minister and [former] advisor to [the prime minister] were taken to court," he added.

Demanding that those responsible for human rights violations be brought to justice, he said, "These people must be tried under international laws for crimes against humanity."

BNP Standing Committee member Mirza Abbas, Selima Rahman, and other leaders also spoke at the event.

Ex-home boss faces ACC probe

Public Relations Officer Akhtarul Islam said a five-member investigation committee was formed yesterday, led by Jahangir Alam, deputy director of the ACC, to investigate the allegations.

According to the complaint, Asaduzzaman Khan and his associates ran a syndicate that used to take bribes. After assuming responsibility of the ministry, he allegedly took bags full of money as bribes. These funds were collected from the police, the Department of Narcotics Control, and the Fire Service.

It says then Harun-ur-Rashid Biswas, additional secretary, led the syndicate. Other members of the syndicate included Joint Secretary Dhananjay Kumar Das, the minister's Assistant Personal Secretary (APS) Monir Hossain, Public Relations Officer Sharif Mahmud Apu, and Administrative Officer Molla Ibrahim Hossain.

Harun played a key role in collecting or withdrawing the money. It is alleged that the Kamal-Harun syndicate embezzled thousands of crores of taka and sent the money abroad, it added.

There are also allegations that the syndicate took bribes for appointments to key positions. A list of candidates used to be sent from the minister's office to respective departments under the home ministry after recruitment circulars, according to the allegations.

Salman used clout to help

Salman had recommended loans for GJSP from the state-run bank at the height of the coronavirus pandemic. He wrote a letter to the chairman of Janata Bank on August 9, 2020, recommending Tk 250 crore loans as working capital for GJSP.

GJSP is a Bangladeshi conglomerate whose business interests range from construction to engineering, electrical cables, information technology, printing and media.

In the letter, Salman wrote that GJSP was forced to take loans because of the adverse effects of "dishonest political actions".

The loans were not enough to meet GJSP's requirements, a fact that caused the company to default in 2018, he said.

However, the loans were regularised with a low-interest incentive package provided by the government amid the pandemic, according to the letter.

Salman warned that GJSP would collapse if it failed to run its business in full swing because of a lack of funds. Janata Bank then approved the loans, documents show.

The board of directors of the bank was always positive about some influential clients, including Salman, against whom it had not taken any brave move, officials said.

Contacted for comment yesterday, its Chairman SM Mahfuzur Rahman claimed Salman's letter had not influenced the board's decision to approve loans for GJSP.

The board receives thousands of such recommendations for credit but its decisions are not based on these, Mahfuzur told The Daily Star.

Zereen Altaf, chief executive officer of Globe Janakantha Shilpa Paribar, said she did not have any information on Salman's recommendation for the loans.

As Salman is in police custody, The Daily Star contacted Beximco Group which declined the newspaper's request for comment.

will be crucial in navigating the multiple challenges faced by the nation."

Singapore Prime Minister Lawrence Wong also congratulated Yunus in a letter yesterday.

"In this period of transition, your interim government has resolutely undertaken the crucial task of restoring stability," he wrote.

Wong said he is confident that under the leadership of Yunus, Bangladesh will return to a path of peace and prosperity, where all communities co-exist harmoniously.

He wished every success of the government.

Wong said Singapore and Bangladesh enjoy a "warm and longstanding" friendship that spans a wide range of sectors, including trade and investment, labour, renewable energy, infrastructure, and port management.

"I look forward to working with you to further strengthen the close ties between our countries."

Justice, equal rights vital for minorities

Take stern action so that none can exploit their vulnerability

That there have been a number of attacks, including looting and arson, targeting the homes, businesses, and places of worship of minority communities after the fall of the Awami League government cannot be denied, nor should questions like who orchestrated the attacks or what political motives might be behind them be allowed to overshadow the importance of security, justice, and equal rights for these vulnerable groups. According to the chief of army staff, there were around 30 crimes against minority communities in 20 districts. The number provided by the Bangladesh Hindu Buddhist Christian Unity Council (BHBCUC) is much higher. Only a thorough and impartial investigation can clear up the confusion, and lead to justice, which is vitally needed.

In Bangladesh, minorities—religious or ethnic—are often among the first to suffer during political upheavals. Even during normal times, we have seen how dodgy political elements exploited their vulnerability. Many persecuted minority families also had to flee their homes and even leave the country. However, this time, their response has been markedly different. Members of minority communities chose to stand their ground and protest against the violence. The BHBCUC also presented an eight-point demand, vowing to continue their protests until the attacks ceased. Although the protests were later suspended following assurances from Chief Adviser Dr Muhammad Yunus, tensions still remain.

True, the sensitivities of the issue under the present circumstance made it something of a political minefield requiring caution, but we should be able to unequivocally denounce any attack on minorities and demand their protection from further assaults. We were heartened by the message given by Dr Yunus—that all people in Bangladesh are members of one family—and the solidarity of student protesters and ordinary citizens who guarded the homes and places of worship of minorities. This show of positivity and solidarity must continue. And the interim government must honour its commitment to provide security to all members of minority communities.

But since the minority question keeps surfacing under new realities, we should also critically think about what we are doing wrong, and what we should do to address it. In the new Bangladesh that we hope to build, minorities must enjoy the same rights and protection as everyone else. Some of the demands forwarded by BHBCUC—including the introduction of a law to protect minority communities, full implementation of the CHT Peace Accord, and greater participation and representation of religious and ethnic minorities in government—deserve immediate consideration. Through these and other sociopolitical reforms, we must eradicate their vulnerability so that no vested groups can ever exploit them.

State bodies must perform better

Govt should take steps to depoliticise them, ensure accountability

Continued poor governance in various sectors has long been a thorn in the side of Bangladesh, and this is where critical focus must be given as we begin a new journey after the recent mass uprising. Experts and business community leaders have also called on the interim government to take comprehensive measures to address the underlying issues in these sectors.

Top among them is the banking sector which has long been plagued by various regulatory and policy failures. Nepotism and political interests weakened the central bank to such an extent that it failed to perform its monitoring role and take actions against the banks ignoring rules and norms to cater to the needs of a select few, often politically connected influentials. Bangladesh Bank also sometimes resorted to whitewashing malpractices by adopting incorrect accounting practices. We witnessed similar shenanigans in the capital market, and hardly anyone was held accountable for committing financial crimes. While default loans and money laundering kept on rising, revenue collection by the National Board of Revenue (NBR) came nowhere near expected levels. Rather, NBR repeatedly came to the limelight for the corruption of its officials.

Apart from the financial sector, there have been damning reports of corruption in various other state institutions including Petrobangla and Bangladesh Telecommunications Company Limited. The power and energy sector is another industry bedevilled by corruption, irregularities, and mismanagement. While many state-owned power plants lay idle or inoperative, consumers kept paying exorbitantly for power from private rental units. Another sector straining our wallets and pushing many below the poverty line is healthcare. A total disregard for policy and accountability has turned basic healthcare into a luxury for many citizens. Unfortunately, while all this was happening, the oversight bodies responsible for checking corruption and irregularities did little to prevent them. Even institutions in charge of investigation, such as the Anti-Corruption Commission, were themselves bogged down by irregularities.

Under these circumstances, we urge the interim government to take immediate steps to investigate and publish white papers on the actual conditions of all key sectors. The government, with the help of experts, should also try to revive the ailing sectors, particularly banking, ensure transparency and accountability in NBR, build a more business-friendly environment, create a commission to look into the issues of the health sector, and empower oversight bodies so that they can enforce rules and regulations strictly. The government should also take measures to prevent any politicisation of law enforcement agencies and all other public institutions.

The student-led people's movement toppling an autocratic government reminds me of a song by Sabina Yasmin: "Shob kota janala khule dao na, ami gaibo gaibo bijoyeri gaan" (Open all windows, I want to sing the song of victory). Though it was in praise of our Liberation War, it resonates in my heart today. Suddenly, we are living in a world without barriers of thought. Many of us had forgotten how to speak freely. We would always either switch off or put our mobile phone in the adjoining room, because of the surveillance regime that we lived under. Self-censorship became embedded in our subconscious. A small minority of print media tried to hold power to account while the rest competed with each other to genuflecting themselves to power. They opted for "lapdog" journalism rather than being the "watchdog." Fear of saying anything other than the koshered version was so prevalent that frank opinions were only expressed in the most intimate of settings. Anybody speaking to us as journalists would preface their comments by saying "not to be quoted."

For the last 10 years or more, nothing could be said against Sheikh Hasina or any member of her family. Expressions like "powers that be," "highest level of decision-making," etc were used while referring to the former prime minister. A law was enacted, under the guise of showing respect to the father of the nation, that made punishable even the slightest criticism of any member of Sheikh Hasina and her family. Throughout her tenure, the use of cartoons of the former PM, her sister, son, daughter, niece and nephew, or any negative comment about them, however well-documented, was not permitted, and harassment including jail term could not be ruled out. Anything but the "family" was the norm in our storytelling.

Rigged elections in 2014, 2018 and 2024, and Sheikh Hasina and the Awami League getting away with it, served to demoralise us the most. In every democracy, however flawed, elections serve to be an occasion for robust expression of the public will. This the people of Bangladesh, save those belonging to the ruling party and its allies, were deprived of. Also, by repeatedly manipulating elections, the Hasina government deprived itself of the vital feedback that free and fair elections usually give, as evidenced by the last election results in India. By manipulating elections, Sheikh Hasina, her government and her party never got the real message and, as such, suddenly found the ground shifted from under their feet when the student-led movement started.

The question that keeps on churning in my mind is: how did we go there? Why couldn't we prevent this from happening? Did we protest as we saw our freedoms being erased? Here comes the issue of moral bankruptcy of our intellectuals in general. As we saw Sheikh Hasina get more and more entrenched in power, we became more and more amenable to compromise.

The Awami League led a group of 14 parties in which some very renowned politicians were involved. These politicians spent their lives in trade union movements, fought for peasants' rights, women's rights, anti-extremism and democracy. But as a part of the then ruling party alliance, they all got sucked into the world of privilege, wealth and power. How could these leaders not see the rot that was setting in?

Over the 15 years of Sheikh Hasina's tenure, we didn't hear of a single resignation from any post within the government or outside. No minister, no MP, no academic, no professor, no vice-chancellor, no judge ever had the moral courage to stand up and say, "Enough. I will not take this anymore and will be guided by my conscience."

The way the highest tier of judges fell in line to oust the then chief justice, Surendra Kumar Sinha, will remain as the most shameful capitulation of the judiciary to the executive in Bangladesh's history. All Appellate Division judges were called by the president, on returning from which the group declared that they would no longer sit in any bench or participate in any deliberations where the chief justice would be present. In effect, all the judges expressed "no confidence" in the chief justice. But on what grounds? No explanation was given.

This one instance in which the mere wish of the prime minister led to the sacking of the highest judge of the highest court, with not even a demur by so many senior judges, sealed, in my view, any chance of independence of the judiciary. But it was brought on by the judges themselves. Couldn't a single judge resign to protect the dignity of the judiciary?

When the judiciary succumbed without clamour, all the other institutions and the people within them lost hope. One by one, most institutions collapsed—and often with our own help.

Judged against the background of total institutional collapse, the crucial significance of the student-led uprising cannot be overestimated. The chief of the interim government Prof Muhammad Yunus most appropriately termed the uprising our second "liberation." It is truly so. We now have a genuine chance of undertaking fundamental reforms that we so desperately need.

The student-mass uprising has broken down all structures of oppression. It has opened the door for all of us to dream again. Freedom is in the air and our right to free speech seems to have been regained. What the students have taught us is to never lose hope. When all doors were shut, the students crushed the barriers and opened them all. A fresh wind of change is now blowing through Bangladesh. New hope, new expectations and, most importantly, new possibilities are coming before us.

We must remember that just as we are good at fighting for justice, defeating the autocrats, and driving the military back to the barracks, so also we have a sad record of not being able to reach the goals that inspired us to fight the oppressor.

We missed the opportunity to build Sonar Bangla, first due to Bangabandhu's fatal mistake of launching BAKSAL and then because of his brutal murder along with his family and the consequent entry of the military to run the country.

ILLUSTRATION: BIPLOB CHAKROBORTY

The second opportunity was missed with the fall of General Ershad and the restoration of an elected and representative government. There was a well-thought-out plan by all the political parties that came together to topple Ershad's autocratic government. But when BNP came to power in 1991, that plan was ignored. When the Awami League came to power in 1996, it did the same. Thus, instead of the politics of unity, development and peace, we entered a phase that The Economist termed "the battle of the Begums."

Now we have a third opportunity. Usually, nations are not so lucky. How we make the best use of this occasion will be our biggest challenge. The most urgent task is to unify the nation. We must not lapse into the same destructive culture of relegating the interest of the country behind that of the party and putting the interest of the party behind that of the leader. We have suffered enormously because of it, and it is true for us all.

Proposition for a national youth parliament

Nishat Farzana
recently worked on youth political participation issues in the Asia Pacific as a UN volunteer specialist with UNDP.

NISHAT FARZANA

In July and August, Bangladesh witnessed an incredible demonstration of grit and determination from its youth. Historically, the youth have always been at the forefront of major movements in Bangladesh, such as the Language Movement of 1952. Earlier this month, the youth of this fairly young nation once again changed its course by leading a massive movement against the discrimination in government jobs, which ultimately resulted in the resignation of the former prime minister.

It is now crucial to incorporate the voices of the youth in the country's decision-making processes. Bangladesh can achieve this by establishing its own youth parliament, which would serve as a meaningful policy-making platform solely led by the youth, for the youth.

Bangladesh is experiencing a rise in its youth population. As of 2023, youths account for 28 percent of the country's population. These young people face numerous challenges, including unemployment, poverty, administrative and regulatory barriers to accessing financial services, and difficulties in obtaining quality education. Young people in the underdeveloped and climate-vulnerable regions are the worst victims of the prevailing socio-economic and environmental problems.

To capitalise on the demographic dividend, it is essential to address the problems faced by young people; otherwise, these issues will become problems for the entire country. Policymakers must actively engage with the youth, listen to their concerns sincerely, and establishing a youth parliament is the most systematic way to do so.

On a global scale, date from the Inter Parliamentary Union shows that half the world's population is under 30, yet only 1.74 percent of MPs in South Asia represent this age group. The former National Parliament of Bangladesh did not have any MPs under the age of 30. So, who could have represented the concerns of the youth in the nation's most important legislative body?

In the Asia-Pacific region, many countries have established government-facilitated institutions to enable youth civic engagement in political and decision-making processes. Sri Lanka, Malaysia, and Nepal have strong national youth councils. Vietnam and the Philippines have youth councils that also serve as policy-making bodies to the government. Bhutan's National Youth Assembly includes Women, Children, and Youth Standing Committees, while India and Pakistan have temporary National Youth Parliament schemes that provide short-term platforms for debate on timely issues.

These youth structures typically engage in activities such as dialogues, debates, and training on topics like entrepreneurship, innovation, and skill development.

Bangladesh has a Standing Committee in Parliament on the Ministry of Youth and Sports, but the actual presence of youth in this committee has been lacking. We also have a National Youth Council. However, this government-affiliated council has been perceived as inactive and largely absent on youth issues. Additionally, there are a few mock Youth Parliaments organised by social development agencies to enable short-term discussions. However, the policy recommendations from these forums rarely reach decision-makers. The political system needs to be revisited and restructured to accommodate a youth parliament that can serve as a policy-making body on major issues.

Establishing a youth parliament in Bangladesh has always been complex and fraught with technicalities. The current situation presents an opportune moment to establish a national youth parliament as a testament to the power of Bangladeshi youth. A well-structured youth parliament can transform the mindset of the country's young people by equipping them with the knowledge and experience of parliamentary processes. Such a parliament can bridge generations by encouraging veteran leaders to collaborate with the new generation, ensuring that leadership wisdom is passed on.

If a youth parliament is successfully established, it must ensure diversity and inclusivity in participation, sustainability and transparency in the engagement process, and authenticity in its operations. If the country's politicians are unwilling to pass the baton to new faces, the nation will face periodic setbacks in its development journey.

The legality of the interim government

Analysis from constitutional and international legal perspectives

Dr Muhammad Ekramul Haque
is professor of comparative constitutional law at the Department of Law in the University of Dhaka, and senior research fellow at the Constitutional Studies Program in the University of Texas at Austin, US. He can be reached at ekram.haque@du.ac.bd.

MUHAMMAD EKRAMUL HAQUE

The constitutionality of the current interim government of Bangladesh can be analysed from two perspectives: firstly in consonance with Kelsen's Grundnorm theory following a revolution and the drastic change in circumstances that follow, and secondly in light of the present constitution.

The Constitution of the People's Republic of Bangladesh is the supreme law of the land and, as its Article 7 (2) states, it is the solemn expression of the will of the people. Reading as such, along with Kelsen's Grundnorm theory, which enunciates that the law of the land emanates from a Grundnorm or the basic rule that births all other rules found in that legal system, it means that the Grundnorm is the will of the people. The evolution, or change of a Grundnorm, occurs at the instance of a successful revolution. Following the revolutionary events in Bangladesh in the months of July and August in 2024, it is safe to say that both a revolution and a significant shift in the will of the people have occurred.

This shift can be identified through two lenses: i) academic; and ii) political or through the naked eye. From an academic standpoint, the rallying of people against a tyrant regime and the subsequent resignation of the then prime minister is a mark of revolution from a procedural and academic standpoint. In the naked eye, the people flooding the streets in visible jubilation following the fall of the despotic regime as a result of weeks-long mass protests, unrest, and bloodshed is an invariable display of the shift of public will—the mark of a successful revolution and the subsequent shift, in other words the creation of a new Grundnorm.

The characterisation of these events as a revolution may be concretised by two key factors: the fact that the prime minister resigned, and that she left for another country in search of refuge. Following her resignation and subsequent departure, the law enforcement agencies, which had done her bidding even till the very last minute of her stay inside the country, were nowhere to be found. Meanwhile the army, which was deployed on the streets, expressed support to the people on the streets. And even more so, as evidence of a successful revolution, two student leaders took seats in the newly formed interim government as representatives of the movement. Furthermore, the formation of the interim government was not based on the will of any particular group of people. It was the collective expression of the representatives of the major political parties in the country, leaders of the student-led mass uprising, key members of the civil society, etc. that led to the formation of the council of advisers of this interim government.

Hence, in tandem with the legality through the shift and stabilisation of the Grundnorm towards the interim government, and through the application of the effective control theory where all the state's machineries are under effective control of the interim government, this government is not just legal but also constitutional. A successful revolution may lead to changes in the law of a country ("When and why does the Grundnorm change?"; The Cambridge Law Journal).

Under the present constitution, for the sake of debate, to entertain Article 57 (3) pertaining to the ability of the prime minister, after resigning, to still hold office until the next prime minister takes office, such application would be null and void given the fact that the prime minister is not present in the country, or at her office following her resignation. Hence, the question of whether she holds office till the next prime minister comes is irrelevant, since she left her office invariably for another country, rendering herself unavailable as opposed to the constitutionally prescribed method of resigning. This created a unique situation which neither happened in our history, nor does our constitution explicitly provide for it. The former prime minister's fleeing from Bangladesh made it practically impossible for her to hold the office till the appointment of her successor. In such a unique situation, which seemingly lays outside of the periphery of what exists as constitutional law in Bangladesh, it necessitates the actions of the president, and if need be, the collaboration with the chief justice in conjunction with Article 106 of the constitution, in formulating a new interpretation of constitutional principles that deal with the situation and pave a path forward.

There is a misconception that following the prime minister's departure from the country either by resignation or otherwise, there was no government in the country, whereas in the absence of the prime minister, the president was still in office, therefore there evidently was a government. The formation of the interim government led by Dr Muhammad Yunus was overseen by the president, which goes in line with the aforementioned constitutional law principle, since the vacuum created by the absence of the prime minister altogether elevates the duties of the president, thus instating this government as legal and de jure. Another significant characteristic of this government is that there has been no opposition to the formation and operation of this new government, which clearly shows that the people of Bangladesh including all political parties and the state organs have generally accepted it. Moreover, Articles 57 (3) and 58 (4) of the constitution stipulate that the prime minister and the cabinet of ministers will continue to hold their offices until their successors have entered the offices. The word "successor" is critical as it does not explicitly mandate a new prime minister or a cabinet of ministers to be appointed. From this perspective, their "successors" in the newly formed interim government, which the president appointed after taking the advisory opinion of the Supreme Court, gain legitimacy under the present constitutional scheme too.

In international law, there are two different terms used to describe different governments: de jure and de facto. De jure is recognition by law and de facto is control in fact. The president, with the utmost responsibility of the state, swearing in this interim government gives it legality, enunciating it as a de jure government, while consequently the effective control the interim government gained over state machinery—whether it be through the controlling of civil servants, law enforcement agencies or otherwise and through the emphatic and visible support of the people at large—proves this interim government to be the de facto government as well. Moreover, the recognition of the international community—the United Nations as well as various countries—and their willingness to work with this new government is also a very important characteristic of a valid government of a country in this era of modern international law.

This column does not aim to solve all the problems that have arisen out of the current constitutional crisis, but to raise relevant issues in concordance with the current situation so that they may be penultimately pondered over, researched, articulated and then implemented as suitable concrete solutions in the future. There is no one side taken throughout this text, rather multiple analyses made from a bird's eye view of the situation, taking into consideration the plethora of factors and circumstances relevant to it.

The legality of the present interim government is justified based on both Kelsen's theory and the existing constitutional law of Bangladesh. Thus, this government's legality can be established from jurisprudential, constitutional and international legal perspectives.

Can the interim govt make progress with the CHT Accord?

Mangal Kumar Chakma

MANGAL KUMAR CHAKMA

The quota reform protests that turned into the anti-discrimination movement of students, followed by the uprising of students and mass people, has caused the downfall of the Sheikh Hasina-led Awami League government. In its aftermath, an interim government has been formed in Bangladesh. The main spirit of the movement was to bring a reform in the state systems through the eradication of discriminatory functioning of the state.

Needless to say, it is the vulnerable and marginalised communities who fall prey to any form of discrimination. In Bangladesh, the Indigenous people living in plainlands and the Chittagong Hill Tracts (CHT) are no exception. It is especially due to the continuous repression of the Indigenous Jumma people for decades that there has been continuing mass movement in the CHT since the 1960s. To bring resolution, the historic CHT Accord was signed in 1997 to ensure a perennial solution to the CHT crisis through peaceful and political means.

The CHT Accord was signed on December 2, 1997.

After signing the accord, the then Awami League government implemented some of its provisions, but did not go ahead with the implementation of two-thirds of the accord, including the core issues. The provisions that were left unimplemented include: stepping up lawful and administrative measures to preserve the tribal-inhabited feature of the CHT region; devolving the subjects of general administration, law and order, police (local), land management, forest and environment, development of communication system, etc. to the CHT Regional Council and three hill district councils established under the special governance system within the accord's purview; holding elections to the councils after formulation of election rules and enumeration of the permanent residents of CHT in the electoral roll; formation of a hill police force with the permanent residents of CHT; returning the dispossessed lands of the Jumma people to the owners by settling the land disputes through the CHT Land Dispute Resolution Commission and formulation of the rules of the commission; and cancellation of all leases of lands given to the non-residents.

They also include withdrawal of all temporary camps, including the "Operation Uttaran"; ensuring proper rehabilitation of the India-returnee Jumma refugees and internally displaced Jumma families after getting back their dispossessed lands; appointment of permanent residents in all available jobs in the CHT with preference to the Jumma people; bringing amendment to all the laws, rules and regulations applicable to CHT in consonance with the CHT Accord; and relocation of Bangalee settlers from the lands and homesteads of the Jumma people.

It is worth mentioning that due to non-implementation of most of the accord, no political and peaceful solution to the CHT crisis has been achieved; rather, discrimination and deprivation of the Jumma people have intensified. The activities of state machineries designed to be anti-accord and counterproductive to the interest of the Jumma people have been strengthened. Consequently, it has become a routine for the Jumma people to witness arbitrary arrests, jailing, extrajudicial killings, enforced disappearances and abduction, forceful occupation of lands, forced eviction of people from their own land and homesteads, false cases, communal attacks, arson in houses, violence against women, etc.

The commitment of ensuring the Jumma people's rights given through the signing of the accord was heinously breached by the Hasina-led government. It was a case of extreme deception with the Jumma people. The institutions of CHT Accord Implementation and Monitoring Committee, CHT Land Dispute Resolution Commission, a task force for the rehabilitation of India-returnee Jumma refugees and internally displaced persons, the CHT Regional Council and the three hill district councils were made totally dysfunctional, indeed.

It may be noted that in the case of the CHT Accord's implementation, which was signed without any third party, the CHT Accord Implementation and Monitoring Committee is the the only recognised authority acceptable to both the parties, the decisions and recommendations of which are obligatory to both the Bangladesh government and the Parbatya Chattagram Jana Samhati Samity (PCJSS) as the signatories. But the Hasina-led government didn't undertake any initiative to implement any of the decisions taken in the meetings of the committee. The committee became an institution only in name.

Against this backdrop, for the sake of the implementation of the accord, it is necessary to appoint a competent person for the post of convener of the CHT Accord Implementation and Monitoring Committee by the interim government in consultation with the PCJSS immediately. After the appointment of the convener, the unimplemented provisions of the accord may be identified in the meetings of the committee. It is most urgent that a time-bound roadmap for the implementation of the unimplemented provisions be adopted in the sessions of the committee. Then the interim government can follow the roadmap to fully implement the accord.

In this case, the crucial role of the Ministry of CHT Affairs is undeniable. During the reign of the Sheikh Hasina government, the ministry was never seen playing a positive role in the matter of the accord's implementation, when it was formed under the provision of the accord. It is hoped that the interim government will undertake proper measures to bring the ministry back on track leading to the full implementation of the accord.

Whenever it comes to the issues of democratic and human rights of the people, the Sheikh Hasina-led government would focus on describing how it was going to uplift the country among the ranks of middle-income countries; it used to conceal its autocratic tendencies and lack of rule of law in the country. Similarly, in the case with CHT, the Hasina-led government used to tell the tale of its development programmes and strived to conceal its failure in implementing the accord and its oppressive actions against the Jumma people. The hill people expect that the interim government will be able to set the state systems on the right path, and make them pro-people, eco-friendly, and friendly to the culture of Indigenous peoples.

It is also hoped that the interim government will be able to realise the discrimination and deprivation of the Jumma people in depth and as a part of the reforms in the state systems, it will take firm steps to end the discrimination existent in the CHT region. Ending the plight of the Jumma people lies in the proper, speedy and fullest implementation of the CHT Accord.

Poison Tree of Partition

NAEEM MOHAIEMEN

In 1953, my grandfather Maulvi Emdad Ali made a point to tell visitors to our Rankin Street home that it was not acquired through a "distress sale." A small dhvaja-stambha structure in the garden marked the home's pre-1947 provenance as a Hindu household. There was a residual stigma for new Muslim elites of East Pakistan about gaining property through the despair of departing Hindus. Our family patriarch wanted to mark himself as a fair purchaser of property—hence his additional references to having a British Indian Civil Service job before 1947.

Partition literature, from Toba Tek Singh (Saadat Hasan Manto, 1955) to Vatan Aur Desh (Yashpal Singh, 1960) to Kalo Borof (Mahmudul Haque, 1977), has circumnavigated dramatic changes in family fortunes during rupture and collapse (Sayeed Ferdous, 2022). In our encircled geography of intense land scarcity, it has been the property under your neighbour's feet, not the rituals in their temples or mosques, that have been the target of sudden acquisition. Riots, intimidating people into crossing borders or going into hiding were the first steps in this process of land acquisition.

The Government of East Pakistan, after 1947, needed a set of laws to acquire property for accommodation of new government servants and setting up offices. "Requisition of Property Act" (Act XIII of 1948) gave the right to take over property "needful for purposes of the state." This flowed into the "East Bengal Evacuees Act" (1951). In 1964, new riots after the Hazrat Bal incident in Kashmir led to the "East Pakistan Disturbed Persons Rehabilitation Ordinance" (1964). This new regulation restricted the transfer of "immovable property of minority community" without permission of the authorities. This meant that any Bengali Hindu wishing to leave East Bengal for any reason would now face barriers to even the lawful sale of their property.

The 1965 Indo-Pak war ended after 17 days and left behind the poisonous "Enemy Property Order" (1965). This was matched by a reciprocal "Enemy Property Act" (1968) in India. Demonstrating a civilian-military joint project to continue expropriating land, after the pan-Pakistan uprisings of 1969 led to the lifting of military emergency, the government immediately passed the "Enemy Property (Continuance of Emergency Provisions) Ordinance" (1969). Again, following the 1971 liberation of Bangladesh, this law miraculously survived via the "Laws of Continuance Enforcement Order" (1971).

On December 17, 1971, a new enemy population was born, as the Urdu speakers of East Pakistan (former refugees and transplants from India and West Pakistan) were trapped into the geographically inaccurate "Bihari" category and "left behind" by the new Pakistan state (Dina Siddiqi, 2013) . The moment of independence that we commemorate was also accompanied by looting and occupation, this time of Urdu speakers' land (Seuty Sabur, 2020). In 1972, the "Bangladesh Vesting of Property and Assets Order" merged the abandoned property of those who had left for Pakistan with those who had left for India. This was further solidified in the "Vested and Non-Resident Property Act" of 1974. Thus, both Urdu speakers' and Hindu land could be targeted for takeover.

Back in 1965, the Pakistan state had also discovered another vulnerable population whose land could be used for the magic of "development"—the indigenous Adivasi people in southeast Bangladesh who depended on customary rights for land ownership. Supported by American engineering technology, the Kaptai Hydroelectric Dam was built in the Chittagong Hill Tracts, flooding Adivasi villages and the Chakma royal palace. The oral history of this event, a micro-scale "Nakba" for the Adivasi peoples, is recorded in Samari Chakma's Bor Porong (2018). The Adivasis saw their crisis as limited to the Pakistan state, but in 1972, they received a new system shock when the constitution of Bangladesh defined only "Bengalis" as the "people" of the nation. The first defiance of the new Bangladesh government was Manabendra Larma's remarks on the Parliament floor: "Under no definition or logic can a Chakma be a Bengali, or a Bengali be a Chakma" (his remarks also erased the many non-Chakma Adivasi peoples).

The Adivasis saw their crisis as limited to the Pakistan state, but in 1972, they received a new system shock when the constitution of Bangladesh defined only "Bengalis" as the "people" of the nation. The first defiance of the new Bangladesh government was Manabendra Larma's remarks on the Parliament floor: "Under no definition or logic can a Chakma be a Bengali, or a Bengali be a Chakma" (his remarks also erased the many non-Chakma Adivasi peoples).

After 1975, the Chittagong Hill Tracts became the site of the Adivasi guerrilla war, led by the Shanti Bahini—met with force by the military and accompanied by Bengali settlers. The equations of 1971 were inverted when India allowed the Shanti Bahini to set up clandestine camps, repeating the Agartala scenario. The huge number of Adivasis who had crossed into India after 1965, and then again with dramatic force after 1976, was the Indian state's raison d'etre for interference, just as the tidal wave of Bengali refugees was in 1971. The occupation of non-majority populations' land has been a bipartisan, as well as a civilian-military project for 53 years, no matter what sweet cultural ceremonies are presented to visiting dignitaries. Even the popular slogan of "Tumi Ke? Ami Ke? Bangali, Bangali!" erases Adivasis and Urdu speakers, and privileges "the Bengali sense of victimhood" (Rahnuma Ahmed, 2010).

The saintly aura we invest in our people creates lethal blind spots. The desire to take by force from vulnerable populations exists in all people, and after rupture events, that is what stays in our memory as a collective stain, while the moments of courage and community get forgotten. The media fans the flames, but it is our denial of contradictory histories, and the continuance of unjust laws and practices, that creates the opportunity for hostile eyes. Bengali Hindus, Adivasi Paharis or plainland Indigenous dwellers, Urdu speakers, Ahmadiyyas, Shi'a—all vulnerable communities have faced our wrath, always twinned with a gimlet eye on their land. Underneath are laws with a seventy-five-year legacy, that facilitate "distress" transfer and theft of land. If India and Pakistan are Salman Rushdie's "Midnight's Children" (1981), Bangladesh emerged as what I call "Midnight's Third Child" (Mohaiemen, 2023). Our independent nation-state has survived and grown despite setbacks and interference, but we are yet to escape the forever poison tree of 1947.

People from all backgrounds stood shoulder to shoulder supporting the students' anti-discrimination movement for the fall of autocracy, absolutism, and totalitarianism, that the just ousted government had established during its 15-year rule. However, as soon as celebrations began, those who stood united started seeking out enemies within; enemies who may look different, and may have different views about things other than the regime that they brought down together.

So, another chapter within a chapter began—where, on one side, celebration went on of the movement's success while, on the other, some people found themselves in another battle for their existence. In other words, some were subject to the very notion of discrimination that they had been up against. And they were labelled a minority.

According to the United Nations, minorities are groups of people who have either religion, language, or culture in common or a combination of those, but they comprise less than half of a country's population. As per the definition, I belong to a minority group. I was born a Hindu in Bangladesh, a country where more than 90 percent of the people adhere to Islam. Hindus make up only about eight percent of the 170 million people living in the country.

But let me be clear what the majority-minority dichotomy means to me. The minority label carries far more weight than just a number. It brings everything—one's hard work, identity, pride, social dignity, and self-esteem—down to nothing but that label; so much significance on the insignificant labelling of a person, a human life!

Once I earn the minority tag, my worth is always less than another person who sees themselves as part of the majority. The quantifiable image elicits a sense of helplessness, vulnerability, and a need for protection. That makes one meek, on the edge of getting down to one's knees for sympathy instead of fighting for rights, equality, and justice. If the approach becomes collective in nature, any community constituting less than 50 percent of a society tends to accept repression by those from the majority.

That's the reason why after each episode of arson, killing, and vandalism carried out against Hindus, Buddhists, or any other "minority" community in Bangladesh, victims have pleaded for support, scrambled to rebuild their lives, or fled the country. But they hardly summoned the courage to fight back and demand actions against the attackers. Bureaucrats and politicians make pledges to heal the wounds, but the repressed know well those are just hollow words. Over time, the absence of justice for attacks on the communities tears up threads of social harmony.

This time around though, I see people from the Hindu community take to the streets in the capital and in other district headquarters, raising their voices against the "reprisal" attacks on them after the ouster of the Sheikh Hasina-led government. The anger of the attackers has supposedly emanated from the predominant perception that the Hindus support the Awami League, and that Hasina had enjoyed all-out support of India, where Hindus are a majority.

These reasons are merely weaponised to justify communal hatred. It would be foolish to believe that Hindus in Bangladesh have any control over India's stance regarding Bangladesh. When it comes to supporting a political party, everyone should have the freedom to choose who they vote for. However, surmising that everyone belonging to a particular religion shares an identical political belief is nothing but preposterous.

The face of the minority keeps changing depending on national borders. The oppressors in Bangladesh become the oppressed in India. Muslims, who account for nearly 15 percent of India's population, are subject to communal attacks, including arson, looting, and vandalism of houses, shops, and mosques by Hindus. The majority, whoever they are, get provoked and emboldened by divisive political campaigns. In India, both Congress and the incumbent Bharatiya Janata Party used political strategies along religious lines to come to power, even though secularism is enshrined in the constitution. The BJP's third consecutive term after its win this year is feared to consolidate further divisions between Hindus and Muslims in India.

The gathering on August 9 and 10 at the Shahbagh intersection calling for minority rights is probably the biggest of its kind in years, if not decades, in Bangladesh. They have put forth an eight-point demand. I, however, find myself opposing the demand for a minority protection commission and a separate ministry for minorities. When humanity is advancing toward equality, the minority label would drag us behind. Equal rights, respect, and justice are imperative for social and economic progress. Those who are small in number would not appear weak if we can sow seeds for an egalitarian society to take root.

If we look back at history, we would realise that it is always the weak who get the minority tag. The number does not count. During the time of serfdom, landlords and kings were few in numbers, yet they were ruling over vast swathes of land. Even today, the richest of the rich are in the top one percent across the globe. They are not called a minority.

The minority tag will only perpetuate violence and discrimination. It is something we need to forgo to forge a Bangladesh where I am no less because of my religious or cultural identity.

The Bangladesh we want

Lessons learnt as we rise from the ashes of our past

Every Bangladeshi has a clear understanding of what went wrong in the past 15 years: blatant disregard for basic democratic values and principles, complete dissolution of systemic checks and balances through the decline of democratic institutions, unprecedented levels of kleptocracy leading to economic destabilisation, law enforcement agencies co-opted as ruling party apparatus, violation of human rights and, of course, unparalleled brutality.

Prior to 2009, though not perfect, Bangladeshis had been living with their own brand of democracy. Both major political parties and their coalitions had experienced being voted in and out, with the usual barrage of corruption, cronyism etc. in play during their times. In any case, pre-2009, our expectations from democracy were relatively low to begin with. So how did things get to these unprecedented depths?

The idea here is not so much to rehash the very obvious democratic and institutional failings as stated earlier, which certainly crafted a path for its demise, but to examine from an anthropological perspective, if one may, the deeper contributing factors to see what lessons we can draw from it. As we delve into some of these underlying factors that in effect, served as catalysts for a second independence movement, it appears as though Shiekh Hasina failed to understand the basic socioeconomic DNA of her own people.

The first factor taps into perhaps one of the most defining features of us Bangladeshis as a people—and that is the deep-rooted need for us to be able to express ourselves, our thoughts and our opinions. Freedom of expression is a right close to our hearts, deeply intertwined with the very essence of our identity. History also stands witness to the fact that the 1952 Language Movement led by students, the vehicle for our expression, was the first step towards the formation of Bangladeshi nationalism.

Over the past 15 years, through the enactment of repressive and draconian laws, the use of politicised state institutions and the violent ruling party student wing, extraordinary levels of brutal suppression were perpetrated by the government to curb any form of expression that was not single-minded praise of the prime minister and her regime. People have been indefinitely detained, tortured in custody, falsely accused of crimes just for sharing or liking a social media post. Had Sheikh Hasina been able to learn from history or comprehend the essence of her people (in modern terms we call this emotional intelligence), she may have been able to predict that this would only serve to fuel anger and nationalism in peoples' hearts until the moment it erupts, taking down everything in its path.

The second factor is the PM not really internalising the significance of the national youth demographics vis-a-vis creating a culture and personality cult around her father Shiekh Mujibur Rahman. Bangladesh has a youth bulge of over 28 percent which translates to almost 46 million people between the ages of 15 and 29. This under-30 population has never seen Mujib or been a part of the 1971 independence movement and, as such, does not share the same emotional connection the way the older generation does. Therefore, the "muktijuddher chetona," a concept leveraged by Hasina et al. to evoke and exploit emotions attached to the hard struggle that brought freedom, did not lend itself to the same extent of emotional manipulation of the younger generation. In fact, Bangladeshi youth saw more clearly than its elders did what exactly this "muktijuddher chetona" had devolved into over the past decade—an unspoken password to signal Awami League party allegiance. Anyone not subscribing to muktijuddher chetona was then a razakar or a potential anti-state element needing to be dealt with.

Protesters shout slogans as they vandalise a mural of Sheikh Hasina with paint and mud, demanding her resignation at Teacher Student Center area of University of Dhaka in Dhaka, Bangladesh, August 3, 2024.

PHOTO: REUTERS

This segues to the third factor, which is Hasina effectively creating a party state. This is largely an aging political strategy whereby the only way to have access to better opportunities is if one is part of the ruling party. The ruling party, also known as the "winner," owns and is entitled to all social and economic perks and the only "easy" way to live a potentially better life is to join the party ranks. Once in, real perks only start to come in when you rise through the ranks; and to do so, the only currency that works in this system is loyalty and the demonstration thereof. Depending on the level, loyalty is demonstrated by carrying out, orchestrating or supervising all manners of nefarious activities that violate human rights, undermine democracy, further kleptocracy etc. Thus continues the vicious cycle: the more you demonstrate loyalty, the higher you rise, and the higher you rise, the more engaged you become in corruption. This eventually results in a society that is split between the haves and the have nots.

Another major factor towards growing frustration and anger amongst people has been Awami League's blatant and continued reuse of political tactics that usually have an expiry date—for obvious reasons—after being deployed a few times. The most notable of these has been the party machinery perpetuating some form of horrific violence themselves and then blaming the opposition or some other targeted rival groups for it. The AL has been known to use this repeatedly and for multiple purposes, such as to divert attention from itself on some issue or other, to evade accountability or most commonly to try and generate an excuse to persecute the opposition. Volumes can be written on it. The loss of lives, waste of national resources and the ensuing violence notwithstanding, the hubris and the condescension demonstrated in assuming that a whole nation of people are completely devoid of being able to read such obvious ploy is inexcusable.

Lastly and possibly the single most deciding factor leading to this mass uprising has been the continued use by the AL leadership of its student wing—the Chhatra and Jubo leagues—as ruthless tools for oppression and suppression. Given immeasurable powers and zero accountability, the student wing was instructed to keep the general grassroots society "in line." The merciless brutality that these groups have perpetuated on the people of Bangladesh over the past decade and a half will not be forgotten from our collective minds anytime soon. Murder, torture, extortion, scams, kidnapping, communal violence—Chhatra and Jubo leagues have openly done it all and never been called to order by its parent party. Given such actions, it was really fate accompli that the people would eventually push back once the proverbial last straw broke the camel's back.

Moving forward, as we grab with relief a chance to rebuild our nation, we must learn from this and take corrective actions to ensure we never ever find ourselves, as a nation, in a remotely similar place again. Starting with the reversal of the draconian laws, we will need to ringfence our freedom of expression and other basic rights in such a way that it cannot be dismantled so easily by any ruling regime.

Almost 53 years on, it is time that we let go of this cult culture around our independence movement, this obsession towards slotting people either as freedom fighters or "razakars" and the weaponisation of "muktijuddher chetona." Let us pay due respect to our history and to those who gave us the gift of independence and focus on restoring our society.

Also moving forward, we can't have any more party states. Guardrails within institutional processes will need to be put in place such that every appointment in the civil service and other state services must be merit-based with rigorous due process followed. All appointed government officials will need to declare (similar to declaration of assets) if they or their immediate relation is a registered member of any political party.

And finally, political party reforms will need to be proposed to abolish the political party affiliated student wings. Our apolitical student movement has shown us that we do not need political student wings to bring about political change. Over the years, political party student wings have only served to politicise education institutions and be instrumentalised by parent parties as necessary.

Like a phoenix, as we rise from the ashes of our past selves, it is important that we take some time for collective introspection to chart a strategic way forward.

Almost 53 years on, it is time that we let go of this cult culture around our independence movement, this obsession towards slotting people either as freedom fighters or "razakars" and the weaponisation of "muktijuddher chetona." Let us pay due respect to our history and to those who gave us the gift of independence and focus on restoring our society.

When will we democratise the political parties of Bangladesh?

RASHEDUR CHOWDHURY

Revolutions spark dramatic changes, but the real test lies in the reform strategies that can steer a country toward justice. With numerous pressing issues, prioritising the right reforms is crucial. Recent upheavals, such as the Arab Spring, illustrate how popular movements can falter and revert to oppressive practices under new regimes. This makes future protests even more challenging, particularly in poorer nations with less experienced protesters.

Revolutions are rare, and missing the opportunity can mean losing it forever. While a revolution can ignite immense hope, without proper reforms, it risks descending into chaos rather than improving people's lives. Marginalised groups, including workers, farmers, and minorities, have historically been promised the benefits of democracy but have rarely seen these promises fulfilled. Time and again, they have been betrayed by politicians who prioritise self-interest, profiteering, and looting of the state. This has often created distrust and anxiety among the general populace, who lack the means to voice their concerns through legitimate institutional mechanisms.

In Bangladesh, the structure of political parties, characterised by a lack of internal democracy, raises doubts about the long-term success of student-led revolutions. While the student movement has achieved a significant victory, true success remains elusive. Discussing reforms in public institutions like the justice system, law enforcement, and the election commission is insufficient. For lasting justice, peace, and socio-economic well-being, we must prioritise internal democracy within political parties. Internal democracy is a fundamental cornerstone of any democracy, yet Bangladeshi political parties have consistently evaded it, bringing us back to square one repeatedly. For instance, from the fall of the former President Hussain Muhammad Ershad to the fall of former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, including the end of the last BNP government, people have been disappointed by autocratic attitudes, governance, and rampant corruption. These parties have often suppressed dissent and alternative voices through intimidation, abductions, and extrajudicial killings, perpetuating a cycle of abuse.

Focusing solely on public institutions while ignoring political party reform risks repeating past mistakes. Without addressing internal party dynamics, the same autocratic and oligarchic behaviours are likely to resurface. Therefore, any reforms initiated by the interim government must prioritise the internal revolutionisation of political parties.

The biggest hurdle is the undue influence that a few families exert over their political parties. They hold undemocratic power and monopolise their parties. Sheikh Hasina had total control of her party, with family members and close associates installed in key positions, thereby protecting her dominance, and avoiding criticism. The lack of internal democracy and dialogue has further silenced dissent through state machinery.

To break free, political parties must democratise. They need to be free from dominant family politics, which often function like mafia operations. Leaders should be elected, not selected, and internal election processes must be genuine and observed by an independent body to prevent them from becoming mere box-ticking exercises. An independent body, through constitutional changes, can rigorously scrutinise whether these parties uphold and practice democratic values, providing all members a fair chance to run for leadership at all levels.

Imposing term limits on party leaders and their families is also necessary to prevent entrenched autocracy. For example, the main leader and their family members should only be allowed to run for office twice. Without such limits, the old guards will find excuses to stifle new leaders and maintain their grip on power. The current political vacuum clearly shows that parties have hardly allowed any members to consider running for leadership, let alone pursue the democratisation of their parties.

Furthermore, separating student politics from party politics is essential for genuine reform. Students should have the freedom to engage politically through student union elections, but this involvement should not be swayed by the direct influence of political parties. So far, students have been used by all political parties to pursue their political agendas, rather than being provided with free and fair spaces for dialogue and education.

Decentralising the abuse of power at the local party level is also crucial. Committees in villages and towns, as well as in major cities, should be elected by grassroots members and local public, rather than being handpicked by central leaders who are often disconnected from local issues. This may help reduce the bribery and nepotism rampant within parties and obstruct internal democratisation. Marginalising alternative voices within the parties prevents those who could contribute to greater democratic rights and values from being heard, both within the party and among the public.

All this may sound radical to the existing parties, especially when they are in a hurry for an election, but they must be honest with themselves before convincing the public that the old ways are acceptable. The old politics of violence and revenge are no longer acceptable. Current acts of vandalism against public and private properties, along with communal violence, all indicate why reform is urgently needed as the transition of power to a democratic party hopefully occurs in due course.

Though the interim government and the spirit of the movement face a tough task, they must ensure political parties undergo necessary radical democratic reforms, just like public institutions. Otherwise, history will repeat itself, and the real freedom and well-being of the people will suffer.

At this critical moment, the revolution must serve every citizen, not just a few politicians or oligarchs who seek to govern without accountability or transparency.

Imposing term limits on party leaders and their families is also necessary to prevent entrenched autocracy. For example, the main leader and their family members should only be allowed to run for office twice. Without such limits, the old guards will find excuses to stifle new leaders and maintain their grip on power. The current political vacuum clearly shows that parties have hardly allowed any members to consider running for leadership, let alone pursue the democratisation of their parties.

China promises aid for polls in Myanmar

REUTERS

China has promised technical support and aid to military-run Myanmar for conducting a census, followed by an election, state media said yesterday, signalling Beijing's backing to a junta cornered by an armed rebellion.

Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi met junta leader Min Aung Hlaing on Wednesday during a visit to the capital Naypyitaw where they held discussions to conduct an "all-inclusive election", Global New Light of Myanmar said.

"Necessary technological assistance will be provided for Myanmar to conduct the census-taking process," the state-run publication said. "Moreover, essential aid will be given for the election."

Myanmar's generals last month extended emergency rule for another six months to allow more time to put together census data for voter lists.

Indian protests over medic's murder grow

PM demands swift justice

AFP, Kolkata

Thousands took to the streets of Kolkata early yesterday morning to condemn the rape and murder of a medic that has triggered protests across India demanding better safety for women.

The discovery of the 31-year-old's brutalised body last week at a state-run hospital has sparked widespread outrage, with Prime Minister Narendra Modi demanding swift punishment for those who commit "monstrous deeds" against women

Large crowds marched through the streets of Kolkata in West Bengal to condemn the killing, with a candlelight rally at midnight coinciding with the start of India's independence day celebrations yesterday.

The protesters in Kolkata, who marched under the slogan "reclaim the night", called for a wider tackling of violence against women and held up handwritten signs demanding action.

"We want justice," read one sign at the rally. "Hang the rapist, save the women," read another.

"The atrocities against women do not stop," midnight marcher Monalisa Guha told Kolkata's The Telegraph newspaper. "We face harassment almost on a daily basis," another marcher, Sangeeta Halder, told the daily. "But not stepping out because of fear is not the solution."

Doctors in government hospitals across several states on Monday halted elective services "indefinitely", demanding speedy justice and better workplace security.

Protests have since occurred in several other hospitals across the country, including in the capital.

WHO declares mpox a global emergency

AFP, Geneva

The World Health Organization on Wednesday declared the mpox surge in Africa a global public health emergency, sounding its highest possible alarm over the worsening situation.

Worried by the rise in cases in the Democratic Republic of Congo and the spread to nearby countries, the WHO hastily convened a meeting of experts to study the outbreak.

"Today, the emergency committee met and advised me that in its view, the situation constitutes a public health emergency of international concern. I have accepted that advice," WHO chief Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus told a press conference.

A PHEIC is the highest level of alarm under the International Health Regulations, which are legally binding on 196 countries.

"The detection and rapid spread of a new clade of mpox in eastern DRC, its detection in neighbouring countries that had not previously reported mpox, and the potential for further spread within Africa and beyond is very worrying," said Tedros.

"It's clear that a coordinated international response is essential to stop these outbreaks and save lives.

Israel intensifying attacks on Gaza schools

Says UN as data shows 564 schools have been directly hit or damaged since the offensive began

AGENCIES

Last week more than 100 people were killed after Israel hit a school in Gaza City sheltering displaced Palestinians, as the United Nations accused Israel of intensifying attacks on schools.

The targeting of al-Talbin School on Saturday during dawn prayers triggered global outrage.

Paramedics at the scene described the carnage as horrific, with "bodies ripped to pieces". Israel claimed that Hamas and Palestinian Islamic Jihad fighters were operating from the school – a claim that was rejected by Hamas.

Israel has repeatedly attacked Gaza's schools, hospitals and universities, claiming the buildings were used for military purposes without providing any proof.

According to data compiled by the United Nations Children's Fund (Unicef), up to July 6, 564 schools in the Gaza Strip have been directly hit or damaged by Israeli attacks.

With numerous evacuation orders since the offensive in Gaza began on October 7, schools have often been used to shelter nearly two million displaced Palestinians in the besieged enclave.

Under the Fourth Geneva Convention, schools are considered civilian objects and should be protected from attacks. However, within a 10-day period in August, Israeli forces struck five schools in Gaza City, killing more than 179 people and injuring scores more.

At least 15 people were killed and more than 29 injured in an Israeli strike on the Dalal al-Mughrabi School on August 1, according to officials.

Two days later, strikes on Hamama and al-Huda schools killed 17 and injured more than 60 people, reports Al Jazeera online.

On August 4, at least 30 people were killed and 19 others injured after Israel struck Nassr and Hassan Salameh schools in the Nassr neighbourhood in Gaza City.

Israel bombed Abdul Fattah Hamouda and az-Zahra schools, killing 17 and injuring dozens more on August 8.

The worst attack in recent weeks was on al-Tabin School, which Al Jazeera's Hind Khoudary said was hit by at least three missile attacks.

The UN's special rapporteur on the occupied Palestinian territory, Francesca Albanese, condemned the attack.

"Israel is genociding the Palestinians, one neighbourhood at the time, one hospital at the time, one school at the time, one refugee camp at the time, one 'safe zone' at the time. With US and European weapons," she posted on X.

In July, a similar cluster campaign targeting school shelters across the Gaza Strip killed nearly 50 people within a week.

Almost 85 percent of school buildings in Gaza have been damaged, with nearly all schools in North Gaza either being "directly hit" or damaged. This is followed by Gaza City, where more than 90 percent of the schools have been damaged or destroyed.

GRAFT CASE

Pakistan's army arrests three more ex-officers

REUTERS, Islamabad

Pakistan's military said yesterday it had arrested three more retired officers following the arrest of former spy chief Faiz Hameed, who faces a court martial on charges of corruption and misuse of power.

The arrests were in connection with the proceedings against Hameed, who formerly led premier spy agency Inter-services Intelligence (ISI), for "actions prejudicial to military discipline", the military said.

In a statement, it added that the military continued to investigate some retired officers and their accomplices for "fomenting instability at the behest of, and in collusion with, vested political interests".

Political parties and critics often accuse that the spy agency interferes in politics and government. Hameed, a general, served as the ISI chief from 2019 to 2021 during the tenure of former Prime Minister Imran Khan, who is now in jail.

Khan has said he did not want to relieve Hameed of his role at the spy agency after he was transferred elsewhere by his army chief, Qamar Javed Bajwa.

SRI LANKA ELECTION

Polls panel approves Wickremesinghe for presidential race

REUTERS, Colombo

Sri Lanka's election panel yesterday gave approval for President Ranil Wickremesinghe to contest a presidential poll set for September 21 in the Indian Ocean nation, grappling with the fallout of its worst financial crisis in decades.

Wickremesinghe was among 39 candidates to submit nominations for the vote, key to charting Sri Lanka's way out of a crisis unleashed after exhausting its foreign reserves, sending the economy into freefall and defaulting on foreign debt in 2022.

"We have to stabilise the economy," Wickremesinghe told reporters after his candidacy was announced.

"What we are saying is, 'Let's go ahead and finish this job.' That's why I'm asking for your support."

Two Buddhist monks were among those who registered, in one of the highest such figures on record, to contest the vote, in which about 17 million Sri Lankans are eligible to cast ballots.

Wickremesinghe, opposition leader Sajith Premadasa and Marxist-leaning parliamentarian Anura Kumara Dissanayake are seen as frontrunners.

"This is an opportunity for the people to bring about genuine change and create a new political culture," Dissanayake, whom analysts consider a dark horse contender, said while leaving the Election Commission after it approved his candidacy.

"That is our aim and I'm confident we can win."

After being elected by parliament in July 2022, Wickremesinghe, 75, has shepherded the island through the crisis, which triggered widespread protests and forced his predecessor, Gotabaya Rajapaksa, to resign.

Antarctica winter experiences prolonged heatwave

AFP, Paris

Antarctica, the world's coldest continent, is experiencing an exceptionally long heatwave during its winter, according to Britain's national polar research institute.

Temperature anomalies are not unusual on the continent known as "The Ice" but "the longevity of the warm period is unusual", Thomas Caton Harrison, Polar Climate Scientist at British Antarctic Survey, said to AFP this week.

Provisional figures indicate the Antarctic-wide July 2024 average near-surface temperature was 3.1 degrees Celsius above normal for the month.

Calculated over land and land ice, this makes it the second warmest July in Antarctica since records began in 1979 -- the warmest was in July 1981.

Average daily temperatures ranged from -34.68C on July 15 to -28.12C on July 31, according to data posted online by the University of Maine.

It was -26.6C on average on the continent on August 7, the latest date available.

The July average temperature anomaly even reached 9-10C over limited parts of Dronning Maud Land and part of the eastern Weddell Sea offshore.

Daily temperature anomalies often occur during the Antarctica's winter, but "what is remarkable is prolonged high temperatures", said Caton Harrison.

"Very early figures suggest it could be on track to be an exceptionally warm Antarctic winter," he added.

"The Ice" is the coldest, windiest, and least populated continent on the planet, but it too is impacted by global warming.

FALSE CONVICTION

US man gets $7m after 48 years in jail

AFP, Washington

A 71-year-old man who spent nearly five decades in prison for a murder he did not commit is to receive a $7.15 million settlement from the US city that convicted him.

Glynn Simmons, who is Black, served more time behind bars before being exonerated than any other inmate in US history.

Simmons was released last year after serving a total of 48 years, one month and 18 days in prison.

On Monday, councillors in Edmond, Oklahoma, voted to proceed with a settlement for Simmons to resolve claims against the city and one of the detectives who helped put him away.

Lawyers for Simmons said the payment represented a "partial settlement" of his lawsuit "against the cities and police who falsified evidence... to frame him for murder."

I-DAY SPEECH

India's Modi renews push for common civil code

AFP, New Delhi

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi said yesterday he wanted to press ahead with a national common civil code of law, a proposal bitterly opposed by Muslim activists as an attack on their faith.

India's 1.4 billion people are subject to a common criminal law but rules vary on personal matters.

The proposed civil code would standardise laws across all religious communities but has been bitterly opposed by Muslim activists and liberals as an attack on the largest religious minority.

However, Modi said during an annual Independence Day address: "Those laws that divide the country on the basis of religion, that become reason for inequality, should have no place in a modern society."

1.4m girls banned from Afghan schools since Taliban return

Says Unesco

AFP, Paris

At least 1.4 million girls in Afghanistan have been denied access to secondary education since the Taliban returned to power in 2021, with the future of an entire generation now "in jeopardy", the United Nations' cultural agency said yesterday.

Access to primary education has also fallen sharply, with 1.1 million fewer girls and boys attending school, Unesco said in a statement as the Taliban authorities marked three years since retaking Afghanistan on August 15, 2021.

"Unesco is alarmed by the harmful consequences of this increasingly massive drop-out rate, which could lead to a rise in child labour and early marriage," the agency said.

"In just three years, the de facto authorities have almost wiped out two decades of steady progress for education in Afghanistan, and the future of an entire generation is now in jeopardy."

There are now nearly 2.5 million girls deprived of their right to education, representing 80 percent of Afghan school-age girls, the UN agency said.

The Taliban administration, which is not recognised by any other country, has imposed restrictions on women that the UN has described as "gender apartheid."

UN report on vote 'rife with lies'

Says Venezuelan electoral council

AFP, Caracas

Venezuela's CNE electoral council, under fire after declaring a widely rejected election victory for President Nicolas Maduro, on Wednesday described a UN report disputing the outcome as "rife with lies."

The CNE proclaimed Maduro the winner with 52 percent of votes cast in a July 28 poll, without providing a detailed breakdown.

Maduro's victory has been rejected by the opposition, the United States, European Union and several Latin American countries.

Anti-Maduro protests in Venezuela have claimed 25 lives so far, with dozens injured and more than 2,400 arrested.

A preliminary report published Tuesday by a panel of UN elections experts found the CNE "fell short of the basic transparency and integrity measures."

The CNE hit back Wednesday, saying the UN report was "rife with lies and contradictions" and insisting a "cyber terrorist attack" has prevented it from disclosing a full breakdown of polling-station-level results after what it termed an "impeccable and transparent electoral process."

Ukraine's forces pushing along border front

Says Russia; Kyiv creates buffer zone to protect population

REUTERS, Moscow

A senior Russian commander said yesterday that Ukrainian forces had been pushed out of one village in Russia's border region but that Kyiv's forces were still probing along the front more than nine days since the lightning incursion into Russia.

The biggest foreign attack on sovereign Russian territory since World War Two unfurled on August 6 when thousands of Ukrainian troops smashed through Russia's western border in an embarrassment for the Russian top military brass.

Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky said on Wednesday that his forces had advanced a few kilometers and that the goal of replenishing an 'exchange fund' of prisoners of war was being achieved. One Ukrainian official said Kyiv was carving out a buffer zone to protect its population against attack.

Major General Apti Alaudinov, who commands Chechnya's Akhmat special forces who are fighting in Kursk, said that Russian forces had forced out Ukraine from Martynovka about 18 km (11 miles) from the border.

"We have burned everything that moves, everything that we have been able to find," Alaudinov told Russian state television from Kursk region, reminding viewers of Russia's defeat of Napoleon's 1812 invasion of Russia.

Alaudinov, a close ally of Chechen President Ramzan Kadyrov, said that Ukraine was sending in more forces into the Russian region but that the shift in resources was weakening Ukrainian forces at other parts of the front.

"The enemy is pushing, he is trying to get through from everywhere, push through," Alaudinov said, admitting that initiative was still with Ukraine. "But every day the enemy's forces are melting."

The Russian town of Sudzha, a transhipment hub for Russian natural gas flowing to Europe via Ukraine, was not under full Ukrainian control, he said. Ukraine on Wednesday said it was fully under Ukrainian control.

Alaudinov also spoke of the chaotic battlefield situation in the region when his forces arrived shortly after the incursion, with forests teaming with Ukrainian forces and a lack of clarity on whose forces were where.

Ukraine's incursion appeared aimed at forcing Moscow to slow its advance along the rest of the front inside Ukraine, though the Russian defence ministry also reported intense battles along the Ukraine front and said that its troops had taken better positions at several points.

Ukraine said there was no sign Russian military pressure was receding along the eastern front inside its borders yesterday and reported the heaviest fighting in weeks near Pokrovsk. Supported by swarms of drones, heavy artillery and tanks, Ukrainian units have since carved out a sliver of the world's biggest nuclear power and battles were ongoing along a front about 18 km inside Russian territory yesterday.

Colonel dies after coalition strike in Syria

Says Iran

AFP, Tehran

Iran's Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps yesterday said one of its colonels has died of wounds suffered in an air strike it blamed on the US-led coalition in Syria.

Ahmadreza Afshari of the IRGC's "aerospace advisory forces" in Syria was "martyred because of injuries caused by aerial bombardment", Guards' chief Hossein Salami said in a statement carried by state news agency IRNA.

The colonel was transferred from Syria to Iran for treatment following the air strike, the statement said, indicating the incident occurred two to three weeks ago.

In late July, the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights war monitor said an air strike killed three pro-Iran fighters in Syria's Deir Ezzor province, where Iran wields significant influence.

The area is regularly targeted by Israel and sometimes by the United States. Responsibility for the strike was not immediately claimed.

A spokesman for the US-led military coalition formed in 2014 to fight the Islamic State jihadist group said at the time that "neither the coalition nor US forces carried out overnight strikes in Deir Ezzor".

THAI POLITICAL CRISIS

Pheu Thai party chooses Shinawatra as PM candidate

AFP, Bangkok

Thailand's Pheu Thai party has chosen 37-year-old Paetongtarn Shinawatra, the daughter of billionaire ex-PM Thaksin Shinawatra, as its candidate for prime minister, it announced yesterday, a day after a court dismissed the incumbent premier in an ethics case.

"We decide to nominate Paetongtarn Shinawatra," party secretary general Sorawong Thienthong told a press conference in Bangkok.

Lawmakers will vote today in parliament -- where Pheu Thai heads a governing coalition -- on whether to approve Paetongtarn as prime minister.

The vote comes after Thailand's Constitutional Court sacked premier Srettha Thavisin on Wednesday after ruling he had breached regulations by appointing a cabinet minister with a criminal conviction.

Srettha was the third prime minister from Pheu Thai to be kicked out by the Constitutional Court and leaves office after less than a year.

Thai politics has endured two decades of chronic instability marked by coups, street protests and court orders.

Much of it has been fuelled by the long-running battle by the military and pro-royalist establishment against progressive parties linked to Thaksin.

Iran hackers target Harris, Trump campaigns: Google

AFP, San Francisco

Google has confirmed that hackers backed by Iran are targeting the campaigns of US presidential rivals Kamala Harris and Donald Trump.

A hacker group known as "APT42" linked to Iran's Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps went after high-profile individuals and organizations in Israel and the United States, including government officials and political campaigns, according to a threat report released by Google on Tuesday.

Democratic presidential candidate Kamala Harris's campaign said Tuesday it had been targeted by foreign hackers, days after rival Donald Trump's campaign suggested that it had been hacked by Iran.

"In July, the campaign legal and security teams were notified by the FBI that we were targeted by a foreign actor influence operation," a Harris campaign official told AFP.

"We have robust cybersecurity measures in place and are not aware of any security breaches of our systems resulting from those efforts."

Google's threat analysis group continues to see unsuccessful attempts from APT42 to compromise personal accounts of individuals affiliated with President Joe Biden, Vice President Harris and Trump, the report said.

The hacking group works by gleaning information about targets and tailoring "phishing" efforts to dupe victims into revealing log-in information for accounts like Gmail.

Examples given in the report included posing as a think tank or other credible contact to lure victims to fake video meeting landing pages, where log-in credentials are needed to take part.

Record number of forest fires in Brazil Amazon

AFP, Manaus

The Brazilian Amazon has recorded more than 37,000 forest fires so far this year, the worst number in nearly two decades, according to satellite data released Wednesday.

The number was 111 percent higher than in the same period of 2023, said Brazil's National Institute for Space Research (INPE).

Since the INPE started collecting data in 1998, more fires were recorded in the same period only in 2005, 2004 and 2003.

From January 1 to August 13, a total of 37,835 fires were noted in the Brazilian Amazon this year.

The Amazon suffered a historic drought between June and November last year, conducive to fires that have also affected the Pantanal, one of the world's largest tropical wetlands which lies south of the rainforest.

LAW OPINION

Bangladesh's Interim Government: What should be its tenure?

Although government tenure is a political issue, it must be examined from the constitutional perspective because the Constitution determines the terms and conditions of political appointments. More importantly, the BIG's terms and conditions are particularly critical as it was formed through a mass revolution. Therefore, materialising the revolution's mission and vision critically depends on the public perception about BIG's role and functions.

KHANDAKAR QUDRAT-I ELAHI

We. the people
We. the people
We. the people

How long can the Bangladesh Interim Government (BIG) led by Dr. Muhammad Yunus, stay in office? Several political parties, including BNP, have demanded that the 13th parliamentary elections be held as soon as possible, preferably within three months. This political attitude is nothing to be surprised about.

Although government tenure is a political issue, it must be examined from the constitutional perspective because the Constitution determines the terms and conditions of political appointments. More importantly, the BIG's terms and conditions are particularly critical as it was formed through a revolution. Therefore, materialising the revolution's mission and vision critically depends on the public perception about BIG's role and functions.

Bangladesh has a parliamentary system of democracy. According to the Constitution, an independent election commission conducts general elections every five years to determine the political leadership of the government. The 12th parliament was sworn in on 9 January 2024, meaning the 13th parliamentary elections must be held within three months of January 9, 2029. AL could not stay in power mostly because its administrative policy and its leaders' attitude angered the general student community. They eventually succeeded in toppling Prime Minister Hasina's government. The president dissolved the Parliament and administered oaths to an interim government as recommended by the student leaders.

The Constitution does not contain any provision for the formation of this type of government. This is a constitutional vacuum that has sparked significant confusion and controversy in some circles about the BIG's tenure and its constitutional legitimacy. In my view, the said confusion has resulted from our failure to distinguish between an ordinary interim government and the current Interim Government. An ordinary interim government, variously called a caretaker, provisional, or transitional government, refers to a temporary public administration system that operates between two regular governments appointed through general elections. Thus, an interim government is part and parcel of a democratic system of government.

The current interim government, however, is a very interesting legal and political phenomenon. On the one hand, its tenure cannot be restricted to three months because it is different. On the other hand, our constitution does not contain any provision by which it can be rendered constitutionality. To resolve this paradox, we need to look at the Constitution's Preamble, whose first paragraph reads: We, the people of Bangladesh, having proclaimed our independence on March 26, 1971 and through a historic struggle for national liberation, established the independent, sovereign People's Republic of Bangladesh.

The Preamble is the most fundamental part of our Constitution for two reasons. First, it ordains the democratic nature of our Constitution: The people are collectively the owners of the sovereign republic of Bangladesh. This sovereign power is vested in the political organisation called government. The modern government is a complex service-giving public institution equipped with different kinds of professionals recruited, trained, and promoted. Because the people own this institution, they choose its leadership through general elections. Indeed, the meaning and the message conveyed by the Preamble, cannot be changed if the constitution's democratic nature is to be retained.

Bangladeshi citizens exercised this citizenship right on January 7 and gave AL a mandate to rule for five years. Unfortunately, the people had to force it to resign only after six months and appoint an interim government. The truth most of us overlook is that people have made both government leadership changes, one through election and the other through revolution. If we describe the BIG as unconstitutional, then it would suggest that general elections are the only civic method by which people can exercise their sovereign authority. In other words, Bangladesh's Constitution does not permit people's revolution to change the government leadership no matter how it behaves. Alternately, the student force which caused the revolution is not part of Bangladeshi voters. On the contrary, if we accept the BIG's legitimacy, then in my view, it is supposed to enjoy the same tenurial status the Constitution prescribes for an elected government.

The intellectual issue before the nation is abundantly apparent. We must convince ourselves about the nature of the July Revolution, which was led by our ordinary student community: Did the mass join this movement voluntarily? If the answer is affirmative, then the BIG is constitutionally legitimate. In that case, it will enjoy most, if not all, of the powers and privileges that an elected government is entitled to. It is constitutionally constrained to arrange the 13th parliamentary elections from 09 November 2028 to 08 January 2029. However, like any elected government, it will have the freedom to decide whether to hold elections before this deadline.

LAW VISION

Rethinking our parliamentary accountability

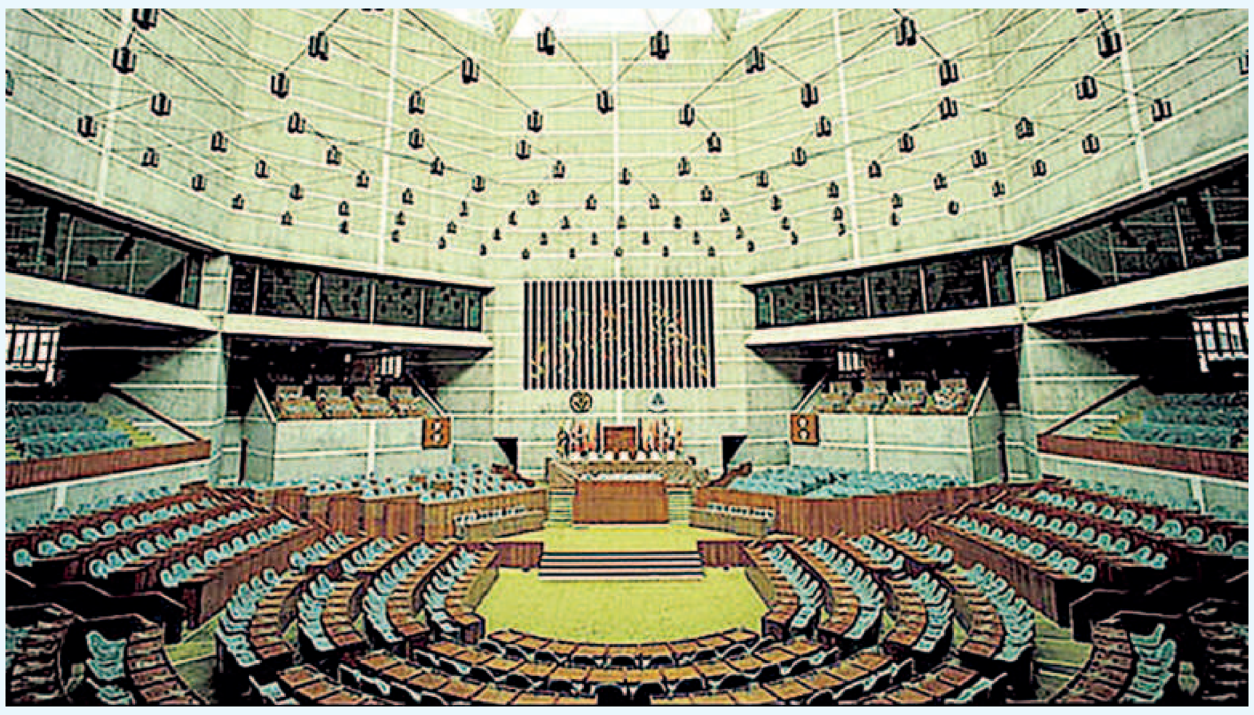
A sustainable parliamentary democracy in Bangladesh requires an accountable government and a performance-oriented, impartial civil service, both of which can only be achieved through reforming the present system of parliamentary accountability.

MEHER NIGAR

Bangladesh is a parliamentary democracy with a constitutional mandate for responsible government. Responsible government is a conception of a system that embodies the principle of parliamentary accountability. Theoretically, Bangladesh is able to practice collective responsibility by deploying 'no confidence motion'. Article 55 of the Constitution of Bangladesh (COB) clearly states that the Cabinet shall be collectively responsible to the Parliament, which implies that if any matters go against their constitutional promise, the Parliament has the authority to move a motion of no confidence and force the Prime Minister, and even the entire regime, to resign from office. To pass the 'no confidence motion', a majority vote from the Parliament is required. But, here article 70 of the COB remains a bar to obtain the necessary majority votes and ultimately renders the concept of collective responsibility ineffective.

Article 70 of the Constitution states that if a member of Parliament belonging to a political party resigns or votes against the party under which he is elected, he shall vacate his seat. Because of this article, the lawmakers belonging to the ruling party, who usually tend to be the majority in number, are prevented from casting their votes against their party in the 'no confidence motion.' Consequently, it is not possible to hold the Cabinet accountable to the Parliament.

One may argue that Parliament may hold the administration accountable through the parliamentary standing committees. It is mandated in rule 246 of the Rules of Procedure of Bangladesh Parliament that every Ministry must have a standing committee. Article 76 of the COB states that the committee shall investigate or inquire into the activities or administration of a Ministry and may require it to furnish, through an authorised representative, relevant information and to answer questions, orally or in writing. Based on its investigation, it will prepare a report to submit to the Parliament. The idea behind it is the Parliament will consider the report and will take action as the report suggests, ranging from making the minister resign or taking action against concerned officials and thereby holding them accountable. Unfortunately, this report does not have any binding effect, and ultimately it is rare in the history of Bangladesh that any significant action has ever been taken against anyone based on such report.



The Constitution strategised many mechanisms which in the end creates a space for the Parliament to hold the ministers answerable but not accountable in the true sense. An effective accountability mechanism requires the guarantee of two elements— answerability and consequences, and here, in Bangladesh the answerability element is in place but there is no mechanism to make them face consequences. Consequently, we see that our democratic system gets compromised.

It is imperative to give these concerns priority. In this case, powerful standing committees with the ability to make binding decisions would be useful. Article 70 of the Bangladesh Constitution ought to be changed to allow parliamentarians to vote against their party. Only then would it be possible to pass a "no confidence motion" against the ruling government, which would hold them accountable for their actions. Side by side, mechanisms should be developed to hold the ministers personally accountable for any actions in their ministry. In sum, a sustainable parliamentary democracy in Bangladesh requires an accountable government and a performance-oriented, impartial civil service, both of which can only be achieved through reforming the present system of parliamentary accountability.

LAW REVIEW

A critical look into our Ombudsman law

MD. NAFIS ANOWAR SANTO

'Ombudsman' is a Swedish term meaning 'representative of the people'. The Swedish parliamentary Ombudsman was instituted in 1809. Since then, the Ombudsman function has taken many different forms and various purposes. 'Ombudsman', in terms of utility, means a 'watchdog of the administration'. The Ombudsman is an officer of the parliament, having as his/her primary function, the duty of acting as an agent for the parliament, to safeguard citizens against abuse or misuse of administrative power by the Executive.

The framers of the Constitution of the People's Republic of Bangladesh made the constitutional framework for the establishment of the office of the ombudsman in the country under article 77. The expression "may" used in clause (1) of the article indicates that the Constitution did not make it mandatory for the Parliament to establish the office of the Ombudsman but left it to the wisdom and discretion of Parliament. As per the provisions of the article, the Ombudsman shall exercise such powers and perform such functions as enshrined in the law, including the power to investigate any action taken by a Ministry, a public officer, or a statutory public authority. The office shall also prepare an annual report concerning the discharge of functions, and such report shall be laid before Parliament.

Following the constitutional provision, the relevant provisions of the Ombudsman Act 1980 empowers the state to establish the office of the Ombudsman to investigate complaints of maladministration against public authorities. The Act is insufficient and so the Law Commission published a report on 9 July 2000 recommending some amendments to the existing Act. The Commission also prepared another report on the law relating to the forfeiture of illegally acquired properties of public functionaries termed as the Corrupt Public Functionaries (Forfeiture of Property) Act 2000 which is an enactment supplementary to the Ombudsman Act.

There is a widespread public suspicion of administrative corruption in Bangladesh which has very much undermined public confidence in the administration. Therefore, if the administrator knows that the decisions taken are subject to scrutiny by an independent authority, he/she will be more careful in making decisions and be less tempted to misuse powers and show undue favours to anyone. Pertinently however, the "acts of corruption" and "illegal acquisition of property" are kept out of the jurisdiction of the Ombudsman.

Section 3(2) of the Act provides that the Ombudsman shall be a person of known legal or administrative ability and conspicuous integrity. But in reality, the Ombudsman must have legal as well as administrative expertise. The fact that this provision does not mandate both the requirements is a problem with the provision.

Section 13 of the Act provides that if a person obstructs the Ombudsman from carrying out his duties without lawful excuse, the Ombudsman shall have the power to punish that person with simple imprisonment which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to two thousand Taka, or with both. According to the current scenario, consideration should be made to review the extent of punishment.

Moreover, according to section 15 of the Act, the Government may exempt any public officer or class of public officers from the operation of all or any of the provisions of the Act. This provision empowers the Government to limit the jurisdiction of the Ombudsman. The Act also does not clarify financial independence to the Ombudsman.

Despite many limitations, the Ombudsman Act 1980 came into effect on 6 January 2002. However, no Ombudsman has been appointed yet. Necessary measures should be taken to amend the Ombudsman Act so that the Ombudsman can serve as a bridge between the Government and its citizens, ensuring that public institutions operate in the best interests of the people.

United in action as Premier League kicks off

AGENCIES

Manchester United kick-off the 2024/25 Premier League season at home to Fulham on Friday as United boss Erik ten Hag looks to make the best use of another year at the helm.

Ten Hag failed to capitalise on the assured strides he had made in his first season at United and looked likely to be sacked after the end of last season before an impressive 2-1 FA Cup win over Manchester City gave the Dutch coach a lifeline.

The Dutchman has been backed by United's new football operations hierarchy, led by British billionaire Jim Ratcliffe, and was handed a contract extension to 2026.

Leny Yoro, Joshua Zirkzee, Matthijs De Ligt and Noussair Mazraoui have arrived to strengthen Ten Hag's squad for around £150 million.

But after finishing eighth last season -- United's worst-ever Premier League finish -- Ten Hag needs a fast start to the new campaign to dispel doubts he is the man to lead the club forward.

Fulham won at Old Trafford for the first time in 20 years in February.

Any repeat on Friday will have United fans fearing another season to forget.

Injuries have yet again started to haunt United, with left-back Luke Shaw being the latest name added to the list of forced absentees ahead of their league opener. Meanwhile, Yoro is set to return to action in about three months following successful surgery on his foot injury. This adds to United's defensive worries, which were one of the main concerns last season.

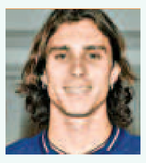
United faced the second most shots (667) of all top-flight teams in 2023-24, with only rock-bottom Sheffield United (678) – widely considered one of the worst sides in Premier League history – conceding more.

New signings De Ligt and Mazraoui might have to start from the onset and Argentine centre-back Lisandro Martinez, who arrived late to training following the competition of his Copa America duties, may also start.

At the attacking front, United have several big names ready to go but quite a few of them are on a mission to rescue their United careers at United. Exhibit A in this regard is Marcus Rashford who failed to build on his best individual season and is back in the corner where he finds the likes of Jadon Sancho and Antony, who are trying to rediscover their form and fighting for their futures at the club.

Five new signings to watch

Riccardo Calafiori (Arsenal)

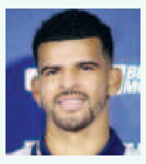


The Gunners beat off stiff competition from Serie A giants Juventus to land the Italian defender following his impressive 2023/24 season for Bologna.

Calafiori was also a shining light in Italy's otherwise pitiful defence of the European Championship in June.

The 22-year's arrival, for a reported £42 million ($53 million), certainly boosts Arteta's wealth of defensive options as Arsenal aim to end a 21-year wait to win the title.

Dominic Solanke (Tottenham)



Spurs are hoping Solanke, who could be the club's record signing as his deal could rise to £65m with add-ons, can fire them back into the Champions League and maybe even end a 16-year trophy drought.

Spurs did not sign a replacement when Harry Kane departed a year ago. Now the pressure is on Solanke, who comes fresh from his best-ever scoring season at Bournemouth last season in which he scored 19 times.

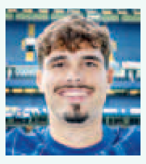
Matthijs de Ligt (Manchester United)

Dutch international De Ligt has been reunited with Erik ten Hag, who helped the centre-back rise to fame at Ajax as a teenager. Manchester United have signed Bayern Munich pair De Ligt and Noussair Mazraoui in a move that could cost nearly £60m.

After big money moves to Juventus and then Bayern Munich, De Ligt's career has stalled as he fell out of favour for both club and country over the past year.

His arrival is just part of a defensive overhaul as United have also recruited French teenager Leny Yoro and De Ligt's Bayern team-mate Mazraoui.

Pedro Neto (Chelsea)



Neto is so far the standout signing from another chaotic window at Stamford Bridge. The Portugal winger has joined from Wolves for a fee of £54 million.

Yet he faces stiff competition just to get into the side with Raheem Sterling, Mykhailo Mudryk Noni Madueke, and Chelsea's best player last season Cole Palmer among the other wingers available to Enzo Maresca.

Niclas Fuellkrug (West Ham)

The signing of German international Fuellkrug from Borussia Dortmund for £27m has been the highlight of a busy summer for West Ham.

After spending his peak years rising through the ranks of German football at Hannover and Werder Bremen, Fuellkrug scored 16 goals in his sole season at Borussia Dortmund to help them reach last season's Champions League final.

ICC to continue talks after Aug 15 deadline

SPORTS REPORTER

The International Cricket Council (ICC) will continue assessing the situation in Bangladesh before making a decision on the Women's T20 World Cup. The sport's governing body had initially set a deadline of 15th August to choose a host country, following unrest in the region, according to a Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) official.

The BCB are understood to have requested the ICC to keep assessing the situation and have been granted additional time.

"There was a deadline today [from the ICC], but they are continuing with communications, hoping to resolve it as quickly as possible. The Bangladesh Army has assured that they will provide security for the World Cup, which was one of the major hurdles the tournament had to overcome," a BCB official told The Daily Star on condition of anonymity.

BCB sources relayed that the board has sought guidelines from relevant authorities on how to operate with many directors absent. They are also understood to be in talks with Bangladesh's interim government regarding the current travel restrictions from several countries.

BCB CEO Nizamuddin Chowdhury conveyed that discussions with the ICC are ongoing.

"Yes, there was a date [for discussion] on 15th August [with the ICC], and they are possibly going to look into it further. We are still in communication, and it's being done in a positive way," Nizamuddin said.

Meanwhile, reports have surfaced that the ICC are considering the UAE, India, and Sri Lanka as back-up venues to host the World Cup in case they are forced to move the tournament from Bangladesh.

Board of Control for Cricket in India (BCCI) secretary Jay Shah told TOI yesterday that they have informed the ICC of their unwillingness to host the tournament.

"They had asked the BCCI if we could host the event, but I flatly refused," the BCCI secretary was quoted as saying.

'Focus is on cricket'

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh spin bowling coach Mushtaq Ahmed on Thursday said that the players have recovered from the effects of the chaotic situation in the country and are focusing on cricket.

The Tigers completed their second day of practice in Lahore yesterday, preparing for the first of the two Tests against Pakistan, set to start in Rawalpindi on August 21.

The national team players have had a difficult build up to the Pakistan tour, as their preparation camp was hampered by the political unrest in Bangladesh.

"I think all the boys are happy and very excited to play the first Test in Rawalpindi... I credit the management who have been very good with the players."

But Mushtaq relayed that the senior players have revived the mood inside the dressing room since the team arrived in Pakistan on Tuesday.

"I think all the boys are happy and very excited to play the first Test in Rawalpindi. The effect of the situation has been removed quite a bit. I credit the management who have been very good with the players.

"Players like Shakib [Al Hasan] are playing a good positive role. Senior players such as Mushy [Mushfiqur Rahim], Taskin [Ahmed] are playing a good positive role. When you come to play a series, focus is on cricket," Mushtaq told the reporters during a press conference on Thursday.

Mushtaq also credited the Pakistan Cricket Board (PCB) for proposing and then helping the Bangladesh team arrive in Pakistan earlier than scheduled to prepare adequately.

"There were security issues and also concerns over what pitches we will get. PCB has to be credited and it's a great relationship [between PCB and BCB], if they keep looking out for one another," he said, hoping to see more collaboration in grass-root programmes between the two boards.

What the condition would be like in the first Test in Rawalpindi is already a major point of discussion in Pakistan.

Bangladesh are no longer a side overtly dependent on their spinners as the ongoing pace revolution has given them the belief that they can do well in away tours with their fast bowlers.

However, Mushtaq feels that spinners will play a key role even if the Rawalpindi surface ends up being more conducive to pacers.

"You always need spinners in Tests. It's not only about taking wickets because apart from wickets, you also need to give your fast bowlers some rest. In Tests, spinners dry up runs at one end and give the main strike bowler rest. So, their [spinners'] role is important whether they take two-three wickets or six.

"With the experience that Taijul [Islam] and Mehedi [Hasan Miraz] possess, they are match winners and have won Bangladesh many games. They are very good guys and they are coachable people, meaning they are good listeners. Hopefully I can make a difference with them."

Bangladesh have four fast bowlers and fours spinners, including Shakib, in their squad for the Rawalpindi Test. The Tigers are likely to go in with three pacers in the match, however, Mushtaq said the management will take the final call after seeing the wicket. "Firstly, you have to see the condition first and then make your mind. We will get an idea of the condition after we go there [Rawalpindi]. We will see the pitch and then we will be able to tell the combination."

HP pick up second win in Top End T20

SPORTS REPORTER

Ripon Mondol picked up three wickets and Jishan Alam hit a half-century as the Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) High Performance Unit defeated Australian Capital Territory (ACT) by six wickets, notching up their second win in the Top End T20 series at the TIO Stadium in Darwin, Australia yesterday.

Sent to field, HP Unit restricted ACT to 124-9 with Ripon finishing with 3-26 and Abu Hider Rony picking up 2-26. Left-arm spinners Mahfuzur Rahman Rabby and Rakibul Hasan claimed one wicket each while conceding just 14 and 21 runs respectively in their four overs.

For ACT, Mikey McNamara was the lone batter to get into the 30s, making 36 off 26 balls before getting stumped off Rabby.

In reply, opener Jishan's 36-ball 50 catapulted the HP Unit to 125-4 in just 16.3 overs.

Jishan formed two important partnerships for the first two wickets, a 51-run opening stand off 31 balls with Tanzid Tamim (18 off 15 balls) and a then a 44-run partnership off 38 balls with Parvez Hossain Emon (23 off 24 balls), to set up the easy win.

Jishan, who hit two sixes and a four, departed in the 14th over when the HP Unit were 19 runs away from victory. Skipper Akbar Ali and Shamim Hossain remained unbeaten on five and one respectively to complete the chase.

Earlier, the HP Unit thrashed the Melbourne Renegades by 88 runs in their opening game, before suffering a five-wicket defeat to Tasmania and an eight-wicket drubbing against Adelaide Strikers. They will next face Pakistan 'A' at the same venue on today.

PSG prepare for post Mbappe era

AFP, Paris

Paris Saint-Germain are beginning a new era following the departure of Kylian Mbappe and the reigning French champions have so far kept a low profile as they prepare for life without the superstar forward.

Mbappe moved to Real Madrid when his contract expired in June, ending a prolific seven-year association with the Qatar-owned club in which he struck a remarkable 256 goals to become their all-time top scorer.

The France captain therefore leaves an enormous void, so big that PSG appear to have decided there is no one player who could possibly fill it adequately.

"He is obviously a different player and we can't replace him with one single player. Forget it. There is no substitute for Kylian Mbappe," coach Luis Enrique admitted in May.

Enrique takes his team to Normandy to face Le Havre on Friday on the opening night of the new Ligue 1 campaign without any glitzy new signing having arrived to directly replace Mbappe.

Meanwhile, when Enrique spoke at the pre-match press conference on Thursday, he accepted that his side will have to adjust after losing their all-time record goalscorer, but pointed to the wealth of attacking options in his squad.

"We will have to change things compared to last season. Before, we went towards goal and we all looked for the same player, Kylian, who had a natural ability to score. Now a range of possibilities are open," he said.

PSG have nevertheless spent money in Europe's summer transfer window, with an estimated 125 million euros ($132.2m) invested on three players -- 19-year-old Portuguese midfield prodigy Joao Neves, 22-year-old centre-back Willian Pacho and Russian goalkeeper Matvey Safonov, 25. And they may still move for a top-class striker before the deadline at the end of the month.

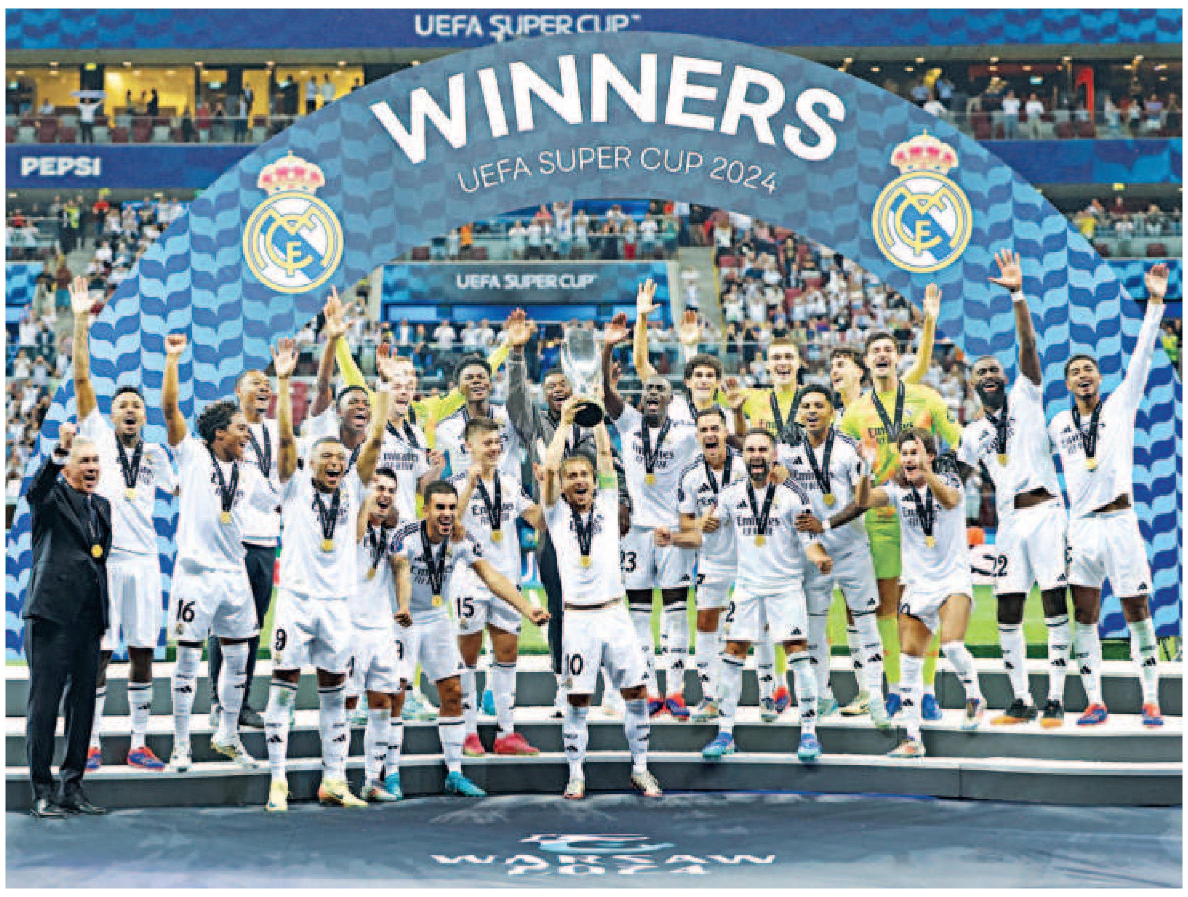
Napoli's Victor Osimhen, who previously starred in Ligue 1 for Lille, has been linked with a move to the French capital, although it is unclear whether he would fit in with Luis Enrique's preferred style of football.

Meanwhile, Mbappe apart, the Parisians have kept hold of the spine of their team from last season and have also incorporated teenage Brazilian midfielder Gabriel Moscardo after signing him from Corinthians in January but allowing him to stay there on loan for six more months.

French wingers Ousmane Dembele and Bradley Barcola will be expected to build on impressive performances last season, while the hope is that Randal Kolo Muani and Goncalo Ramos -- scorers of 23 goals between them in the last campaign -- will step up to help fans forget Mbappe.

The days of signing veteran stars like Lionel Messi and Sergio Ramos are a thing of the past, and captain Marquinhos, 30, is likely to be the oldest member of the starting line-up this season.

Enrique's aim will be to get his side in peak condition by the time the Champions League begins in September, by which time a new attacking option may have been added.



On a memorable night for Real Madrid and their star signing Kylian Mbappe, Los Blancos claimed a record sixth UEFA Super Cup with a 2-0 win over Atalanta on Wednesday in Warsaw. After Federico Valverde broke the deadlock from close range for the Champions League holders in the 59th minute, Mbappe, on his debut, sealed the game when he rifled home in the 68th minute from a Jude Bellingham pass. The win also meant that 38-year-old Croatian midfielder Luka Modric, who came from the bench in the second half, has now won 27 titles at the club to become the most decorated player in Real Madrid history.

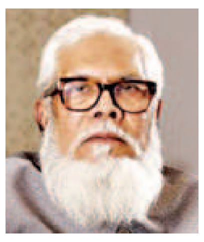
Salman used clout to help businesses secure loans

MD MEHEDI HASAN

Salman F Rahman is known for using his influence to get bank loans for Beximco Group by bending rules, but documents seen by this newspaper have revealed how he helped others secure credit, or at least tried to.

The Beximco boss who worked for Sheikh Hasina as one of her trusted advisers until the downfall of the Awami League government was overly influential in the financial sector of Bangladesh.



His clout grew so large in the 15 years of Hasina's regime that his recommendations were difficult for anyone to disobey, said current and former chief executives of three commercial banks who sought anonymity in fear of reprisal.

Salman is now a disgraced suspect held in police custody over the killing of a shop employee during the violent student-led protests that toppled the Hasina government.

The current administration has not yet charged him with financial misconduct linked to Beximco, for which he has long been known.

Having been the chairman of the privately owned IFIC Bank, Salman had mostly picked state-run banks for his endeavour to facilitate loans for other companies.

One such company Salman had helped, or tried to help, is Globe Janakantha Shilpa Paribar (GJSP), which sought and secured loans from scam-hit Janata Bank.

A document obtained by The Daily Star shows that Known to be one of the gems of the Sundarbans, axis deer are beloved to all Bangladeshis, so much so, that their local name is often used as a complement for beauty. Globally too, they are considered the most beautiful deer species. The timid mammals prefer to live in territories with woody vegetation for cover and open grasslands for food – grass, plants, fruits and flowers. As they are not as nocturnal as other deer species, they usually feed after sunrise and then a few hours before sunset. Matriarchal herds are common among Axis deer and, like the males, females can engage in aggressive behaviour when there is over-crowding at feeding sites.

If the country's home and law ministries decide, "we have to ask for her... return to Bangladesh", he said.

Gaza death toll tops 40,000

Says Hamas-run health ministry as new round of ceasefire talks begin in Qatar

AGENCIES

Israel's military offensive in the Gaza Strip has killed at least 40,005 Palestinians since October 7, the Palestinian enclave's health ministry said yesterday, as there was no let-up in Israeli strikes across the enclave.

A total of 40 Palestinians have been killed and 107 wounded in the past 24 hours, the ministry said in a statement.

Pressure built for a ceasefire to be agreed at talks which resumed yesterday in Qatar to avert a wider war involving Iran, after months of fighting between Israel and Hamas.

In a veiled warning to Iran, Hamas and Israel, United States Secretary of State Antony Blinken and Qatar's Prime Minister Sheikh Mohammed bin Abdulrahman Al-Thani on Wednesday said "no party in the region should take actions that would undermine efforts to reach a deal," the US State Department said.

In a telephone call, the two discussed "efforts to calm tensions in the region and the importance of finalising a ceasefire in Gaza," it said.

Israel's delegation includes spy chief David Barnea, head of the domestic security service Ronen Bar, and the military's hostages chief Nitzan Alon, defence officials said on Wednesday.

CIA Director Bill Burns and US Middle East envoy Brett McGurk represented Washington at the talks, convened by Qatari prime minister, with Egypt's intelligence chief Abbas Kamel also in Doha.

Hamas officials, who have accused Israel of stalling, did not join yesterday's talks. However, mediators planned to consult with Hamas' Doha-based negotiating team after the meeting, the official briefed on the talks told Reuters.

In Gaza, where almost the entire population is displaced and much of the territory's housing and other infrastructure destroyed, rescuers said air strikes killed three people.

An Israeli air strike on a refugee camp in the occupied West Bank killed two Palestinians yesterday as Jewish worshippers visited a nearby disputed holy site, Palestinian sources and Israeli army said.

India will always help Bangladesh's growth: Modi

AGENCIES

Amid reports of attacks on Hindus and minorities in Bangladesh, Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi, speaking from the ramparts of the Red Fort on the 78th Independence Day of India yesterday, called for peace.

"I hope things will soon be normal in Bangladesh. 140-crore people want that Hindus, and minorities there be safe. We want that our neighbouring countries tread the path of peace and happiness," Modi said.

Modi added that India will always be supportive of Bangladesh's growth and development.

According to Indian Express, Hindus have faced more than 200 attacks in 50-odd districts since the fall of Sheikh Hasina's Awami League government on August 5.

According to Bangladesh's 2022 census, a little more than 13.1 million Hindus reside in the country, making up for 7.96 percent of the country's population. Other minorities (Buddhists, Christians, etc.) together constituted less than 1 percent.

'Will back new govt as long as it stands for democracy'

Says Mirza Fakhrul

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir said yesterday that the interim government would have the party's continued support as long as it stood for democracy and handed over power in a democratic manner.

"This government is the result of our movement. We will assist them as long as they stay in favour of democracy and transfer power through a democratic process," Fakhrul said during a sit-in programme in front of the party's Nayapaltan office in the capital.

BNP organised the programme as part of its two-day event demanding that former prime minister Sheikh Hasina and her aides be tried on charges of carrying out a mass killing during the recent student protests.

Fakhrul said, "We want a change in government through elections. [For which] we are also willing to give a reasonable time to the interim government.

"Let me be clear, there is no alternative to democracy. There is no alternative to voting. We are fighting for that democracy."

Expressing gratitude to the interim government, the BNP leader hoped that the interim government would hold a free and fair election and that people would vote in the polls to form the government.

He called for the removal of the "conspirators within the government," who he claimed are working against country people.

Tk 45,000cr stuck in shady loans

Eight banks provide loans to directors of other banks in a murky practice, bringing significant risks to the entire sector

AHSAN HABIB

Directors of eight private banks borrowed heavily from each other's banks in reciprocal lending practices fraught with serious risks. Some banks went one step further and lent thousands of crores to relatives of these banks' chairmen or directors.

The loans going in and out of these eight banks for directors amounted to Tk 25,000 crore at the end of 2023, according to their financial reports analysed by The Daily Star. Apart from this, four of these lenders provided around Tk 20,000 crore to the relatives of the bank directors. That means the total reciprocal loans sanctioned for these directors and their relatives amounted to Tk 45,000 crore. Most of these loans changed hands in the last five years.

Over the last three months, The Daily Star analysed the financial reports of the 51 scheduled banks currently operating in Bangladesh and found that no other banks except these eight were engaged in such lending practices.

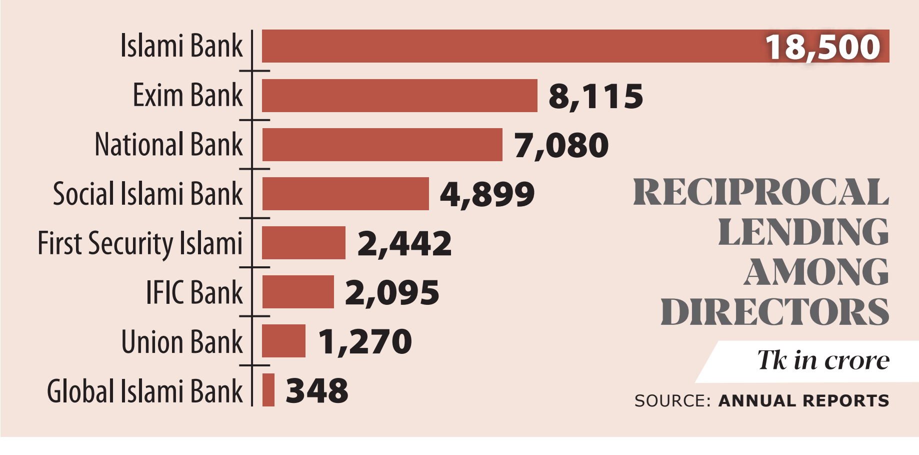
The banks are Exim Bank, Islami Bank, Social Islami Bank, National Bank, IFIC Bank, First Security Islami Bank, Union Bank and Global Islami Bank.

These banks are known for their questionable banking practices and were allegedly linked with the just-ousted Awami League government. During Sheikh Hasina's 15-year rule, powerful business groups with banking assets, including S Alam, Beximco, Nassa and Sikder Group, thrived on murky politics and bent rules, exposing the entire financial sector to serious risks.

The combined contribution of the eight bank directors in question to the lenders' paid-up capital is TK 2,400 crore, or about 5 percent of the Tk 45,000 crore loans they have taken from each other.

Most of these groups were not capable of getting loans if their business practices and financial health were taken into account, and so they lent reciprocally.

As the central bank rules prohibit the lending of a bank to its own directors, the directors deployed this cunning method.



SOURCE: ANNUAL REPORTS

This trend is not new, but it spread in the banking sector in the last seven to eight years, officials said.

"As most of the bank owners are also successful in their own businesses, the central bank cannot prevent banks from lending to the owners of other banks," a banking analyst said.

According to a 2014 central bank circular, commercial banks can lend to their directors' firms up to 50 percent of their contribution to the paid-up capital.

Four of these banks declined to comment for this story, and two others said the loans were sanctioned under relevant laws. The Daily Star could not reach the two other banks.

Bankers say such reciprocal lending is risky for the relevant banks and the banking sector as a whole.

This type of borrowing indicates that these directors helped each other out with depositors' money as they would find it difficult to secure loans from other banks, they add.

Most of the loans were approved

Brig Gen (retd) M Sakhawat Hussain was replaced as home adviser by Lt Gen (retd) Jahangir Alam Chowdhury last night, hours after four new advisers, including Jahangir, were sworn into office.

Sakhawat was given the charge of the textiles and jute ministry as the interim government redistributed the portfolios of eight advisers, according to the chief adviser's press wing.

The other new advisers are noted economist Wahiduddin Mahmud, former cabinet secretary Ali Imam Majumdar and former power secretary Muhammad Fouzul Kabir Khan.

President Mohammed Shahabuddin administered the oath to the four advisers at the Bangabhaban around 4:15pm. With them, the number of advisers to the interim government rose to 21.

Law enforcers used unnecessary force on protesters: UN

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

The UN Human Rights Office has said that there are strong indications that the security forces resorted to unnecessary and disproportionate use of force and extrajudicial killings during the mass uprising that led to the ouster of the Awami League government.

"According to available public reports by media and the protest movement itself, between July 16 and August 11, more than 600 people were killed. Of these, nearly 400 deaths were reported from July 16 to August 4, while around 250 people were reportedly killed following the new wave of protests between August 5 and 6," reads a report by the UN agency.

The reported death toll is likely an underestimate, as information collection has been hindered by restrictions on movement due to the curfew and the internet shutdown, it says.

The report titled "Preliminary Analysis of Recent Protests and Unrest in Bangladesh" was released yesterday by the UN Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR).

It comes a week ahead of a UN team's visit to Dhaka to discuss the modalities for an investigation into human rights violations.

The report details the background of how the students' peaceful protests eventually turned into a mass upsurge and the law enforcers used disproportionate force to quell the demonstrators.

"The police and paramilitary forces appear to have frequently used force indiscriminately against both peaceful protests as well as those with elements of violence, employing rubber bullets, sound grenades and firearms with live lethal ammunition, including birdshot pellets and bullets.

"Additional, alleged violations, that also warrant thorough, impartial and transparent investigations, included extrajudicial killings, arbitrary arrests and detention, enforced disappearances, torture and ill-treatment, and severe restrictions on exercise of freedoms of expression and peaceful assembly."

One of the recommendations made by the UN was to ensure accountability for those who applied or ordered the unnecessary and disproportionate use of force.

"Considering that certain individuals among the protesters were seen typically using sticks, bricks or similar types of makeshift weapons, the security forces' recurring and persistent use of firearms, including pellet shotguns, handguns and rifles, would have regularly involved unnecessary and disproportionate force.

"Reports indicate that security forces also used helicopters to fire on protesters,

UN calls for protection of peaceful assembly

The UN has called for the security forces to ensure that people can hold peaceful assemblies in Bangladesh.

"...we encourage the right to peaceful protest to be respected by all. And we call on security forces to ensure that no one engaging in peaceful protest is harmed," UN Secretary-General's Deputy Spokesperson Farhan Haq said during a routine press briefing on Thursday.

He was answering a question about the obstruction of people wishing to pay respect to the Father of the Nation Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman at Dhanmondi-32 on the 49th anniversary of his murder.

Haq said the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights and Bangladesh's interim government chief, Muhammad Yunus, discussed the UN's potential support for the interim government, particularly on accountability issues, ahead of the UN fact-finding mission's visit to investigate recent killings and atrocities in Bangladesh.

Next week, a team will arrive in Dhaka to discuss the potential areas of support and the specific modalities for

Ex-Padma Bank chairman faces ACC probe

He allegedly embezzled Tk 800cr from share market

Nafeez Sarafat

The Anti-Corruption Commission has launched an investigation into alleged embezzlement of Tk 800 crore by ex-banker Chowdhury Nafeez Sarafat.

An ACC director, requesting anonymity, said Nafeez took control of Padma Bank, formerly Farmers Bank, with the help of top officers of an intelligence agency and police.

There are allegations that he embezzled around Tk 800 crore from the stock market, said the director, adding, "We sent letters to Bangladesh Bank and some other authorities, asking for information regarding his irregularities."

Nafeez hogged headlines because of his involvement with Farmers Bank, which became a hotbed for irregularities in less than three years of its establishment in 2013.

According to a Bangladesh Bank report, over Tk 3,500 crore was syphoned out of the bank.

To rescue the bank, state enterprises Investment Corporation of Bangladesh, Sonali Bank, Janata Bank, Agrani Bank and Rupali Bank bought 60 percent stake in the bank for Tk 715 crore.

DHAKA'S UNEXPECTED TRANSFORMATION

From chaos to community

RBR

During the recent protests, the amount of people demanding to rebuild our country again were many. For good and bad, a lot has changed for Dhaka and its residents since then, and a new chapter in history was written. Just as the nature of any revolution, it was achieved through bloodshed and mindless atrocity.

Even as the dust settles, with an interim government in place, we are witnessing a renaissance, regarding societal, and mindset change.

We are no longer accepting autocracy or extremism in any form. Dhakaites now know who their neighbours are, and find strength in unity.

Let's see how Dhaka is now a better place because of it.

Our men in uniform

These men obey orders; however, there is no reason to forget their early actions against protesters, or forgive them for it. Then again, I realised the importance of our police force. The minute they went on strike, I felt defenceless and exposed to a hoard of serious crimes that had put my security at stake. I never thought I would say this, but when I saw police officers back in active duty on their bikes and standing at street corners, I was genuinely relieved.

Citizens did a laudable job in protecting their own, but in all seriousness, the job of a police officer cannot be undertaken by ordinary citizens.

Traffic woes sorted

You know, I have always seen that when our ordinary public vehicles and personal cars enter the cantonment area, they instinctively abide by traffic rules, for the fear of fines and punishments that are in place there.

Unfortunately, out in the real world, things are different. Even my car, on any other road, would change lanes without indicators, block the left lane, and take a U-turn just like that. Motorbikes would dance through the traffic chaos, rickshaws would stick out their front wheel in front of a moving car, or a pedestrian would lift a hand and start crossing a busy road. We have been at it for so long that this kind of behaviour felt as the norm.

However, it was our students who showed us how bad our traffic mannerisms are. They made sure foot-over bridge and zebra crossings were used, lanes were maintained and if anyone broke the rules, they put the guilty on traffic duty as a punishment. What an ingenious way to teach them traffic rules!

Clean Dhaka

When we travel abroad, we keep their cities clean, but do not show the same care when in Dhaka. But we have seen that the students have cleaned Dhaka's alleys, thoroughfares, debris, and garbage. Just the other day, I wanted to throw my banana peel on the island as plant food, but refrained from doing so for fear of being chewed out by youngsters!

I loved how the kids placed garbage boxes, and dustbins at road corners, how they picked up trash and kept Dhaka clean. I hope these basic civic duties are carried forward by the rest of the populous.

Without the Internet: Dhaka's unplugged resilience

If nothing else, the forced detox from our obnoxious online addiction did us good. Young and old, rich or poor, we were all stuck to posts/reels on our social media profiles. We were in a toxic relationship with social media.

Having said that, we do need the internet for work and all sorts of financial transactions. The pre-paid electric meter conundrum was very real for many of us. The fear of our electric connection from DESCO being cut off, our meter showing bills in the minuses, the DESCO office being closed, and online money transfer services being disabled was exasperating. ATM booths had their shutters down and banks were closed, so life with no cash at hand and with no cashless card service, was upsettingly dreadful.

Now that internet has been restored, if nothing else, it has taught us to always keep physical cash on hand at home in case of emergencies like this.

The show of patriotism from Gen Z

Hats off to these spirited young individuals who proved how much they love Bangladesh and its future. Their movement, which started from demands of quota reforms, are now trying to reform the culture of our bad politics. We, who always say that we saw the War of Liberation or we fought for our country, actually believed that we were the sole saviours of the state. We have always stayed silent when we saw the misuse of power by any political party. We were stuck in a vicious cycle of political corruption practised by all political parties; we turned a blind eye to their aggression, and remained a pawn to their ruinous policies. We never demanded clean politics.

With a fair election on the cards, I plead that no undeserving person stand up as our future leader. These students have lit the fire of patriotism in us. So, now, someone with a good heart and true love for the country should give this nationalism and loyalty a real chance. Let no one encash this spirit for personal gain.

the minorities have been exaggerated", according to a press release of the chief adviser's press wing.

"The chief adviser has told Prime Minister Narendra Modi that his government is committed to safeguarding every citizen of the country including the minorities when the Indian prime minister raised the issue of the protection of the minorities," said the release.

"Prof Muhammad Yunus said the situation in Bangladesh has been brought under control and life is becoming normal across the country," it said.

The chief adviser told the Indian PM that his government is committed to making all state apparatus fully functional and effective and ensuring human rights for every citizen of the country.

During the conversation, Modi felicitated Prof Yunus on his new role. He also expressed his desire to work closely with the interim government, said the release.

The Indian PM said he had known him for a long time. He hoped that Prof Yunus' vast experience and leadership qualities would bring positive results to the people of Bangladesh.

The Indian PM also invited Prof Yunus to join the "Third Voice of Global South Summit" to be hosted virtually by New Delhi on August 17. The chief adviser agreed to join the summit virtually from Dhaka.

Prof Yunus told the Indian premier that his interim government took over as a result of the student movement. "This is the second revolution in Bangladesh and his government will fulfil the desire of the democratic aspirations of the students and people," said the press release.

The chief adviser thanked Modi for the telephone conversation and the tweet he posted immediately after he was sworn in. He also congratulated the Indian leader and the Indian people on the country's Independence Day, celebrated on August 15.

According to a readout issued by the Indian PMO on the conversation, Modi conveyed India's commitment to supporting the people of Bangladesh through various development initiatives.

During the call, Modi "reaffirmed India's support for a democratic, stable, peaceful and progressive Bangladesh. He emphasised India's commitment to supporting the people of Bangladesh through various development initiatives," according to the readout.

The two leaders also discussed ways to take the bilateral relationship forward in line with the respective national priorities, said the readout.

Sharing the information on social media handle X (previously known as Twitter), PM Modi said they exchanged views on the prevailing situation.

"Received a telephone call from Professor Muhammad Yunus, @ChiefAdviserGoB. Exchanged views on the prevailing situation. Reiterated India's support for a democratic, stable, peaceful and progressive Bangladesh. He assured protection, safety and security of Hindus and all minorities in Bangladesh," Modi tweeted.

Hindus constitute about 8 percent of Bangladesh's 170 million people.

Tk 45,000cr stuck in shady loans

following the orders of the directors, and bank officials had nothing to do, according to three mid-level bankers at Islami Bank, Social Islami Bank and Exim Bank.

Requesting anonymity, they said several banks lent some companies large sums, in many cases multiple times their annual sales.

"So how will they repay the loans?" said one of the three bankers. His view was echoed by the two others.

'UNDUE BENEFITS'

Data show Islami Bank and Social Islami Bank started engaging in reciprocal lending in 2016 when these two banks were taken over by S Alam Group.

Exim Bank, National Bank, and IFIC Bank have already been involved in such lending practices for years, but on a limited scale. The size of such loans multiplied over the last 10 years.

When banks lend to relatives of their directors, they put the banks at risk since the financial strength of the borrowers is not seriously considered while sanctioning these loans, experts say.

These borrowers usually get undue benefits in taking loans, and repayment. Several banks are already facing risks because of such lending.

The financial statements of the companies in question should be analysed to see whether their assets and liabilities support the lending, Bangladesh Bank spokesman Mezbaul Haque told The Daily Star.

"If it is over-lending, the central bank will take action," he said.

EXIM BANK

Exim Bank provided Tk 8,115 crore, the highest amount of reciprocal loans, to several firms owned by directors of other banks. Of the amount, Tk 3,982 crore went to three companies owned by S Alam Group, whose chairman is Mohammed Saiful Alam, also chairman of First Security Islami Bank.

For its part, First Security Islami Bank lent Nassa Group, whose outstanding loan at the bank was Tk 734 crore at the end of 2023.

Nazrul Islam Mazumder, chairman of Exim Bank, himself took loans from most of these banks in the name of Nassa Group, which he owns. Nassa Group also secured loans from Islami Bank, where S Alam's son Ahsanul Alam is the chairman.

Exim Bank lent Tk 801 crore to Unitex Spinning and its associates, whose managing director Belal Ahmed is the chairman of Social Islami Bank (SIBL).

Nassa Group's outstanding loan to SIBL stands at Tk 651 crore.

Beximco and its various concerns' loan outstanding at Exim Bank was Tk 661 crore at the end of 2023. Beximco's Vice-chairman Salman F Rahman is also chairman of IFIC Bank. To IFIC Bank, Nassa Group's outstanding loan is Tk 637 crore.

Exim Bank lent Tk 2,671 crore to PowerPac Mutiara Keraniganj Power Plant, a sister concern of Sikder Group, controlled by Rick Haque Sikder and his brother Ron Haque Sikder. They had also directorships at the National Bank before they were forced out by the regulator.

Nassa Group's loan outstanding to National Bank was Tk 1,632 crore at the end of 2023.

Exim Bank's financial reports show Mazumder and his family contributed around Tk 250 crore to the paid-up capital of Exim Bank by holding 25 crore shares.

Under central bank rules, he is eligible to secure only Tk 125 crore (50 percent of the share value) of loans from the bank.

"This is a concentration of lending and this type of lending creates risks for a bank though this loan has not become defaulted yet," said Muhammad A (Rumee) Ali, a veteran banker.

"If any big borrower defaults, it would make the bank vulnerable. A good bank usually does not allow this type of lending due to such concerns," he said.

To avoid the loan concentration, the central bank rolled out a rule of a single exposure limit. But these banks have systematically dodged the rule by taking loans in the name of several firms.

"From the banking side, it is not difficult to find out who is the ultimate beneficiary of the loans, so they should be careful," said Ali, a former deputy governor of Bangladesh Bank.

SOCIAL ISLAMI BANK

Social Islami Bank (SIBL) provided loans of Tk 1,700 crore to directors of other banks, and its Chairman Belal Ahmed took loans from their banks. For instance, it lent Tk 1,049 crore to several firms of Infinia Group whose chairman is Ahsanul Alam, also chairman of Islami Bank.

In return, Islami Bank lent Tk 2,221 crore to two firms of Unitex Group whose managing director is Belal Ahmed.

Apart from these reciprocal lending, SIBL lent Tk 3,199 crore to several firms and sister concerns of S Alam Group. SIBL Chairman Belal Ahmed and S Alam Group's Saiful Alam are relatives.

Unitex Group holds around 4.5 crore shares in SIBL. This means the company's contribution to the paid-up capital of the bank is less than Tk 50 crore. Several relatives of S Alam also hold shares at the bank and their combined contribution to the bank's paid-up capital is around Tk 230 crore.

ISLAMI BANK

Islami Bank reciprocally lent Tk 4,333 crore to directors of other banks.

Apart from this, the bank's lending to S Alam Group's several firms alone stood at Tk 14,167 crore.

In Islami Bank, Ahsanul Alam, who is the bank chairman, and his relatives hold shares equivalent to Tk 350 crore of the bank's paid-up capital.

Since S Alam Group did not invest in Islami Bank in its own name, the bank has no legal binding in lending to the Group's companies.

OTHER BANKS

Similar practices were widespread at National Bank, IFIC Bank, First Security Islami Bank, Global Islami Bank and Union Bank.

National Bank for example lent Tk 7,080 crore to several companies whose owners are also directors of other banks. These loans were provided to Beximco Group, Nassa Group, and S Alam Group.

Sikder Group, in return, received loans from IFIC Bank, Exim Bank, and First Security Islami Bank.

Similarly, IFIC Bank lent TK 1,075 crore to Nassa Group and Sikder Group. In return, Beximco Group got loans from Exim Bank and National Bank.

IFIC Bank provided loans of Tk 1,020 crore to Sreepur Township Ltd, where Beximco is a joint venture partner.

Salman F Rahman and his son Ahmed Shayan Rahman hold 4.11 percent or 7.51 crore shares of the bank worth Tk 75 crore.

First Security Islami Bank provided those types of loans amounting Tk 2,442 crore.

Global Islami Bank and Union Group's reciprocal lending to each other was Tk 1,618 crore.

Several relatives of S Alam hold 30 crore shares at Global Islami Bank, meaning their investment is around Tk 300 crore in the bank. In Union Bank, S Alam Group holds shares worth Tk 570 crore.

The Daily Star first contacted most of these banks on June 15 and followed up with them on August 12-13. Representatives from National Bank, First Security Islami Bank, IFIC Bank, and Exim Bank did not respond or declined to comment.

Zafar Alam, chief operating officer at SIBL, said they sanctioned all loans in line with banking rules, and that the borrowers, including S Alam Group, are eligible for big loans.

Islami Bank CEO Mohammed Monirul Moula said they have been investing in Nassa Group and S Alam Group since the 1990s, and that the two groups' performance was excellent.

government bodies under "special circumstances".

Of the seven advisers, Nahid Islam and Asif Mahmud, two key organisers of the recent student movement that led to the fall of Sheikh Hasina's government, were given the additional charges of the information and broadcasting ministry and labour and employment ministry respectively.

Nahid is the adviser to the post, telecommunications and information technology ministry while Asif is at the helm of the youth and sports ministry.

Wahiduddin Mahmud, an adviser to the 1996 caretaker government, was given the charge of the planning and education ministries while Ali Imam Majumdar, who was appointed as special assistant to the chief adviser on Monday, was attached to the Chief Adviser's Office.

Fouzul Kabir, an economist and the founding chief executive officer of Infrastructure Development Company Limited (IDCOL), was given the responsibility of three ministries -- power, energy and mineral resources, road transport and bridges, and railway.

Jahangir, the new home adviser, will also hold the portfolio of the agriculture ministry. He served as the director general of the erstwhile Bangladesh Rifles (BDR) from January 21, 2003 to February 18, 2006.

Then quartermaster general of Bangladesh Army, Jahangir headed a 20-member army probe committee to investigate the carnage at the BDR's Pilkhana headquarters on February 25-26 in 2009 that left 74 people, including 57 army officers, dead.

The service of Jahangir was placed in the foreign ministry in December 2009. He went into retirement a year later.

Brig Gen (retd) Sakhawat hogged the headlines for his various comments after assuming the office of the home adviser. A coordinator of Anti-Discrimination Student Movement criticised him for some comments while BNP and its three associate bodies demanded his resignation.

Sakhawat, also a former election commissioner, on August 11 warned all political parties and said, "Now, if you think you'll take control of the markets and resort to extortion, you can go ahead and do it for a while. But I have requested the army chief to break your legs... I don't care, go to hell."

The next day, he advised the Awami League leaders and activists not to do anything that may put their lives in danger, and to reorganise the party with new faces.

"No one has banned your party [Awami League]. Banning any party is a bad culture," he told reporters after visiting some injured Ansar members at the Combined Military Hospital in the capital.

Mentioning the contribution of AL to the country, the retired army official said, "We cannot deny it [AL's contribution]. Reorganise the party and participate in the election whenever it is held."

The same day, Hasnat Abdullah, one of the key coordinators of the student protests, at a rally said, "We have seen the advisers talking about rehabilitating the murderers [Sheikh Hasina and other Awami League leaders]. We want to remind those advisers that you have come to power through the student-people uprising.

"We will not hesitate to oust you the way we made you advisers."

PORTFOLIOS REDISTRIBUTED

Finance Adviser Salehuddin Ahmed was given the additional charge of the commerce ministry while Law Adviser Asif Nazrul was given the responsibility of the ministries of cultural affairs and expatriate welfare and overseas employment.

Industries Adviser Adilur Rahman Khan was given the extra portfolio of the housing and public works ministry, and Environment, Forest and Climate Change Adviser Syeda Rizwana Hasan was given the additional charge of the water resources ministry.

Liberation War Affairs Adviser Farooq-e-Azam, who took oath of office on August 12, will also be in charge of the disaster management and relief ministry.

The portfolios of the other advisers will remain unchanged, said the chief adviser's press wing.

Thirteen advisers of the interim government, led by Prof Muhammad Yunus, took office on August 8 after Awami League President Sheikh Hasina resigned as prime minister and fled the country on August 5. Two more advisers took oath on August 11.

DRAFTS OF FOUR ORDINANCES OKAYED

The advisory council yesterday approved the drafts of the Local Government (city corporation) Ordinance-2024, Local Government (municipality) Ordinance-2024, Local Government (zilla parishad) Ordinance-2024, Local Government (upazila parishad) Ordinance-2024.

The advisory council felt the necessity of amending the four related acts regarding these local government bodies to ensure seamless services to the people and continue administrative activities for public interest in the current context, according to a press statement of the chief adviser's press wing.

The drafts will be placed before the president for promulgating ordinances.

According to the section 13 (Ka) (1) of the draft of the Local Government (city corporation) Ordinance-2024, in view of special circumstances, the government can remove the mayor and councillors of a city corporation in the public interest if it deems necessary.

The 13 (ka), (2) section of the draft said the authority defined by rule can, by order in the official gazette, make the removal of the mayors and councillors effective.

The government can also appoint "competent persons or officials" as the administrators to the city corporations until further notice, said the draft.

Similar provisions are there in the drafts of the three other ordinances to empower the government to remove the elected representatives of municipalities, zilla parishads, and upazila parishads in the public interest if it deems necessary.

India needs to move on from one person, rebuild ties

Says analyst M Humayun Kabir

PORIMOL PALMA

New Delhi needs to avoid stereotypes about Bangladesh and rebuild relationships with other political parties and people, instead of focusing on one person and party, said international relations analyst M Humayun Kabir.

It is also time for Dhaka to present ground realities regarding the students’ movement and the aftermath of Sheikh Hasina’s fall, and take initiatives to address Delhi’s concerns, he said.

In an exclusive interview with The Daily Star recently, Kabir shared the challenges of relationships with India and other foreign governments, along with the way forward in the aftermath of Hasina taking refuge in India following the mass upsurge on August 5.

“A few dimensions are emerging following Hasina’s fall. First, India is feeling a sense of loss. In the last 15 years, India enjoyed various strategic benefits and the relationship with Bangladesh deepened. Now there appears to be a pause in it,” said Kabir, former ambassador to the US and now president of Bangladesh Enterprise Institute.

“There is a sense within Indian society that the movement that ousted Hasina was initiated by BNP-Jamaat, which is not right,” he said.

> “ A few dimensions are emerging following Hasina’s fall. First, India is feeling a sense of loss. In the last 15 years, India enjoyed various strategic benefits and the relationship with Bangladesh deepened. Now there appears to be a pause in it.

“Second, they are trying to discover a foreign hand in the movement in Bangladesh, indicating Pakistan and China. Practically, none of them existed,” he also said.

“Third, India is concerned over the attacks on minorities, mainly Hindu community, and thinks the right-wing groups are behind them. However, it is mainly the miscreants that are conducting the attacks,” Kabir added.

“These are our concerns as well. The fact that students, citizens, and political and religious leaders have taken the initiative to ensure the protection of minority communities does not have much appreciation in India,” he continued.

The interim government needs to take serious measures to stop any violence against minorities, engage the Indian government and society and present the facts, the expert said.

On anti-India sentiment in Bangladesh, Kabir said, “When it comes to bilateral relationships, there are two layers -- government to government and people to people. However, the relationship with Bangladesh became mostly government-to-government due to India’s role in the last three elections of Bangladesh, which created a major gap in people-to-people relations.”

“Now, there is an opportunity for India to fill up this gap. If we get a sensible response from them and if they positively support our transition to democracy, then I think the loss will be recovered,” Kabir said.

“India has a challenge regarding what it will do with Hasina, who fled after massive killings. India should consider this aspect,” he said.

“Otherwise, India cannot recover the lost ground, because when they are focused on a person, it sends the wrong signal to Bangladeshi people,” Kabir said.

“My gut feeling is that India prefers Hasina to go to another country.”

Tk 3.11cr found in former senior secretary’s flat

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Dhaka Metropolitan Police recovered cash worth around Tk 3.11 crore, including local and foreign currencies, from the apartment of a former senior secretary on Babar Road in Mohammadpur yesterday.

DMP informed the matter to the media through a text message around 7:30pm.

The message said based on secret information, DMP conducted a raid and recovered a large amount of currencies from a house on Block F on Babar Road.

It said the flat belonged to Shah Kamal, former senior secretary to the Ministry of Disaster Management and Relief. Kamal served as secretary from 2015 to 2019 and senior secretary from 2019 to 2020.

According to DMP, they recovered approximately Tk 3.01 crore in BDT, prize bonds worth Tk 74,400, and various foreign currencies worth around Tk 10.03 lakh. The foreign currencies include $3,000; 1,320 Malaysian Ringgit; 2,969 Saudi Riyal; 4,122 Singapore Dollar; 1,915 Australian Dollar.

Visiting the spot around 8:00pm, this correspondent found that army personnel were deployed at the eight-storey building. The former secretary owned a flat on the first floor.

Mostafa Gazi, a trader, said they saw vehicles entering the building with sacks over the past few days. Suspecting something amiss, they kept watch on the house and learnt from a source that the sacks contained money. They later informed the army, he added.

Nurul Islam, a security guard at the building, said six to seven men, identifying themselves as DB members came to the house around 2:00pm. Nurul said Kamal did not reside there.

“He used to come here once or twice a week with two vehicles and stay for about an hour. One of the vehicles was still parked there,” said the security guard.

CONTROL OF DHAKA SLUMS, FOOTPATHS

Out goes AL, in comes ‘BNP-linked’ group

SHAHEEN MOLLAH and MUNTAKIM SAAD

With a shift in political landscape, new groups are vying for control at some slums and footpaths in Dhaka.

These new groups, claiming allegiance to the BNP, are attempting to assert dominance over areas previously controlled by the Awami League. Their targets include shanties, shops, and AL-affiliated clubs and offices in the slums.

However, in some areas, the grabbers have pulled back after warnings from BNP high-ups and the government.

In many places, citizen groups, including students, have become active in thwarting extortionists.

> Controlling the slums is crucial because these areas are often used by political parties to mobilise crowds for rallies and processions in exchange for money. Besides, AL syndicates made crores of taka by operating in the slums.

Controlling the slums is crucial because these areas are often used by political parties to mobilise crowds for rallies and processions in exchange for money.

Besides, AL syndicates made crores of taka by operating in the slums, illegally supplying gas and electricity to residents with the help of corrupt city utility staff.

The Daily Star visited five slums in the capital and found that in most cases, the new groups are targeting the shanties and shops that were previously under the control of the then ruling party.

In Karail slum, the largest slum in Bangladesh located in the capital’s Banani area, a new group has taken over several hundred shanties and shops that were previously controlled by pro-AL men.

They also vandalised some shanties and shops, looting valuables, locals said.

A local AL leader from Karail slum’s Bou Bazar unit said he is a wholesale trader with a shop there but is currently in hiding.

“I heard they tried to break the locks of my shop but were unsuccessful. I engaged in politics to protect my business from extortion, but now I fear it might be looted any time,” he said.

Another trader, who was previously associated with the AL Bou Bazar unit, said that pro-BNP men are now threatening him to leave the slum.

“I took a loan of Tk 16 lakh and built 10 shanties in the slum recently. About 10 years ago, I was involved with the Awami League. Because of this, they are now threatening my family to leave the shanties immediately,” he said while in hiding.

A slum dweller said while the new group has been taking over shanties, offices, and shops primarily used by AL-affiliated men, the general public has not yet been targeted.

In Sattola slum in Mohakhali, this correspondent found that pro-BNP men had taken control of the area by driving out members of pro-AL units.

Four more injured in Aug 5 clashes die in Dhaka

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Four people who were shot and burnt during clashes in the mass protests on August 5 have died over the past two days.

The deceased are -- Abul Kalam, 55, a lawyer from Cumilla Sadar upazila; Ujjal Hossain, 30, a mason from Chuadanga; Md Asif, 26, a shop employee in Noakhali and Al Amin Hossain, 27, a pharmaceutical sales representative from Barguna.

After completing autopsies, the bodies were handed over to their families yesterday.

Among them, Abul Kalam lived on Women’s College Road in Cumilla.

According to the report filed by Akib Noor, a sub-inspector of Dhanmondi Police Station, Kalam participated in a one-point demand protest for the government’s resignation on August 5.

He was allegedly attacked and shot by ward councillor Raihan and his group near Cumilla High School, adjacent to Cumilla Sadar Police Station.

He was taken to a local hospital that day and later transferred to Dhanmondi Popular Hospital in Dhaka on August 6. He passed away around 7:30pm on Thursday.

Need to be vigilant against ‘neo-fascism’

Says Fakhrul

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

BNP secretary general Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday called on party leaders and activists to stay vigilant to prevent “neo-fascism” from coming to power.

“We have defeated one fascism. We need to be vigilant so that neo-fascism does not come,” Fakhrul said at the BNP’s central office in Nayapaltan during an event marking party Chairperson Khaleda Zia’s birthday.

“...This struggle must continue. Otherwise, we will face a lot of danger,” said Fakhrul.

He said, “There might be a new conspiracy starting again to deprive people of their right to vote, and whether a new form of fascism is emerging... we need to remain vigilant about this.

“We have to keep in mind that this government is still a new government, an interim one... Its responsibility is to hold an election,” Fakhrul said.

“We have fought a long battle... If you

‘Yunus should be head of state’

Farhad Mazhar tells discussion; questions validity of constitution

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Poet and writer Farhad Mazhar yesterday called for the removal of President Mohammed Shahabuddin and proposed that Prof Muhammad Yunus be declared the head of state.

He said the mandate for Yunus comes from the students and citizens who led the mass upsurge, which toppled Sheikh Hasina.

He was speaking at a views-exchange meeting at Dhaka Reporters Unity, organised by Rastrachinta.

He said instead of focusing on the constitution, there is a need for a “people’s framework” rooted in the spirit of the mass upsurge to lead the country.

He said colonial powers required constitutions to control their subjects.

Mazhar accused the ousted prime minister of allowing torture camps, such as Aynaghar, along with enforced disappearances and murders, to operate under the guise of constitutional legitimacy.

He underscored the need to protect the gains of the mass movement, suggesting that if Dr Yunus were to assume office [of president], he could align the country’s

Dipu Moni, brother sued over attack on BNP leader's house

UNB, Chandpur

A case has been filed against former Social Welfare Minister Dipu Moni and her brother JR Wadud Tipu for attacking the residence of Sheikh Farid Ahmed Manik, president of the Chandpur district unit BNP.

Besides, 510 known and 1,000-1,200 unnamed people were made accused in the case. The case was filed on Thursday following a complaint lodged by A Razzak Hawlader, joint convener of Chandpur Municipal Jubo Dal, said OC Sheikh Mohsin Alam of Chandpur Sadar Model Police Station.

Manik, who was abroad for medical treatment during the attack, claimed the attack was carried out over political issues. The incident occurred on July 18 when armed individuals reportedly vandalised, looted, and set fire to Manik's house on JM SenGupta Road.

Rangpur jail: inmate dies in scuffle

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Rangpur

Tension remained high at Rangpur Central Jail after a prisoner died in a scuffle between two inmates yesterday.

The jail security fired bullets to bring the situation under control following several chases and counter-chases between prisoners and the jail security members.

The deceased is Baharul Badsha.

Mohammad Mobasshwer Hasan, deputy commissioner of Rangpur, said two prisoners --Badsha and Rafiqul Islam --had a scuffle over a fruit at the jail complex around 8:00am.

During the scuffle, Badsha fainted. The jail authorities took him to Rangpur Medical College Hospital where the doctors declared him dead, he said.

As the news of his death spread among prisoners around noon, they started staging protests inside the jail. At one stage, the guards had to open fire to control the situation. Rangpur DC said strong security measures have been taken in and around the jail.

STUDENT MOVEMENT

5 coordinators resign at CU

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

A coordinator and four assistant coordinators of the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement at Chittagong University resigned from their posts yesterday.

"We decided to resign as central coordinators are ignoring our decisions," Al Masnun, a coordinator, said at a press conference at CU. The four others are Sumaya Shikder, Dhruba Barua, Saiduzzaman and Esha Dey.

Masnun alleged central coordinators Rasel Ahmed and Khan Talat Mahmud have allowed students to enter halls defying a combined decision.

Besides, both coordinators failed to give them specific answers about increasing the members of the coordinating committee in CU, Masnun said.

Rasel or Mahmud could not be reached for comments.

While visiting the village home of Raihan, this correspondent saw the family in despair. Raihan's mother stood beside his grave and said, "What was my son's fault? He wanted a system without any discrimination but they shot my boy six times."

His father added, "It was our dream that he would someday join government service and support our poverty-stricken family. His untimely death has left our dreams shattered."

CDA, however, failed to complete it within the stipulated time, so the project's deadline was extended twice till June 2024, while its cost went up from Tk 3,250 crore to Tk 4,298.95 crore.

The 16.5-metre-wide expressway has a four-lane path with 14 ramps at nine points.

In August 2023, CDA decided to name it after former Chattogram city mayor ABM Mohiuddin Chowdhury.

Visiting Lalkhan Bazar point of the expressway recently, this correspondent observed that workers were installing electric cables to connect lamps.

Contacted, Mahfuzur Rahman, project director and executive engineer at CDA, said there is no work left except installation of lights on the expressway.

Asked why the expressway has not opened to traffic yet, Mahfuzur dodged the question and requested this correspondent to contact the CDA chairman to know the date for opening the expressway to the public.

Asked why it was inaugurated last year before all works were completed, the CDA official said, "They [high officials of public works ministry] forced us in this regard."

This correspondent went to the office of CDA chairman Mohammad Yunus for his comment on August 13 but found that he has not been coming to office since the former government's fall on August 5. He could not be reached over phone despite several attempts.

It also called upon everyone to ensure the protection of life and property by abandoning all forms of division, enmity, oppression, violence, and destruction.

In a separate press release, it also condemned the murder of three youths in the capital's Jatrabari area.

regulations with international laws and repeal the existing ones that contradict these standards.

Badiul Alam Majumder, secretary of Shushashoner Jonno Nagorik, also questioned the validity of the current constitution.

He stressed the importance of thoroughly investigating and bringing to justice those responsible for wrongdoings over the past 16 years to end the culture of impunity in the country.

Activist Rakhal Raha suggested that the interim government should reflect the true aspirations of the students and people who brought about the mass upsurge.

He emphasised the need for a counter-narrative to challenge the narratives propagated by Awami League-affiliated cultural groups.

Poet and journalist Mahbub Morshed urged students to remain vigilant and active on the streets to ensure the movement's outcomes benefit those who initiated it.

He also advocated for student union elections in educational institutions, especially universities, and proposed the formation of a Sangram Parishad to coordinate leadership across universities.

Prof Moshrekha Aditi Huq of Chittagong University highlighted the psychological, economic, and political challenges that lie ahead, emphasising the need to ensure law and order.

She called for amending the flaws in the current constitution and repealing repressive laws, including the Cyber Security Act.

Other notable participants included Chittagong University's Kh Ar Raji, Dhaka University's Prof Mohammad Azam, and journalist Faruk Wasif.

was my lifeline. He was a devoted son. He worked hard to take care of me. How am I going to live without him?" Maya told this correspondent.

Mostak hailed from Gouripur village under Sylhet Sadar upazila.

Salman Ahmed, a student protester who took Mostak to the hospital, said after Mostak was shot near the Muslim Quarters area, he was taken to Habiganj Sadar Hospital in critical condition.

He succumbed to his injuries there.

Noor Bakhat, a contractor supervisor who had employed Mostak, said he worked with them for 40 days till August 2 in the Bhangapool area.

"My two other sons distanced themselves previously. Now my youngest son is also dead. I have lost everything," Maya Khatun lamented.

"No parent should bear this loss. My son was innocent. Why did they shoot him?" she asked.

Four more injured

Shilu Akter, wife of the deceased Ujjal Hossain, said they live in Muktarpur village of Damurhuda upazila in Chuadanga.

Ujjal, a mason by profession, returned home from work on August 5 and went to Mollah Bazar in Muktarpur in the evening for tea. Protesters set fire to a hardware store in the market that day. Ujjal, along with several others, was inside the store. A gas cylinder in the shop exploded, leaving Ujjal and others severely burned.

They were admitted to the burn unit at DMCH. Ujjal had suffered 66 percent burns on his body. He died around 6:30am yesterday.

Jamal Uddin, a neighbour of the deceased Md Asif, said Asif's home was in Miralipur village in Noakhali's Begumganj upazila. Asif had recently started working at a shop. He attended a rally in Sonaimuri on August 5, where he was shot.

SI Faruk Ahmed of Shahbagh Police Station, who prepared Asif's autopsy report, said a bullet-hit Asif was admitted to the Sadar Hospital. He was later transferred to DMCH on August 7, where he passed away at 10:30pm on Thursday.

Nasir Uddin Nasir, general secretary of Jatiyatabadi Chhatra Dal, said Asif was a JCD activist.

Alongside Asif, at least 32 JCD leaders and activists died so far following the clashes, he said.

Russell Hossain, the younger brother of the deceased Al Amin Hossain, said they hail from Afra village of Jashore's Chowgachha. Al Amin worked as a salesman for a pharmaceutical company in Amtali of Barguna, where he had also lived.

After work on August 5, he was sleeping on the second floor of his residence when protesters set fire to the ground floor. The fire spread to the second floor, and Al Amin, along with several coworkers, was engulfed in flames.

Locals rescued and took them to Sher-e-Bangla Medical College in Barishal. The next day, he was transferred to Sheikh Hasina National Institute of Burn and Plastic Surgery in Dhaka, where he died at 5:30am yesterday.

Over 500 people -- mostly students -- were killed during the mass protests, which eventually forced Sheikh Hasina to resign and flee the country on August 5.

India needs to move

"India's other concerns are security and investment in Bangladesh. The interim government needs to reassure India regarding both of these aspects," the analyst said.

Dhaka and Delhi have settled some of the major bilateral disputes, including land and maritime boundaries, and improved connectivity. Also, there was a deal on rail transit through Bangladesh.

Regarding these, Kabir said the connectivity that is already there should continue, but the long-term issues like rail transit should be handled by a political government.

Before the fall, Hasina was looking for foreign investments from multiple countries, as Bangladesh was preparing to graduate from LDC by 2026.

Regarding the investments, Kabir said investors will keep watching what comes next.

But the concerns of human rights and media freedom will be important areas that need to be upheld, he added.

"The international community wants to know when the election will be held. The interim government needs to have a tentative timeframe for the election and communicate this when it engages with foreign governments," he said.

Ensuring justice for the violence during the students' protest will be another major task and engaging independent UN investigators would be a good idea for increasing credibility, Kabir added.

Out goes AL, in comes

Md Momin, who claims to be the president of the Jubo Dal Sattola unit, and Saddam Hossain, a member of the Banani thana Jubo Dal unit, were seen inside the AL office in the slum.

Saddam told this correspondent that he was born in the slum but was driven out by pro-AL men in 2014.

"After 10 years, I was able to return, but I no longer found my home. So, I am living here in this office," he said.

Momin said they had expelled the AL members from the slum. He claimed that Billal Chowdhury of the Sattola unit AL used to control some shanties in the area, but they have now informed tenants that they no longer need to pay rent.

In Kalyanpur Pora Bosti, a man named Ripon, brother of a ward-level BNP leader, allegedly seized control of 100 shanties on August 6 and 7.

They also vandalised the AL-affiliated office and shanties controlled by AL men.

Ripon didn't respond to calls.

Contacted, Darussalam Thana BNP convener Syed Abu Bakkar Siddique Saju said he would take immediate action if such incidents occurred.

Two days later, this correspondent found that the new group returned many of the shanties to the slum dwellers.

In Abul's slum, also known as "Abuler Bosti," in the capital's Bhashantek, a new group has vandalised several shanties and shops that were under the control of AL members.

A slum dweller Rubina Begum, who has been living in the Bhasantek slum for 20 years, said the political leaders use them as pawns.

"If we want to stay here, we have to abide by those who come into power," she said.

SCENES FROM FOOTPATHS

Meanwhile, Dhaka's footpaths have experienced mixed changes: in some areas, hawkers are no longer paying any fees, while in others, extortion continues.

Milon Patwary, general secretary of the Karwan Bazar Pick-up Van Samity, said that they recently handed over three linemen [agents of local politicians] to students when they came asking for fees.

He said previously, they paid Tk 1,200 per month for each vehicle, along with a one-time payment of Tk 10,000-15,000. However, this practice has ceased for a week.

Some traders mentioned that trucks are still paying Tk 200-300 each night for market entry.

A lineman in the CNG Stand area of Karwan Bazar said that they still collect Tk 6,000-7,000 from footpath vendors in the area.

Belal Hossain, a cloth seller in Farmgate, said they had to pay the local councilor's men, but this practice has stopped for a week.

"A few days ago, pro-BNP activists came, distributed leaflets, and instructed us not to pay any fees," he said.

Arif Chowdhury, president of the Jatiya Hawkers' Federation, said they have directed their units not to pay any money to anyone. If anyone attempts to collect fees, they have been instructed to hand them over to students or the army.

think our fight is over, you are mistaken. We are in a very precarious situation now."

Fakhrul alleged that former prime minister Sheikh Hasina is conspiring against Bangladesh from India.

Fakhrul also expressed concern over the low turnout at the event, questioning, "Isn't today madam's [Khaleda Zia's] birthday event? How many have come? Didn't you have a programme yesterday? How many attended? Very few... very few came today as well. Why? Has victory been achieved?"

of July 19, after parking his rickshaw in his garage in Mohakhali, he was making his way home when a stray bullet struck him in the chest.

The bullet came amid a clash between the protesters and law enforcers.

Although bystanders rushed him to a nearby private hospital, there was no doctor available.

He was then taken to Dhaka Medical College Hospital, where he succumbed to his injuries a few hours later, according to his elder brother, Hafiz Uddin.

The family didn't even have the financial means to bring his body home. They had to collect money from people to pay the ambulance driver.

Goni's body eventually returned to his village, Khariya Kazir Char in Sreebordi upazila, where he was laid to rest.

He left behind a grieving wife and three children, who are now facing an uncertain future without their sole provider.

Goni's life was a constant struggle to provide for his family. The meagre earnings from his job at the rice mill were not enough to feed his family of five.

Two years ago, he sent his second son, who was only 12 then, to work in a workshop, earning Tk 6,000 a month, as he could no longer afford to keep him in school.

The family was already burdened with a Tk 2 lakh loan, prompting Goni to move to Dhaka in hopes of earning enough to repay the debt.

"My father had dreams of a better life for us," said 16-year-old Md Shahidul Islam, Goni's eldest son. "But now, with him gone, I don't know what will happen to us."

Goni would send Tk 1,000-1,500 per week, which was the lifeline that kept the family afloat, barely covering their basic needs.

With no savings or property, the family has been relying on the villagers for help.

Shahidul fears that like his younger brother, he may be forced to drop out of school to support his family. Their three-year-old sister's education is now in jeopardy too.

"We don't know how we will continue or how we will repay the loan," Shahidul said.

seen even an eight-year-old girl being raped, yet some still blame the victim's attire," said a student from BRAC University.

Anika Arefin, a student of Dhaka University, said, "We have protested multiple times demanding safety for women, but freedom for women remains elusive due to cultural impunity."

Another student added, "We often face harassment on the streets, but there is little we can do due to a lack of proper evidence."

"There have been cases where girls were harassed by influential figures, like teachers, but they did not receive justice," she noted.

In addition to this rally, a group of women gathered last night at the base of the Raju memorial sculpture on the Dhaka University campus, demanding justice for the victim and proper investigation into all rape cases since Bangladesh's independence.

RANGAMATI, KHAGRACHHARI

Students protest removal of graffiti

STAR REPORT

Students in Rangamati and Khagrachhari held rallies yesterday, protesting the removal of graffiti created in support of the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement.

They argued that while discrimination has lessened nationwide, it has yet to reach the Chittagong Hill Tracts.

They demanded indigenous rights in Bangladesh.

"We want liberty from militarisation," said Kiko Dewan, a Rangamati Government College student.

Kiko also said conspiracies against indigenous people continue, as their land is being taken in the name of tourism.

He also called for creating voter lists that include only residents of the region.

Hundreds of students from various upazilas participated in the protests.

They criticised law enforcement authorities for obstructing their efforts to repaint the graffiti, which had previously been removed.

Meanwhile, people from the indigenous community brought out a procession in the Dhaka University area yesterday, demanding protection of their land rights and constitutional recognition.

They also sought justice for the killings of indigenous persons.

Safety, equal rights for all

Demands Manabadhikar Shongskriti Foundation

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The previous government's inaction regarding past incidents of violence against minority communities has encouraged communal extremist groups to continue their attacks and oppression on minorities, said the Manabadhikar Shongskriti Foundation.

The foundation also demanded the protection and equal rights be ensured for all, regardless of religion or ethnicity. In a press statement, they also condemned the recent violence and oppression against minorities across the country.

The statement said during the anti-discrimination student movement, students and the public spoke for the establishment of a non-communal, democratic state and society by eliminating discrimination.

However, after Sheikh Hasina's resignation, a certain group of people expressed their accumulated anger by attacking, vandalising, and setting fire to government and private establishments, as well as the homes and properties of many leaders of the then ruling party, including ministers and MPs.

Additionally, there were at least 205 incidents of attacks on the homes and religious sites of Hindu minorities in 52 districts, posing a threat to the security of minorities.

The Foundation expressed condemnation and outrage against these incidents, according to the statement.

They said during any political transition, religious and ethnic minorities are often the victims of attacks. Minorities flee their homes in the face of such violence, and some even leave the country.

Although it did not happen this time, many are attempting to label the recent attacks on minorities as politically motivated, which is seen as an effort to sidestep the real situation and create excuses, they said.

The statement said the Foundation believes it is Inaugurated but inaccessible

Ctg elevated expressway still not open after 8 months

SIFAYET ULLAH, Ctg

The first elevated expressway in Chattogram city has yet to open to traffic, even though over eight months have passed since its inauguration in November last year.

The delay has been a disappointment to commuters in the port city, as they keep waiting for a respite from unbearable traffic congestion.

When the expressway was inaugurated, city dwellers hoped that their suffering would finally come to an end. However, the reality has been a far cry.

"We are still suffering from traffic jams and don't know how much longer this will go on," said Abdul Khalek, a private job holder who commutes regularly from the city's GEC intersection to Customs area.

The Chattogram Development Authority constructed the 16-kilometre-long expressway, from Lalkhan Bazar to Patenga, at a cost of Tk 4,298.95 crore, to smooth communication and boost the economy.

Even though the construction work was incomplete, former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina inaugurated the expressway last year, a decision that drew flak from city planners, who termed it a bid to show off the development achieved by the then-ruling party ahead of the election.

Delwar Hossain Mazumdar, executive member of Forum for Planned Chattogram, earlier said the CDA failed to fulfil people's expectations.

The Executive Committee of the National Economic Council approved the government-funded Chattogram Elevated Expressway project in July 2017, scheduled to be completed by June 2020.

50 more hospitalised with dengue

UNB, Dhaka

Fifty people were hospitalised with dengue fever in 24 hours till yesterday morning.

Of the new patients, 14 were hospitalised in Dhaka, said DGHS. Some 901 patients are receiving treatment in different hospitals across the country.

A total of 8,980 dengue cases and 74 deaths have been reported since January 1, 2024.

Last year, a total of 1,705 people lost their lives due to dengue, making it the deadliest year on record.

More than just NUMBERS

A 17-year-old student died with bullet wounds in Dhaka. A 38-year-old rickshaw puller fatally shot in Dhaka. A 24-year-old service holder shot dead in Habiganj. At least 400 lives (the actual number could be much higher) were lost when law enforcers opened fire on protesters during the recent unrest. But these victims are not just statistics; they are children, parents, and friends. In this report, we try to know the stories of three such names among these tragic numbers.

'They shot my boy six times'

Says mother of Raihan, 17, who died of bullet wounds

SOHRAB HOSSAIN, Patuakhali

"My son did nothing wrong; why was he shot dead? I demand justice for my son's death," said Rehena, mother of Raihan, 17, who died after being shot in Dhaka's Badda on August 5.

Raihan had been visiting his cousin's house in Badda since early July, where he got involved in the quota-reform protests and opted not to return home in Chaulabunia village in Patuakhali Sadar upazila until the students' demands were met.

A candidate for Dakhil examination in 2025 from a madrasa in Patuakhali, Raihan hailed from a poor family. His father Kamal Akon works as a day labourer, while his mother Rehena is a homemaker. His younger sister Jannati is only five years old.

On the morning of August 5, Raihan joined a protest in the Badda area when he was hit by six bullets in his chest and legs during a firing at the student protesters.

He was taken to DMCH, where the on-duty doctor declared him dead.

'Had to beg for money to take his body home'

Says son of Goni Miah, a rickshaw-puller who was shot dead

NILIMA JAHAN

Six months ago, 38-year-old Goni Miah left his home in Sreebordi, Sherpur, with hopes of changing his family's fortune.

A former rice mill worker, Goni believed that pulling a rickshaw in Dhaka would provide the financial stability his family desperately needed.

However, instead of returning with the promise of a better future, Goni's lifeless body returned home in a coffin, plunging his family into deeper despair.

Goni lived in the Nakhalpara area of Tejgaon. On the evening

No parent should bear this loss

Says mother of Mostak, 24, who was fatally shot

MINTU DESHWARA, Moulvibazar

Maya Khatun, 65, was relieved when her youngest son, Md Mostak Mia, 24, got a job as a lineman under a contractor of Bangladesh Power Development Board in Habiganj.

After his two elder brothers started living separately following their marriages, Mostak had become her only hope. However, everything changed on August 2 when Mostak, who went outside to buy shoes in the afternoon, got hit by a bullet amid a clash between protesters and law enforcers in Habiganj town.

KURSK REGION

Russian forces destroy Ukraine unit

Repel 12 missiles targeting Crimea bridge

AGENCIES

Russian forces destroyed a Ukrainian reconnaissance and sabotage unit that was armed with weapons from Nato countries in Russia's western Kursk region, the RIA state-run media agency reported yesterday, citing unidentified security sources.

"Samples of small arms manufactured by the United States and Sweden have been seized at the liquidation site of a Ukrainian sabotage group near the village of Kremyanoe in the Kursk region," RIA cited a Russian security official as saying.

Kursk attack will force Russia to start "fair" peace talks, says Zelensky aide

Russian troops seized a Swedish-made Automatic Carbine 5 assault rifle as well as a US-made M4 carbine assault rifle and M2 Browning machine gun, RIA cited the official as saying.

Russia has been battling Ukrainian forces in Kursk since August 6, when Kyiv launched a lightning incursion in the largest attack on sovereign Russian territory since World War Two, reports Reuters.

A Ukrainian presidential adviser said yesterday that Kyiv's cross-border incursion into Russia's Kursk region was required to convince Moscow to start "fair" peace talks.

Meanwhile, Russia said yesterday that it had repelled a night-time attack using 12 US-made missiles on the landmark Crimea bridge built on the orders of President Vladimir Putin after Moscow annexed the peninsula.

Smoke rises above the burning shopping mall Galaktika hit by shelling, which local Russian-installed authorities called a Ukrainian military strike, in Donetsk, Ukraine yesterday.

ISRAEL'S MONTHS-LONG OFFENSIVE

Gaza's undertakers stack 'graves on top of graves'

AFP, Deir el-Balah

Undertakers are working like bricklayers in a Gaza cemetery, piling cinder blocks into tight rectangles, side by side, for freshly dug graves.

More than 10 months into the Gaza offensive, so many bodies are arriving at the cemetery in Deir el-Balah that the men, working in the hot sun, hardly have space to bury them.

"The cemetery is so full that we now dig graves on top of other graves, we've piled the dead in levels," says Saadi Hassan Barakeh, leading his team of gravediggers.

Barakeh, 63, has been burying the dead for 28 years. In "all the wars in Gaza", he says he has "never seen this". Previously, Barakeh also oversaw burials at the nearby Ansar cemetery, which covers 3.5 hectares.

But now "the Ansar cemetery is completely full. There were too many dead", he says, his clothes smeared in dirt from digging graves.

He now handles just the Al-Soueid cemetery, with its 5.5 hectares of graves. Yet even with one cemetery instead of two, he works "every day, from six in the morning to six in the evening".

"Before the offensive, we had one or two funerals per week, maximum five," he says, wearing a white prayer cap that matches his long beard.

"Now, there are weeks when I bury 200 to 300 people. It's unbelievable."

Gaza's death toll of just over 40,000 in more than 10 months of offensive, according to the Hamas-run territory's health ministry, is straining its people as well as its cemeteries.

Barakeh bears daily witness to the tragedies. Hoe in hand, he gives encouragement to his 12 workers as they prepare and close dozens of graves every day.

At night, however, some images are hard to forget. "I can't sleep after seeing so many mangled children's bodies and dead women," he said, adding: "I buried 47 women from one family."

"I buried a lot of women and children, and only two or three guys from Hamas," says Barakeh.

If Israelis "have a problem with (Yahya) Sinwar, why do they harm children?" he adds, referring to the alleged October 7 attacks mastermind who is now Hamas's overall leader. "Let them kill Sinwar and all the others, but why the women and children?"

Mounds of freshly dug soil are reminders of recent burials. Graves with white headstones fill nearly all the available space, while men dig new holes in the few vacant areas.

The team forms a human chain to carry the cinder blocks, whose price has soared since Gaza's factories closed due to a lack of fuel and raw materials.

"One shekel ($0.27) before the war, 10 or 12 today," he lamented.

Besides gravediggers and the workers carrying cinder blocks, hardly anyone comes to funerals anymore, Barakeh says.

High above his head, the constant hum of an Israeli surveillance drone serves as a reminder of the aerial threat creating a steady stream of bodies.

COLLEAGUE'S MURDER

Indian doctors step up protests

Call for work stoppage

AFP, Kolkata

Indian doctors stepped up nationwide protests and strikes yesterday after the rape and murder of a colleague, a brutal killing that has focused outrage on the chronic issue of violence against women.

The discovery of the 31-year-old's bloodied body on August 9 at a state-run hospital in the eastern city of Kolkata sparked nationwide protests.

In Kolkata, hundreds of doctors and other healthcare workers gathered demanding action, with protests also held yesterday in the capital New Delhi, and Nangpur in Maharashtra state.

"We want justice", doctors chanted in Kolkata, waving handwritten signs that read: "No safety, no service!" The Indian Medical Association has called for a "nationwide withdrawal of services" for 24 hours starting today, with suspension of all medical procedures at private hospitals.

India's Kashmir to vote in polls from Sept 18

REUTERS, New Delhi

India will hold provincial elections in the Himalayan territory of Jammu and Kashmir from September 18, the Election Commission said yesterday, the first regional polls there in a decade and five years after New Delhi scrapped the region's special autonomy.

India's only Muslim-majority region, Jammu and Kashmir has been at the heart of more than 75 years of animosity with neighbouring Pakistan since the birth of the two nations in 1947 at independence from colonial rule by Britain.

The larger Kashmir region is divided between India, Pakistan and China. The part ruled by India enjoyed a special status that was revoked by Prime Minister Narendra Modi's government in 2019 and the state was split into two federally-administered territories. The decision to hold fresh elections follows a December order by India's Supreme Court that rejected petitions challenging the revocation of Kashmir's special status and set a deadline of September 30 for holding provincial polls.

Nearly 9 million people are registered to vote for the 90-member legislative assembly, the election panel said. Voting will be staggered over three stages between September 18 and October 1.

who chairs a committee tasked with liaising between the government and social groups such as teachers and activists, said, "Right now we have no interest in forming a political party. Our focus for the time being is solidifying the mass uprising and assisting the government to sustain and consolidate."

Earlier in the afternoon, Reuters, quoting Mahfuj, reported that the student leaders were discussing the formation of a political party to end the duopoly of Hasina's Awami League or the Bangladesh Nationalist Party of her rival Khaleda Zia.

This newspaper also talked to Nasir Abdullah, another member of the liaison committee, who said, "We will reach out to people from all walks of life. If the people of Bangladesh think that something new is required, then it will happen."

He also said there would be propositions from their end to the people, adding, "If we want to end the chaos that had been prevailing post-independence, we have to start afresh and dream of a new Bangladesh."

Hasnat Abdullah, another key coordinator of the platform, told this newspaper that they do not have any plans to form a political party as of now.

"The time for discussing the formation of our own political party has not yet come. We are now busy with those who are now in the hospitals after being injured in the protests," Hasnat told The Daily Star.

Sweden's Public Health Agency told AFP on Thursday that it had registered a case of the Clade 1b subclade -- the same new strain that has surged in the DRC since September 2023, and the first such infection outside the African continent, according to the agency.

The patient was infected during a visit to "the part of Africa where there is a major outbreak of mpox Clade 1", epidemiologist Magnus Gisslen said in a statement from the agency.

The mpox strain that caused the case in Pakistan was not immediately known yesterday, the Ministry of Health said in a statement. "The affected person has come from a Gulf country," the statement said.

It's violation of human rights: Sarjis

Sarjis termed the incidents in different parts of Dhaka, including Dhanmondi 32, as "unexpected" and said these do not go with the "spirit of the mass uprising".

"In a viral video, we saw that a person of my father's age was made to perform squats while holding his ears; a person of my father's age was stripped; the phones of many people were checked; a woman of my mother's age was beaten up; and we witnessed various incidents of attacks on our journalist brothers and sisters," Sarjis said.

"Our uprising was against corruption and oppression. We want a Bangladesh where everyone will be able to speak, express their opinion, and work according to whatever ideology they believe in.

"We saw several such incidents where the students were involved. We do not know which ideology they hold, nor can we define them," Sarjis said.

The leaders of the platform sat on Thursday night and took two decisions, according to Sarjis.

The first decision was to expel any coordinator or co-coordinator from their team if they were found to be involved in Thursday's incidents.

Their second decision was to take whatever step was necessary as a "pressure group" to ensure legal steps against those involved in the incidents. Justice will be ensured through the two coordinators in the interim government.

"Those, who carried out incidents like stripping people or assaulting them, violated human rights. These incidents are not legitimate by any means," Sarjis said.

Speaking of the history of Bangladesh, Sarjis said the contribution of some people is undeniable and each of them should be remembered for their contribution.

"No one can be belittled deliberately for political purposes. Sheikh Mujibur Rahman should be given the respect he deserves; Similarly, Ziaur Rahman should be given the respect he deserves," he said.

PRESSURE GROUP, NOT AUTHORITY

Sarjis made it clear to the students that the Movement, which led the uprising that replaced the government of Bangabandhu's daughter Sheikh Hasina with an interim administration headed by Professor Muhammad Yunus, was "not an authority, but a pressure group".

"Our clear message is that where the police, traffic police and other law-enforcing agencies come to, the students should hand over their responsibility and leave. They must go back to their educational institutions and classes," he said.

"The Anti-Discrimination Student Movement does not promote anything like searching hostels and hotels or forcing a professor to step down. We are not an authority. We are a pressure group. We can demand the removal of corrupt or power-abusing people, but we cannot force them to do it [resign]."

Sarjis alleged a large group of people have become fake coordinators or co-coordinators of the movement.

"We have even received information that a committee [of the movement] was formed in Uttara Sector 12. They went to a mosque and asked its governing body to resign.

"But we only gave committees in universities and other educational institutions. These people [fake coordinators] are doing things to fulfil personal and political objectives. We will decide on this platform after the interim government becomes stable."

Sacked army officer Ziaul arrested investment adviser to former premier Sheikh Hasina, and ex-law minister Anisul Huq were also placed on a 10-day remand in the same case on Wednesday, a day after they were arrested in Dhaka's Sadarghat area.

Ziaul, former director general of the National Telecommunication Monitoring Centre (NTMC), an intelligence agency under the Directorate General of Forces Intelligence, was arrested based on secret information, according to a Whatsapp message from the Dhaka Metropolitan Police.

Later in another message, DMP said Ziaul was handed over to police on Thursday night after he went to the army for shelter. He was later arrested.

NTMC is responsible for monitoring, collecting, and recording information and communication data as well as for the interception of electronic communication such as phone calls, emails, and social media accounts.

Ziaul was detained in a dramatic circumstance around midnight on August 7 after the plane on which he was fleeing was brought back from the Dhaka airport runway to the boarding bridge, sources said earlier.

Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Arfatul Rakib placed him on remand after investigation officer Sajib Mia, sub-inspector of New Market Police Station, produced him before the court with a 10-day remand appeal in the Shahjahan murder case, said a sub-inspector working in the court.

Ziaul told the court that since his detention on August 7, he was kept at Aynaghor (a secret detention facility).

He also claimed that Aynaghar was not his creation, and no one ever filed any complaint, case or even a general diary against him. Claiming his innocence, Ziaul said that he has cardiovascular issues and he did not go to the New Market area during the incident on July 16.

The defence lawyer, also a younger sister of Ziaul, sought bail along with cancellation of the remand appeal.

Ahead of his court appearance, the army, BGB, and additional police personnel were deployed at the court premises.

In Aynaghor, numerous individuals were reportedly held captive and subjected to torture for years during Hasina's administration.

ALLEGATIONS AGAINST ZIAUL

Maj (sacked) Arif Hossain, one of the convicts in the Narayanganj seven-murder case, confessed before a Narayanganj court that two days after the murder, Col Ziaul Ahsan, then Rab additional director general (operations), gave former Rab-11 commanding officer Lt Col Tareque Sayeed Mohammad an assignment to kill Nur Hossain.

Nur Hossain is the main accused in the case, and he allegedly paid Rab members Tk 6 crore to kill Narayanganj city councillor Nazrul Islam, one of the seven victims.

Col Zia, then second-in-command of the force, called now sacked Lt Col Tareque and Maj Arif to his Rab headquarters office and gave the order, according to the charge sheet of the 2014 murder case that contains the statement.

Ziaul earlier, however, denied that he gave any such orders.

He joined the Bangladesh Army as a commissioned officer in 1991 and is alleged to have been involved in enforced disappearances and assassinations during his time in the Rab.

Despite various allegations, the Awami League government promoted Ziaul to the rank of Major General.

further intensifying the violence. In some cases, the security forces were reported to have employed vehicles and helicopters that bore the logo of the UN."

The number of reported killings in revenge attacks since that time still remains to be determined. Those killed include protesters, bystanders, journalists covering the events and a number of members of the security force, the OHCHR said.

"Thousands of protesters and bystanders have been injured, with hospitals overwhelmed by the influx of patients."

The majority of deaths and injuries have been attributed to the security forces and the student wing affiliated with the Awami League, it says.

"These casualties resulted from the use of live ammunition and other force against protesters who while acting violently reportedly were not armed, or only lightly armed, as well as from instances of security forces unlawfully using lethal force against protesters posing no apparent threat, unarmed protesters, and bystanders, including at least 4 journalists and at least 32 children, with many more injured and detained -- a number of whom were seemingly deliberately targeted.

"From July 12 to August 3, at least 450,000 unknown persons and 2000 identified persons were reportedly registered for offences in at least 286 criminal cases in Dhaka alone, including a combination of named and unnamed individuals -- many members of the opposition reportedly among them."

Suing hundreds of individuals as "unnamed" increases the risk of widespread arbitrary arrest and detention, it observes.

"Block raids were conducted in various locations of Dhaka city and near other university and college campuses. During these operations, large numbers of law enforcement personnel surrounded the area in question, prevented anyone from leaving, and conducted house searches based on intelligence information and, in several cases, without presenting judicial search warrants. Law enforcement agencies claimed that they were arresting individuals involved in violence and property destruction, based on analysis of their social media activity.

"Reports indicate that a number of those arrested were subjected to ill-treatment and even torture while in police custody."

The authorities also enforced widespread restrictions on communication, including internet, between July 18 and July 23 and again on August 4 and 5, severely affecting the rights to freedom of expression, and to peaceful assembly, and other fundamental rights.

The government had claimed the internet shutdown was due to the destruction of key infrastructure by protesters, but information the OHCHR received indicates the government did it deliberately.

Also, the prolonged countrywide curfew and restrictions on communications disproportionally restricted freedom of movement.

The UN body suggested that the political actors prioritise de-escalation and prevention of any further loss of life or injury and refrain from reprisals. They also need to uphold the rights to freedom of expression and peaceful assembly, protect minority communities, advocate for accountability and prevent further rights violations.

The UN also suggested that the transition process is transparent, accountable, inclusive and open to the meaningful participation of all Bangladeshis.

The interim government should take steps to restore democratic order and rule of law through an inclusive and participatory process guided by human rights, develop a systematic approach to vetting for any appointments to and dismissals from the judiciary, security sector and other institutions.

The recommendation to the interim government mentions, "Provide law enforcement agencies with clear instructions limiting the use of force, and especially firearms, in line with international human rights standards, ceasing any use of pellet guns, and, when use of force is absolutely necessary and proportionate, prioritising instead restrained use of less-lethal weapons; emphasise a de-escalation approach to all public order management."

"Refrain from deploying Border Guards and Rapid Action Battalions to any protest or other public order management tasks and initiate a comprehensive review of these forces, their functions, command, control and accountability mechanisms and operational doctrines."

It recommended providing reparation and effective remedies to victims and protecting all related evidence, including CCTV footage and other recordings.

It suggests establishing broader truth and accountability measures beyond investigation of the most recent events, while facilitating open dialogue to address social, economic, and political grievances.

The UN also recommends allowing media to operate freely and safely.

It urges the international community to support Bangladesh to ensure a transition in which human rights are fundamental and to support fact-finding and accountability efforts.

The full UN report can be found on OHCHR website.

My movement is rooted in oneness: NAWSHABA

A 2018 nightmare– that often haunts Quazi Nawshaba Ahmed– was to some extent brought to ease on August 5. On the path to creating a discrimination-free nation, Nawshaba believes that the state is now prepared to hear the uncensored story of her journey that completely reformed her into a new person.

SHARMIN JOYA

On August 4, 2018, Nawshaba was detained by RAB from a shooting spot in Uttara. Under Section 57 of the ICT Act, she was charged with spreading rumours on social media about the student protest for the demand for road safety. It is to be noted that she was not the only one who was charged under that act. Photographer Shahidul Alam, lawyer Imtiaz Mahmood, journalist Kajol, and many other activists were charged under this act for speaking against the former AL-led government.

After being sent to the lockup, Nawshaba was denied bail and granted several days of remands as well. She was released from Kashimpur Central Jail on August 21, 2018, considering her health condition. Her case is still active.

We talk to this forgotten hero, arguably one of the first celebrities to speak out against the former regime.

What instigated you to speak out on this uprising, having been persecuted in 2018?

The first time I discovered how deeply students were hurt by being called 'Razakars' (war criminals), it struck me to the core. It brought back the pain I felt in 2018 when I was constantly branded a traitor, a 'Razakar'.

It took me nearly a year to recover from the trauma and the relentless self-doubt, haunted by the belief that I had made a costly mistake. However, in that one reaction from the students, I found validation—confirmation that I wasn't wrong, just as my father had reassured me until his passing.

My 11-year-old daughter, who is aware of the situation, was looking up to me. How could I not be alert to what was happening? Though I wasn't in the front row during the protests, I still showed up most days, quietly blending into the back, hiding my identity.

Could you please open up about what you went through since August 4, 2018?

I was actively participating in the peaceful protests, because I believed the students' demands were justified. Even the day before, I joined them on the streets. On August 4, while I was at the shooting location, a few protesters called me with alarming news—students were being brutally attacked. They sent me photos and video clips of the attacks and repeatedly sought my help. In a state of panic, I reached out to a police officer several times to confirm; but when I couldn't get any clear answer, my anxiety grew, and I thought of asking for help.

I never imagined that my message would mark me as a traitor. I had no idea it would brand me as a war criminal.

My Facebook account was hacked within 13 minutes following the live broadcast and I had no clue what was going on with my account. I was flooded with calls—hundreds, mostly threats. Many urged me to delete the video. My father was the sole voice of support, calling to say, 'I'm proud of you'. He also foresaw the trouble I might face soon, warning, 'You will be in danger,' and asked if I wanted to leave the shooting location. I told him I couldn't abandon my work until it was done. He respected my decision and waited until I finished. By then, a group of officers in plainclothes arrived and forcibly took me away.

Recently, in an interview, you mentioned being taken to Aynaghor (The Mirror House), where the disappeared were kept during the former government's regime.

I have never mentioned this to any media! When I was taken from the shooting location, they blindfolded me, and throughout the entire ordeal, I was kept in the dark about my surroundings. I also want to set the record straight: since that interview, many news outlets have reported on my situation without reaching out to me first. This is completely unethical, and the information they've shared is inaccurate. I have not disclosed any personal details on record yet.

After you were released on bail, your life became even more challenging. Could you elaborate on that?

My father was my steadfast support, and with his passing, my daughter has taken on that role. When I returned, my parents faced the harsh criticism that I had tarnished our family's reputation. They heard that, despite my father's background as an army officer, I had failed entirely and brought shame upon us.

During that period, I was so traumatised that I couldn't understand how I could be accused of such things. I've always strived to serve my country to the best of my ability. My father's stories about 1952, 1969, 1971, and Bangabandhu inspired me deeply throughout my life.

I was ousted from the roles I had been promised and blacklisted by many. It's a harsh reality that only a few, including some journalists, stood by me during that crisis. Their reports were pivotal in helping me secure bail quickly—at least, that's how I see it. I don't need to attend the court hearings now as my lawyer handles it.

Now that many stories are coming to light and you're willing to open up, how do you feel?

Given the many lives lost in the recent mass uprising, let us honour their sacrifices by steadfastly pursuing the vision of building a new and better country.

At the same time, seeing people vandalise Bangabandhu's statue, set fire to his house, and destroy monuments broke my heart. My movement is rooted in oneness, love, and peace. The profound transformation I've undergone over the past six years drives me to pursue peace in the face of any form of anarchy. While many may mock me, my vision remains resolute and undeterred.

From barbers to trash cans: 'Maharaja's' fresh take on classic themes

The Tamil action thriller Maharaja, featuring Vijay Sethupathi, Anurag Kashyap, Mamta Mohandas, and Sachana Namidass, demonstrates director Nithilan Swaminathan's filmmaking skills and how a skilled writer can turn an old concept into a captivating film.

The film begins with a barber seeking revenge after his home is robbed. He tells the police that his "Lakshmi" was stolen, leaving them confused about whether it's a person or an object, and his quest to recover it begins.

Nithilan revisits his signature themes and filmmaking style in his second film, using life's unpredictability to link plot elements—like a falling fan or a sudden crash. By juxtaposing timelines and central motifs, he engages the audience's imagination.

For example, while a monkey-faced bag was key in his first film, Maharaja features a trash can that prompts viewers to question if something loses its value simply because it's deemed useless.

What truly elevates the film is Vijay Sethupathi's performance. In his 50th role, the actor immerses himself effortlessly into this intriguing character, delivering several memorable scenes that stand out and are sure to be appreciated.

WHAT'S PLAYING
ADHAR

Adhar, the debut single from Azwaad Rajarshi's EP Bhul Ronger Phul, is a haunting exploration of darkness and light, both lyrically and visually.

Produced by Sinjan Saadat of the Mothership Records, the track is a melancholic, soothing blend of indie sensibilities and raw emotion. The lyrics, rich with imagery, paint a vivid picture of despair and longing, while the accompanying video, shot on a rainy day in Dhaka, complements the song's moody atmosphere.

Azwaad's voice, paired with the minimalistic production, creates an intimate experience that resonates with listeners, making Adhar a strong and memorable introduction to his craft.

Freedom of the press must be protected

Recent events show past excesses may recur if we are not careful

It is a testament to our unique times that journalists are having to fight against the same abuse and harassment that they did when an authoritarian government was in power. But it does hurt more now because of the expectations created by the student-led mass uprising that overthrew the Awami League government. We understand that the interim government that replaced it requires time to establish full control and effect change, but the responsibility to ensure a safe environment for journalists primarily falls on them, as well as the political and pressure groups active on the ground.

That it would not be smooth sailing for journalists after Sheikh Hasina's fall became clear on the very day, when at least eight TV channels and three newspaper offices in Dhaka were attacked. While many assumed these were spur-of-the-moment reactions and would not be repeated, subsequent events, especially on August 14-15, have upset the calculation. On August 14, as many as 20 journalists were injured when the Chattogram Press Club was attacked and ransacked. The same day, a journalist was hacked in Pirojpur. And on August 15, a number of journalists were assaulted and even made to delete photographs they had taken in Dhaka's Dhanmondi Road 32 on the occasion of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman's death anniversary.

In fact, the scenes unfolding in Dhanmondi were quite disturbing, as young men interrogated pedestrians, checked their identity cards and phones, and also manhandled visitors who came to pay respects to Bangabandhu. They also prevented any documentation, with announcements being made over loudspeakers instructing journalists and spectators to refrain from filming. Many of these young men were armed with iron rods, plastic pipes, bamboo, and wooden sticks. These harsh measures were apparently part of efforts to prevent a so-called counter-coup by Awami League and allies, with BNP and its student wing staging sit-ins at various locations in Dhaka and the Students against Discrimination movement holding a "resistance week" programme. While none of them acknowledged responsibility for the harassment, it just goes to show how chaotic the situation is at the moment.

Clearly, it is not just media freedom that is at stake in such a situation; human rights in general are being violated, too. This is painful to see in the wake of an uprising that wanted to break people free from these very shackles of oppression and subjugation. It's apparent that fascism has not left the building even if the fascists have. The rights to publish, speak, organise or mourn are all inviolable ones. It was, however, heartening to see the student leaders vowing to protect these rights. At least four key coordinators of the students' movement have strongly condemned the excesses that occurred in Dhanmondi and elsewhere. They cautioned against "fake platforms" pretending to represent students and also pledged to expel anyone from their platform if found guilty of human rights violations.

We appreciate the swift and unequivocal condemnation. But it is important to remind the student leaders that they must be more cautious going forward. Other political forces that are now active and pushing their own agenda must also answer for any crimes committed in their names. Most importantly, the interim government must take stern actions to prevent such crimes, especially against journalists. Together, they must prevent a return to the same excesses that the past regime made a habit of committing.

Make city corps fully operational

Public services severely disrupted in the absence of mayors, councillors

We are quite concerned about the mounting suffering of people across the country due to the disruptions in services provided by city corporations and municipalities in the absence of their top functionaries. Reportedly, nine city mayors out of 12 are in hiding, while 205 municipal mayors out of 330 are also on the run. The situation is the same down the ladder, with 44 zila parishad chairmen out of 64 and 319 upazila parishad chairmen out of 495 also in hiding. In Dhaka, among the 129 councillors spread across both wings of the city, a staggering 118 are missing. Similar absences have also been noted in other cities as well.

These public representatives have gone into hiding after the fall of the Awami League government on August 5 in the face of a mass uprising led by students. Their escape, out of security concerns, is understandable since all of them were Awami League leaders, but it also shows how disastrously imbalanced the power structure was with an overwhelming majority of these important positions filled by one party, leaving little space for rival parties who could have served under the present circumstances. The mass escape has not only created a sudden power vacuum, but key services are also being disrupted, especially in city corporations and municipalities.

Among the services that residents get from city corporations are street lighting, waste management, mosquito control, birth and death registration, trade licensing, etc. In Dhaka, the responsibility of sewage management was also handed over to the city corporations. Many city roads still remain broken and unclean since August 5. Then there is the challenge of fighting dengue, which needs exemplary leadership given the debacle of last year's dengue season. There are many such issues and grievances that public representatives are expected to engage on and address.

Against this backdrop, we welcome the interim government's decision to give full mayoral responsibility to the chief executive officers of the city corporations, which will take care of the operational side of these institutions. We think the authorities should also make a decision about the municipalities and local parishads soon. Having administrative officers at the helm of these bodies comes with the expectation that they will perform better and more honestly than political recruits, who have repeatedly failed to address public grievances. That said, the need for having public representatives directly connected with the grassroots levels cannot be overemphasised, despite their questionable track records. Whatever the administration now does to weather these challenging times, it must ensure good governance.

How to ensure justice for the atrocities committed in the past

Kamal Ahmed

KAMAL AHMED

The Awami League regime, which sought global recognition as a model of governance, has ironically left behind a legacy marred by unprecedented brutality against its own citizens. The scale of state-sponsored violence and repression under Sheikh Hasina's rule rivals some of the worst autocracies in the world, like Egypt's Hosni Mubarak. Bangladesh is also a unique example where a military dictator, Gen HM Ershad, succeeded in resettling in a democratic political framework but a popular leader, who jointly led a movement for restoration of democracy, degraded herself by turning into a worse dictator.

The recent student-led uprising, evolving into a broader civilian insurrection, has been dubbed by some as the "Gen Z Revolution." However, lacking a coherent revolutionary agenda or a well-defined path for enacting fundamental change, this movement remains more of a chaotic and prolonged transition towards democracy than a fully fledged revolution. Consequently, the pursuit of justice for the regime's atrocities faces significant challenges.

In a true revolution, justice would be swift and uncompromising. Special tribunals or summary trials might have been established to address the crimes committed under Hasina's rule, and eventually under the rule of her predecessors. However, in a society aspiring to democracy and the rule of law, the process of ensuring justice becomes more complex. Fairness—both real and perceived—is paramount, and justice must not only be done but also be seen to be done.

At present, there is widespread anger as well as a clamour for accountability, particularly for those responsible for the deaths of at least 440 people, maiming of thousands, and false imprisonment of countless others in politically motivated cases. The challenge for the transitional government is immense, as it inherits a nation teetering on the brink of chaos and division. The economy has been devastated with billions of dollars syphoned abroad by the deposed regime's cronies, while the civil service is riddled with corruption. Inflation is soaring, and unemployment is rampant. The security apparatus, weakened by the violent fallout of crackdowns on dissent, is struggling to maintain law and order.

Rebuilding the capacity of the police and other law enforcement forces to pre-regime levels could take years. In this context, conducting thorough investigations, preserving crucial evidence, and prosecuting powerful figures with significant followings will require not only strong political will, but substantial support from both domestic and international communities as well.

Before moving forward with prosecuting the crimes of the previous regime, several critical issues must be addressed. The public's demand for justice focuses on two key periods: the atrocities committed between July 15 and the establishment of the interim government, and the systemic repression that began when the former government dismantled democratic safeguards by abolishing the 13th Amendment of the constitution and suppressing the opposition. The violations during the former prime minister's rule—enforced disappearances, extrajudicial killings, arbitrary arrests, and custodial torture—constitute crimes against humanity under the Rome Statute.

Ensuring justice for these crimes will require bringing all responsible parties to account, from top political leaders to the enforcers on the ground. However, there is growing impatience among the victims' families, students, and human rights activists who are eager to see prosecutions initiated. While some individuals have already initiated legal action, these hasty private efforts risk failure due to insufficient evidence or lack of corroborating witnesses, which will politically benefit the perpetrators. The interim government must take decisive actions to develop a realistic prosecution strategy that can secure convictions, particularly against the former prime minister and her top associates. Eventually, the same must be done to address crimes committed by the past regimes as well.

There are also discussions about potential prosecutions at the International Criminal Court (ICC) under the Rome Statute. Several human rights groups are preparing submissions to the ICC's chief prosecutor. As Bangladesh is a signatory to the Rome Statute, the ICC has jurisdiction over crimes committed within the country. However, international prosecutions are notoriously complex and require significant global support, which may not be forthcoming until all national legal avenues have been exhausted.

The pursuit of justice for the regime's atrocities against students and citizens during the quota reform protests and the subsequent mass uprising faces significant challenges. FILE PHOTO: RASHED SHUMON

Law adviser Prof Asif Nazrul has suggested that Sheikh Hasina could be tried at the International Crimes Tribunal (ICT) for her role in the killings between July 1 and August 5 during the student-led movement. However, concerns remain about the ICT's reputation, given its past weaknesses during trials for crimes committed during the Liberation War of Bangladesh. Additionally, remnants of the old regime and their sympathisers may attempt to undermine any legal proceedings. The biggest impediment, however, would be the revival of Awami League, unless it decides to break away from the tradition of a hereditary leadership of the party.

The failure to bring Ershad to justice serves as a stark reminder of the challenges facing the country's judicial system. Prosecuting Sheikh Hasina, arguably the worst dictator in the nation's history, will be even more challenging and must be pursued before public memory fades. A promising development is the offer of assistance from UN human rights chief Volker Türk, who has proposed helping investigate the alleged crimes. The UN's expertise in evidence collection, preserving them, and prosecution support could prove invaluable, whether the trials occur at the ICC or in domestic courts.

Another possibility is the application of universal jurisdiction, which allows courts in any country to prosecute those responsible for atrocities, regardless of where the crimes were committed. This was the legal principle that led to the detention of Chilean dictator Augusto Pinochet in the UK and subsequent return to his homeland, where he was convicted and eventually died in prison. While it is unlikely, even India could theoretically prosecute Hasina under universal jurisdiction, according to the UN Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment of 1984.

Mob justice goes against the spirit of the student movement

In recent weeks, our country has echoed with the triumphant cries of a movement sparked by students demanding the end of a repressive regime. As someone who stood shoulder to shoulder with these courageous individuals, I have felt the euphoria of our shared victory and the weight of our collective responsibility. The triumph was not just a political victory; it was a testament to the power of unity and the enduring spirit of resistance. But as we bask in its aftermath, a disturbing reality is surfacing: the rise of mob justice. Instead of celebrating our newfound freedom with dignity and respect, we are witnessing a troubling shift towards a new form of oppression, one that mirrors the injustices we once fought to eradicate.

I want to be clear: I am not here to belittle anyone or question their commitment to the cause. But as we stand on the threshold of a new era, it is imperative that we address the ways in which our movement's ideals are being compromised. If anything, history has taught us that the most dangerous threat to freedom is not always an external oppressor, but the internal corruption of the very ideals we fought to protect. In the wake of our triumph, some disturbing reports have surfaced—of so-called "representatives" of the movement seizing rooms once occupied by oppressive leaders, of individuals being harassed and assaulted for their attire or political affiliations, of phones being checked and hotels being raided. This behaviour, cloaked in the guise of justice, is nothing more than a new form of oppression.

The essence of our movement was never solely about toppling a tyrannical regime, but about ushering in a new era of inclusivity and respect. Our cause was built on the promise of a society where discrimination would find no refuge and where every voice could be heard without fear. Yet, instead of fostering a culture of tolerance, some of us have chosen to perpetuate a different kind of oppression, casting aside the very principles that fuelled our fight. It is crucial to recognise that true freedom is not merely the absence of tyranny, but the presence of equity and respect for all. The shift from people championing the anti-discrimination movement to some of them engaging in acts of mob justice represents a perilous deviation from our original mission. We must confront this shift head-on and reaffirm our commitment to the values that inspired us. I appreciate that the leaders of the anti-discrimination student movement addressed the recent incidents and made it known that these are reprehensible, unacceptable acts.

In a true democracy, criticism should not be equated with betrayal, but embraced as a necessary part of the discourse. To label dissent as support for a discredited regime undermines the very essence of the freedom we sought to achieve. The measure of our success should be found not only in the regime we dismantled, but in our ability to uphold democratic values in the face of new challenges. While it is definitely too early to comment on where we are headed, we must engage in these difficult conversations and keep things in check.

The interim government now faces a pivotal moment. The decisions made now will shape the future of our society and determine whether we won't become the very power we sought to overthrow. It is time for courageous leadership that embraces the full spectrum of democratic principles, including the protection of individual rights and the encouragement of open discourse. The challenge before us is not just to avoid the pitfalls of authoritarianism, but to actively build a society that reflects the highest ideals of justice and equality. This requires more than just symbolic gestures; it demands substantive actions and a commitment to creating systems that promote transparency, accountability, and inclusivity. The revolution was not an end but a beginning—a chance to forge a new path and to ensure that the mistakes of the past are not repeated. True freedom is not a privilege for the few, but a right for all. Power must be used to uplift, not to oppress.

To the student leaders and coordinators who guided us through this historic struggle, I urge you to recognise the immense responsibility that comes with the power we have gained. You have the ability to set an example, to lead with integrity and ensure that the ideals we fought for are not lost in the process of rebuilding. When you first called for action, you sparked a fire within countless students who stood with you, ready to support the cause in any capacity. Now as you reform the political infrastructure, please remember the power and influence you hold over these students, and guide them so they can lead from the front to uphold the rule of law and ensure equity and justice for all. As we navigate this new era, let us remain steadfast in our commitment to the values that united us.

REVOLUTION AND EDUCATION

Some thoughts on the 'political' in universities

Much has changed since the all-out protests began in mid-July, galvanising an entire nation, from aggrieved mothers to despondent rickshaw pullers, to bring down a 15-year-old authoritarian regime. It was indeed people's power and it was infectious. The movement mobilised not only street agitation and online activism—forms of protest we are already familiar with—but also an unprecedented array of civic actions. While in the fervour of the moment when old binaries of young and old, right and left, and secularists and religionists converged, it seems urgent to consider how these convergences may play out in the transformation that is being called for.

At this moment, all eyes are on the interim government. The need to restore law and order, stabilise and grow the economy, and institute a robust political system and culture that do not fail again makes the tasks complex and onerous for the new government. How will the country recoup, regroup and rebuild? Eventually, when the country emerges from the transitory interim phase to a democratically elected one, will all that the revolution called for in spirit prevail in structures? How will inclusion be defined and what kinds of processes will ensure it? Experts will need to work out how the current phase and its policies are emboldened to achieve this desirable end.

Many are already talking about constitutional changes and mechanisms such as truth and reconciliation that might provide a means to political rectification. We may also look at the Arab Spring which sociology professor Asef Bayat refers to as "refolution"—a term referring to a phenomenon which resulted in neither revolution, nor reform—to draw lessons from and work towards the required redistributive justice to make the transformation meaningful. While experts work on the state apparatus, economy and political mechanisms, society also has a role to play. As a part of civil society, universities may play their part in this transition as universities are the very sites where it all began.

Universities have long provided fertile grounds for student protests that have also taken on autocratic regimes in the past. However, public universities carry deep political fractures polarising both student and faculty bodies. They are now confronted with reform within and between students, faculty, and overall institutional governance. Private universities have been relatively free of deep political factionalism, partly by design. In recent years, they have resisted pressures to introduce student politics with the stated intent that students remain focused on academics. While this confirmed for many that private university students are placidly apolitical, their involvement in recent events proved otherwise. In fact, their participation in the July movement—propelled by their participation in earlier movements such as the 2015 No Vat on Education protests and the 2018 road safety movement—allow us to reconsider whether the old binaries of public and private hold anymore.

VISUAL: SALMAN SAKIB SHAHRYAR

Private universities are now much more diverse in class composition than they were a decade ago. The trickle-down effect of the neoliberal economy has enabled a broader class to invest in better education. Additionally, there is a generational shift towards prioritising higher spending on education. This diversity in class composition is equally reflected in differing opinions and stances on a variety of issues ranging from gender, religion, history and national identity. The fact that distinct groups have not yet coalesced around these important issues has been a boon for the movement. The coming together to depose an autocratic regime could, therefore, not be prevented by the strength of or competition between distinct groups.

Such a position that is driven neither by discrete ideology nor through any particular party patronage has lived up to its potential of galvanising a nationwide movement. It is now imperative to wrestle with the challenges posed by the need to enunciate the new "political" in the nation and elsewhere. An important part of this wrestling lies in the recognition of the social capital formed through the coming together of students. Universities that thrived on factional student politics need to ensure that the capital and collective energy do not fall into old structures and patterns of behaviour.

Whether public universities will ban politics altogether and how this will affect any possibility of its return later require careful thought and execution. Private universities, where national politics through student groups was not allowed, may strengthen some of the ways in which they have already been nurturing students' growth and promoting student-centricity. Students rising to the call of post-revolution clean-up and maintenance demonstrate civic engagement that universities who actively promote it can further harness. Embedding civic engagement into the curriculum and establishing university-wide networks that bring students together for the common good would be an excellent way to protect some of the social capital accrued from this movement.

As students engage societal problems and work collectively to address them, they learn by doing and preparing for collaborative action in many spheres of life, including engaging higher authorities with reason and purpose. It is this form of engagement that paves the way for societal changes. Universities that have responded appropriately to students' justified demands and universities that have formal or informal mechanisms of standing by students' rights to protest, are well-placed to deepen their channels of student engagement in order to cultivate their collective and creative energy.

Last but not least, the classroom is of essence. Paolo Freire in Pedagogies of the Oppressed spoke of education as the seed for societal change, highlighting pedagogies in classrooms as the place to start. Freire argues that education must be redone to move away from a banking mode, where wisdom is deposited from teacher to student, to one where learning is born out of students being allowed to think outside the box. In this framework, the classroom is a place where "wisdom" is co-created and both teacher and student learn and teach each other new things. Enlivening a classroom with present-day realities, engaging students to think about them collectively, and allowing them the space to express their aspirations while guiding them through the ethical import of their thinking are how we retain the relevance of Freire today. As educators, we firmly believe that when such approaches to education are pursued, they provide the basis for healthy, inclusive societal change, and many students in this movement are surely richer for having received such an education.

As the country emerges from the revolution to rebuild, universities must deepen some of the good work they have done and rethink what has not worked. We have seen that students are capable of teaching themselves many things, including bringing down a regime. They must constantly remember what brought them together across many divides, including the public-private one, in order to arrive at the kernel and essence of this new politics. As the dust settles, universities must come forward with students to enunciate the new political and effective pathways to achieve its objectives. Students need university classrooms as much as classrooms need the students. We must embrace this relationship and do it through mutual respect so that our students remain the life force of the nation. It is urgent that we, as teachers and students, get back to our calling in education as co-learners towards the continued and arduous task of nation-building.

Universities must prepare for the transition of students

BLOWIN' IN THE WIND

Dr Shamsad Mortuza
is professor of English at Dhaka University.

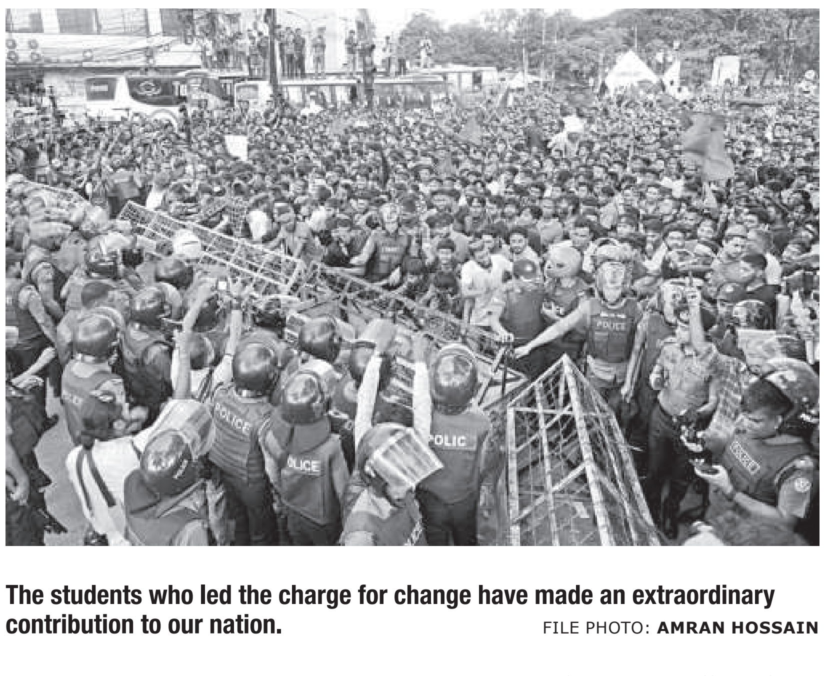
SHAMSAD MORTUZA

In a recent circular, the education ministry asked all educational institutions to reopen and resume their activities. It is a curious call, to say the least, as all academic institutions have been technically open following the ISPR statement issued on August 5, the historic day of regime change. The resumption of classes, however, is a different ball game.

The traumatic memories of losing hundreds of lives due to unprecedented police brutality are still fresh in the public imagination. The resignation or forced removal of many institutional heads, including 19 vice-chancellors of public universities, has created a vacuum in academic leadership, further complicating the situation.

The challenges of reopening academic institutions, therefore, extend beyond simply unlocking their doors. While talking to our students, it was obvious that many of them are experiencing severe stress. Their mental state is a mix of grief, pride, and revolutionary zeal, which makes it difficult for them to return to any academic routine. While some are upbeat about the national duty that they have embraced to bring structural change to the system, many others have developed anxiety, depression or PTSD, requiring psychiatric help before they can effectively engage in their studies. Some of them are recovering from their injuries or undergoing medical treatment. There is also a growing tension between revolution supporters and former collaborators or supporters of the old administration, which has created mistrust and conflict among students. For example, the regular students who have returned to the dormitories of the public universities are adamant about resisting any entry by their opponents.

The lack of leadership and the ongoing purges among staff and students are also not helpful in restoring normalcy. The makeshift administration can bring necessary modifications to academic schedules and lesson plans, but these could have long-term repercussions on students' academic and professional futures. No one knows how to undertake essential activities such as exam administration, curriculum planning, and the maintenance of academic standards, creating an atmosphere of uncertainty and instability. Private university students in a strict semester-based paid system may now face a graduation delay. The economic disruption may handicap many of the students from paying their fees and living expenses. It is possible that many public universities will see the return of session jams. Those preparing for critical public or international exams such as HSC, O Levels and A Levels face additional pressure to meet deadlines.



The students who led the charge for change have made an extraordinary contribution to our nation.
FILE PHOTO: AMRAN HOSSAIN

The primary challenge lies in a mindset shift, however. Students seem unwilling to withdraw from public service or associated visibility. Their revolutionary achievements, such as graffiti, traffic control, and street-cleaning, are garnering significant media attention. Their resistance to the resumption of classes may stem from a supposed compromise with their revolutionary drive. Perhaps they fear that their withdrawal at this stage may leave their calls for change incomplete, and some old politicians could return with vengeance. The environment is polarising. Reopening educational services will require a sophisticated strategy that prioritises rebuilding leadership, providing psychological support, and ensuring all students feel secure and respected in the academic community.

As educators, we understand that we can curate the classrooms as a space for healing and rebuilding. With some professional training and workshops, we can teach our colleagues to transform our classrooms into a structured environment where students can regain a sense of normalcy, purpose, and direction. Students can critically reflect on their actions and activism during these counselling sessions to renew their sense of purpose.

It will require a lot of tact for us to deal with the students, who were previously known to be generally apolitical but are now politically charged. Their desire for "cleansing" operations targeting peers and faculty members believed to be complicit with the previous regime will require deft and professional handling. This is a delicate topic, and institutions must inform their staff to deal with the atmosphere of distrust and retribution. If needed, the University Grants Commission (UGC) or other teachers' associations can organise workshops on creating a congenial educational environment where unity and mutual respect are essential. Faculty members, too, must approach students with understanding and patience, recognising the immense stress and trauma they have experienced. Faculties should adjust academic expectations to accommodate the students' current emotional state, and provide guidance and mentorship to help them navigate this challenging transition.

To support students effectively, educational institutions must implement trauma-informed teaching practices and provide resources to help students heal and succeed. Creating safe spaces on campus for open dialogue and fostering understanding among students is crucial. If needed, universities should also establish partnerships with their alumni bodies and social organisations to provide additional support services, such as housing, food security, and legal assistance. Some of the universities have already named some of their installations after the martyred students or held memorial services to begin the healing process.

Students have done their part in bringing a positive change. The onus is now on us to channel the revolutionary zeal that fuelled the protests into constructive efforts to build a more inclusive and tolerant academic community. The students' ability to foster reconciliation and solidarity in the aftermath of removing a tyrant will measure the true victory of their movement. This is the time to set aside differences and work together to ensure that institutions can resume their vital role in shaping the future leaders of our nation.

Reopening universities is not just about resuming academic activities, but about rebuilding them as centres of learning, healing, and unity. As members of the academic community, we must rise to the challenge of rebuilding our institutions with the same courage and determination that fuelled the revolution. The students who led the charge for change have already made an extraordinary contribution to our nation. They must now return to classroom to continue their activism, not retreat from it. By resuming their studies, students will equip themselves with the knowledge and skills necessary to guide our country into a new era of justice and prosperity.

JULY 36

A win for the youth

AZRA HUMAYRA

On a Wednesday that history will not soon forget, the High Court rendered its verdict: the October 4, 2018, notification, which had hastily terminated the Freedom Fighter quota in first and second-class government employment, was declared illegal. It was June 5, a day that will be remembered throughout history—the kind of occasion that future generations will point to as the spark that set off the events that occurred just two months later. A day that will leave an indelible impression on us, compelling us to read the pages of history books to comprehend the chain reaction of events that it triggered.

When I joined the protest on July 7, a familiar surge of purpose welled up within me. It was a flashback to 2018 when I stood shoulder to shoulder with thousands, demanding safer roads, a movement that felt like a moral imperative. This time, the stakes were different, but no less important. We were battling for fair representation, insisting on a redistribution of power that did not leave the majority in the dark. What we wanted was reformation, a restructure that would finally allow our voices to be heard in the halls of power rather than drowned out by the noise of the status quo.

After the verdict was handed down on June 5, the students began their protests the following day, though it wasn't until July 1 that they truly took to the streets. The movement gained momentum as other universities joined the cause on July 3. When their demands continued to fall on deaf ears, the students called for the 'Bangla Blockade,' a move that effectively brought the country to a standstill. Yet even this drastic measure failed to compel the authorities to take them seriously. July 14 marked the beginning of the end when former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, in a press conference, ignited a firestorm with her words: "If the grandchildren of the freedom fighters don't get quota benefits, should the grandchildren of Razakars get the benefit?" This incendiary remark set the nation ablaze, and the students, wounded and indignant, began to cry out, "Chaite gelam odhikar, hoye gelam razakar"—we demanded our rights, and now we're branded traitors.

July 15 will forever be etched in our collective memory as a day of profound horror. On that day, the goons of the Bangladesh Chhatra League descended upon the protesting students with a fury that was as brutal as it was unprovoked. I was at the Dhaka University campus that day, and the scenes I witnessed are not ones that will fade from my mind anytime soon. This wasn't just the reality for the students of Dhaka University; it was the reality for students across the nation. The tragic death of Abu Sayed marked one of the first martyrdoms of the protest, and from July 16 onwards, the bloodshed spread throughout Bangladesh. The very soil of the nation was painted red.

By July 19, we were entirely cut off from the outside world, as the government imposed a curfew and shut down internet services. Life carried on in an eerie semblance of normalcy, even as the media spun a narrative that now seems almost laughable in hindsight. For the first time in recent years, I found myself grateful for my newspaper subscription, as it offered a sliver of the truth amidst the boom of state propaganda. On July 21, the Supreme Court dramatically reduced the number of government positions reserved for war veterans and their descendants, and the authorities, in their arrogance, believed that the students' demands had been met. They expected the protesters to go home without ever acknowledging the lives lost in their quest to be heard.

When the internet finally flickered back to life on July 23, I was confronted with the full scale of the atrocities that had been unfolding while I had been fed the state's narrative. The true horrors—deaths, injuries, police brutality, block raids, mass arrests, and the so-called 'protection' offered to coordinators by the police—became impossible to ignore. What had started as a protest had evolved into a full-blown uprising.

The success of the 'Drahajatra' on August 2 united the masses with the students, and suddenly, the entire nation had coalesced around a single demand: the resignation of the Prime Minister. August 4 saw the deaths of another 114 people, yet even this arbitrary use of force could not quell the spirit of the people. On August 5, the day we had reserved for the 'Long March,' Sheikh Hasina finally stepped down, bringing an end to her over 15-year reign. The streets erupted as waves of people poured out to celebrate a hard-fought victory, marking the end of an era that had come at an unspeakable cost.

From the battle for quota reforms to the toppling of a government, July was a month marked by both triumph and tragedy. Unsurprisingly, August 5 is called July 36. Never before has an uprising in Bangladesh witnessed such a staggering loss of life in such a short span of time—a fact that renders this victory all the more torturous and historic.

It was the demise of a regime that failed to heed the voices of its youth, a regime brought to its knees by a movement that began with students but swiftly evolved into a nationwide outcry. The popular outrage was fuelled by a litany of grievances: rampant corruption, grotesque economic disparity, soaring commodity prices, mass disenfranchisement, and the erosion of democratic institutions. Yet, despite the overwhelming force wielded against them, the students' resolve remained unbroken. Their spirit, undeterred by brutality, formed into a vow to combat injustice and ignorance, igniting a movement that would alter the course of the nation's history.

When I joined the protest on July 7, a familiar surge of purpose welled up within me. It was a flashback to 2018 when I stood shoulder to shoulder with thousands, demanding safer roads, a movement that felt like a moral imperative. This time, the stakes were different, but no less important.

Reading articles, I have seen authors compare the uprising with the 1968 protest that erupted from the Sorbonne in France. Television shows sometimes have gone so far as to label demonstrators as 'French' in their spirit of resistance. But to compare the struggle of Bangladesh's youth to a mere echo of past movements is to overlook the extraordinary passion with which they fought—a passion unparalleled by any previous uprising. One French slogan, Sois Jeune et Tais Toi—"Be Young and Shut Up"—became a rallying cry for a generation demanding the right to be heard.

Bangladeshi students had similar objectives; they wanted to live in a country where they could use their rights without fear of retribution. Historians will write about the new Bangladesh, but it is critical to remember that it originated from the dreams and hopes of a generation that refused to be silent.

The streets will remember

Following August 5, as no traffic policemen were found on duty on the roads, students took charge of traffic management in different parts of the capital, as well as various other parts of the country, as volunteers. The country will forever be indebted to its student populace for the role it has played during these trying times.

OPINION

Chaos, uncertainty, and our newfound social awareness

ILLUSTRATION: ABIR HOSSAIN

ZABIN TAZRIN NASHITA

The Anti-Discrimination Student Movement has been a resounding success, as evident by the resignation of the Sheikh Hasina-led government. The interim government has been sworn in, and hopes of reformation are running rife throughout the whole country. Of course, the anticipated moment of truth came at a great price with rampant vandalism and looting following suit, and the most shameful of all, attacks on minorities and their properties.

As the lives and properties of religious minorities, especially the Hindu community of Bangladesh, were under threat, the general population wasted no time in coming forward to offer their protection and aid. With the police being on strike, students of Bangladesh took to regulating traffic. Initiatives were also taken and executed for cleaning up different areas, including the parliament building. Last but not the least, this movement has inspired an unprecedented level of social consciousness and made way for open conversations surrounding various pressing matters.

The movement has attempted, from time to time, to make room for the voices of minorities and their sufferings. While activists have been vocal in calling for the demilitarisation of Chittagong Hill Tracts for some time, the issue is finally gaining much needed traction among the youth. The notion "none of us are free until all of us are free" is circulating all over social media, expressing solidarity with the indigenous people of Bangladesh whose rights have been violated for decades now.

The abduction of human rights activist Kalpana Chakma in 1996 was spoken of with reverence, and as a symbol of struggle and resistance. The youth has rightfully adopted the belief that the total reform of Bangladesh we all seek cannot be achieved without protecting the lives and lands of indigenous communities.

The Anti-Discrimination Student Movement has exposed many underlying issues in the system. The murder of Sagar-Runi; seventeen-year-old Tanvir Mohammad Toki; Avijit Roy, activist and founder of the internet blogging community Mukto-Mona; Sohagi Jahan Tonu, a student who was raped and murdered within the Cumilla Cantonment area –have resurfaced holding the regime accountable for its lack of transparency.

The Anti-Discrimination Student Movement has also made space for conversations surrounding class consciousness. Class consciousness refers to the subjective awareness of a social class, typically the working class, of their shared interests, and the need for collective action to achieve change. It helps us understand how to fight back against exploitation and put aside differences to protect our rights.

This movement has shown us a picture of unity within the social classes that we've only read about in the history of the Liberation War. People from the working class, such as rickshaw pullers, shopkeepers, electricians and construction workers came forward in helping the protesters. In turn, donation links and crowdfunding were arranged for martyred or injured members of the working class. Not to mention, people engaged in constructive conversations about the unjust treatment suffered by the working class and the need for their voices to have a platform.

As the lives and properties of religious minorities, especially the Hindu community of Bangladesh, were under threat, the general population wasted no time in coming forward to offer their protection and aid. With the police being on strike, students of Bangladesh took to regulating traffic.

This movement has not only caused us, the youth of Bangladesh, to be more socially and politically aware, it has also helped us understand how important it is for representatives of all communities to have a voice. Amidst the chaos and uncertainty that seems to have taken over the country, our newfound social awareness remains a sliver of hope for a better future.

Nazmul 'wants to resign', but what's next for BCB?

SPORTS REPORTER

Word around the Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) is that Nazmul Hassan Papon has informed one of the directors that he is in favour of resigning as board president. Many other directors, however, claimed to have no knowledge of the president's wish.

It is understood that the BCB president is currently in London. Many of the board directors are untraceable since the fall of the Awami League government on August 5, and those that are there, are facing a crisis.

BCB sources told The Daily Star on Thursday that one of the board directors got in touch with Nazmul and has been told that the board president is ready to cooperate.

"I have heard that Papon bhai told one of our directors that he wants to cooperate. I have not talked to the BCB president directly. I have only heard that he is ready to cooperate but haven't heard of resigning," a BCB director told The Daily Star on condition of anonymity.

BCB CEO Nizamuddin Chowdhury could not be reached over phone at the time of filing this report.

A few BCB directors who are still present, have informed this newspaper that they have asked for a guideline on how to go on about their proceedings from relevant authorities. "What would be best is that if a guideline comes from the interim government that's in our constitution and within ICC's legal framework, it would be good for us," one BCB director said on condition of anonymity yesterday.

"We are still waiting for that guideline," another director said.

According to the BCB constitution, only the BCB president or a vice-president can call for a board meeting. Despite there being provision for two vice-presidents in the current constitution, the BCB did not appoint any. Thus under the current circumstances, a board meeting cannot be called unless the BCB president himself communicates to the BCB CEO that he wants to resign and calls for a meeting even if he is absent from the meeting. He can also appoint a board director as vice-president in his absence and then the vice-president can call a meeting.

The resignation will then have to be approved or rejected by the board.

If a resignation comes from the president, elections are the likely due process and will have to be called since there is nothing in the BCB constitution regarding an interim body.

The BCB president can also communicate and call for a board meeting to appoint two vice-presidents through elections among the 25 directors.

The other way to resolve the current scenario in absence of key figureheads is through the National Sports Council, who can appoint two new directors in place of the ones currently in place. The two new NSC directors can then be appointed as vice-presidents through a meeting to resolve the crisis at the board.

Along with the present scenario in the board, the fate of the upcoming Women's T20 World Cup, originally scheduled to be played in Bangladesh, hangs in the balance. Following an initial August 15 deadline, there is not much time left for ICC to make a decision. For the board, the guideline it seeks would clarify what moves it can make to resurrect Bangladesh's chances of hosting the tournament.

BPL in limbo as Sk Jamal, Sk Russel set to miss out

ANISUR RAHMAN

Troubles for the forthcoming season of the Bangladesh Premier League (BPL) have deepened further as two top clubs –three-time BPL champions Sheikh Jamal Dhanmondi Club and treble winners Sheikh Russel Krira Chakra– are seemingly set to miss the upcoming edition.

It has been learnt that Bashundhara Group, which used to sponsor both clubs, has backed out as financers, leaving the sides without a sponsor with just three days left in the transfer window.

Players and coaches of Sheikh Russel KC and Sheikh Jamal DC have confirmed that the clubs will not compete in the forthcoming season, however, no officials from Bashundhara nor from the two clubs could be reached for confirmation.

"The officials who usually handle the forming of the squad for Sheikh Russel, told us about a week ago that they won't form a squad," said a coach who was supposed to be part of Sheikh Russel's coaching staff, seeking anonymity.

National team defender Rahmat Mia, who was supposed to join Sheikh Russel from Abahani, said, "The day after the resignation of Sheikh Hasina, some 20-25 players were kicked out of a Whatsapp group which was the main medium of communication among players, officials and coaches.

"Since then, we have no idea whether Sheikh Russel are going to play or not. No one from the club has officially communicated with us though some 20 to 25 players have signed contracts and have received token money ranging between Tk 5-10 lakh from the club," he said.

It has been learned that Sheikh Russel director-in-charge Ismat Jamil Akhond has been trying to form the squad after Bashundhara pulled out as sponsor but the information could not be verified as he did not respond to repeated calls and text messages from The Daily Star.

Alamgir Mollah, another defender who was supposed to join Sheikh Russel from Abahani, said, "I'm really confused. They once said they will not play, but then they said they will play but haven't taken any visible steps. They are not acting professionally."

Sheikh Jamal midfielder Atiqur Rahman Fahad, who was set to continue with the club this season, said, "Yesterday [Thursday], the club informed us that they won't form a squad."

Both clubs have a regular feature in the BPL, with Sheikh Russel breaking into top-flight football in the 2003-04 season and Sheikh Jamal returning to the top tier in 2010 and remaining there ever since.

According to BPL regulations, both Sheikh Russel and Sheikh Jamal would get demoted to the Bangladesh Championship League next season if they don't compete in this year's BPL.

Both clubs are named after sons of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman and brothers of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, who resigned and fled the country on August 5 in the face of a massive uprising.

It has also been learned that Sheikh Jamal officials want to revert the club to its previous name, Dhanmondi Club, but could not do so this season as the club is already registered as Sheikh Jamal DC. It had adopted its current name in 2010.

Chittagong Abahani are also at risk of missing the next season as team manager Arman Aziz has failed to communicate with club high-ups since the ouster of the Awami League government.

"I will again try to communicate with them [high-ups] tonight [Friday] and if I can't, I will inform the players that Chittagong Abahani will not form a squad," said the former national footballer.

The remaining nine BPL clubs are trying to complete the players' registration formalities before the deadline though most clubs are struggling to manage the funds.

The players of Sheikh Russel and Sheikh Jamal are searching for new teams and many of them have reached out to Brothers Union manager Amer Khan.

"How many players can we sign? I think all clubs should play this season without foreign players and accommodate those 50-60 players," said Amer, who is also BFF executive committee member.

Inter's bid to maintain Serie A status quo starts

REUTERS

Inter Milan begin their Serie A title defence this weekend with a trip to Genoa, looking to get off to another bright start as they bid to become the first team to retain the Scudetto since Juventus in 2020.

That was Juve's ninth consecutive league title but since then the Italian top flight has become a lot less predictable with Inter (twice), AC Milan and Napoli all tasting success. Now, Inter hope to carve out their own period of domination.

In order to do that, Inter will want to make a similar start to last season, where they began with five consecutive wins to hit the top of the table early on, and they have the advantage of continuity on their side.

Simone Inzaghi is still at the helm, whereas their likely rivals all have a new man on the bench. AC Milan brought in Paulo Fonseca and Juventus have Thiago Motta in charge, while Antonio Conte is the man looking to take Napoli back to the top.

Inter have been relatively quiet so far in the transfer market and their main business has been bringing in Polish midfielder Piotr Zielinski and Iranian forward Mehdi Taremi on free transfers.

Zielinski will not be available for Inter's opening games because of injury but Taremi should be on the bench for the trip to Genoa on Saturday and ready to give Lautaro Martinez a chance to rest after his Copa America exploits with winners Argentina last month.

Last season, Inter were held to a 1-1 draw at Genoa at the end of December and Alberto Gilardino is another manager hoping for a repeat of his side's previous campaign.

Genoa were a newly promoted side last time out and more than held their own as they finished the season in a respectable 11th place, but they are expected to find it tougher going this season and avoiding relegation will be the target.

Against Inter, Genoa could struggle for goals with many of their forwards unavailable, and they have also lost striker Mateo Retegui to Atalanta.

Vitinha will likely start, as Gilardino will be without Caleb Ekuban and David Ankeye, and their top scorer from last season, Albert Gudmundsson, could also be an absentee. He is heavily linked with a move away before the transfer window closes.

Milan begin life under Fonseca with a home game against Torino on Saturday and new signing Alvaro Morata, fresh from captaining Spain to Euro 2024 success, will lead the attack.

Motta impressed at Bologna last season, leading them to a top-five finish and Champions League football, but the pressure will be much greater at Juventus.

It should be an interesting start for the new man as his side host newly promoted Como on Monday, a team managed by Cesc Fabregas.

Como have been busy in the transfer market bringing in Spanish keeper Pepe Reina and his compatriot, defender Alberto Moreno, along with striker Andrea Belotti.

Napoli will look to bounce back from their dismal attempt to defend their title last season, when they finished 10th, and life under Conte begins at Hellas Verona on Sunday.

Will Arteta's unique methods do the trick this time?

AFP, London

Arsenal will begin their Premier League campaign at home against Wolves on Saturday, hoping for their manager Mikel Arteta's unique methods -- which involved hiring a group of pickpockets to teach his players a valuable lesson -- to stay with the troops for the entirety of the season.

Arteta's side suffered an agonising end to last season as City pipped them to the trophy by just two points on the final day.

That painful near-miss came 12 months after the Gunners allowed City to snatch the 2022/23 title from their grasp after squandering an eight-point lead.

Rather than dull his appetite for success, those blows inspired Arteta to take his already obsessive attention to detail to new heights as he chases Arsenal's first league title in 21 years.

With that in mind, Arteta secretly tasked a team of professional pickpockets with taking phones and wallets during a dinner with his players.

At the end of the meal, he asked the squad to empty their pockets and they immediately realised they were missing valuable items.

The exercise was done to teach them of the importance of being alert at all times, on and off the pitch.

Arteta, who is no stranger to using creative ideas in a bid to motivate his players, brought an olive tree into a team meeting last season, describing the players as the branches and the staff as the roots.

But the 42-year-old's admirable ability to think outside the box has yet to deliver a prize that is beyond the reach of even his pickpockets.

And for the likes of Martin Odegaard, Bukayo Saka, Declan Rice, and William Saliba to earn themselves a place in the club's hall of fame alongside the "Invincibles" of Arsene Wenger who brought the club's last title in an unbeaten 2003-04 season, they would need to acquire the abilities of being so aware that no one would be able to steal anything from them -- be it from their pockets or from their grasps.

Hasina, Quader sued over killing of schoolteacher

99 AL leaders and activists also made accused in the case

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Bogura

Another murder case was filed against former prime minister Sheikh Hasina in Bogura yesterday. With this, she has been sued in a total of five murder cases.

Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader was also among the 100 other AL leaders and activists sued in the case filed with Bogura Sadar Police Station.

The case was filed over the killing of Selim Hossain, a 35-year-old school teacher and a resident of Palikanda village in Shibganj upazila, on August 4.

Selim was an assistant teacher at Muril Light High School in Kahaloo upazila.

Sikandar Hossain, the victim's father, filed the case around 2:00am, the police station's Officer-in-Charge Saihan Oliullah told The Daily Star.

On August 4, the day before Hasina resigned and fled the country in the face of a student-led mass uprising, Selim joined the student protest in Bogura's Satmatha area.

At that time, AL leaders and activists swooped on the protesters and hacked Selim to death with sharp weapons, according to the case statement.

Selim's brother, Uzzal Hossain, told The Daily Star

Sacked army officer Ziaul arrested

Court places him on 8-day remand

STAR REPORT

Controversial army officer Maj Gen Ziaul Ahsan, who was sacked from the service a day after the fall of the Hasina-led government amid an uprising, was arrested on Thursday night from the capital's Khilkhet area.

Yesterday, a Dhaka court placed him on an eight-day remand in a case filed over the death of Shahjahan, a shopkeeper, in the New Market area during the quota reform protest on July 16.

The next day, Ayesha Begum, the mother of the victim, lodged a murder case against some unnamed assailants.

HARASSMENT ON AUGUST 15

It's violation of human rights: Sarjis

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Sarjis Alam, a key organiser of the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement, has condemned the attacks and harassment during the observance of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman's death anniversary as violations of human rights.

Hundreds of people, many armed with sticks, obstructed people from going to the historic Dhanmondi 32 residence of Bangabandhu to pay their respects on the 49th anniversary of the assassination of the independence hero and the massacre of his family.

Journalists, along with citizens, were barred from filming or taking photos of the incidents.

'Cementing the revolution main focus'

Student protesters say they are not considering floating political party right now

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Anti-Discrimination Student Movement is currently focussing on solidifying the revolution earned through a mass uprising rather than floating their own political party.

Nahid Islam, a key coordinator of the platform, which spearheaded the movement that ousted former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, said in a Facebook post yesterday that the purpose of the mass uprising was not to form a political party.

"Right now, we need to support the families of the wounded and martyred and preserve the spirit of reform, nation-building, and national unity. The students and the interim government will work towards that goal."

He added that the abolition of the fascist system and a new political order were part of the one-point demand, and that requires significant effort and political initiative.

"We want to shape the future of Bangladesh through discussions and dialogue with the people...The students will act as a socio-political force to preserve the spirit of the revolution and the government will work towards restructuring the state in accordance to the people's aspirations."

The issue of the formation of a political party by the students came to the fore after Reuters yesterday reported that they were considering creating their own party to cement in place reforms.

Israel orders fresh evacuations in Gaza

Drops warning flyers in Khan Younis; ceasefire talks paused with resumption planned next week

AGENCIES

The Israeli army ordered a fresh evacuation of areas in southern and central Gaza previously designated as a humanitarian safe zone yesterday, saying the areas had been used by Hamas as a base for firing mortars and rockets towards Israel.

It said warning flyers and text messages had been sent out in the area north of the southern city of Khan Younis and in the eastern part of Deir Al-Balah, where tens of thousands of people have sought shelter from fighting in other parts of Gaza.

"The advance warning to civilians is being issued in order to mitigate harm to the civilian population and to enable civilians to move away from the combat zone," the military said in a statement.

Earlier the military said it had hit an area in Khan Younis from where rockets were fired towards the community of Kissufim on Thursday, finding weapons including shoulder-fired missiles and explosives.

The latest evacuation warnings came as ceasefire talks in Doha were paused yesterday with negotiators set to meet again next week in search of an agreement to end fighting between Israel and Hamas and free remaining hostages, mediators said.

In a joint statement, the United States, Qatar and Egypt said Washington had presented a new proposal that built on points of agreement over the past week, closing gaps between the sides in a way that could allow rapid implementation of a deal.

Mediators would continue to work on the proposal in coming days, they said. Hamas will not accept "new conditions" from Israel in a proposal put forward during talks in Doha, officials told AFP.

Israel, meanwhile, pressed its assault on Gaza. The Hamas-run health ministry said the military strikes across the enclave killed at least 17 Palestinians yesterday.

Among them, at least six Palestinians were killed on Thursday night in an Israeli air strike on a house in Jabalia refugee camp in northern Gaza Strip.

Israeli troops earlier hit targets in the southern cities of Rafah and Khan Younis. In a statement issued late on Thursday on Telegram, Hamas politburo member Hossam Badran said Israel's continuing operations were an obstacle to progress on a ceasefire, reports Reuters.

Thai MPs elect Shinawatra heiress as PM

AFP, Bangkok

The 37-year-old daughter of billionaire Thaksin Shinawatra became Thailand's prime minister yesterday, the third member of the influential but divisive clan to lead the country.

Paetongtarn Shinawatra -- the youngest leader in Thailand's history as a constitutional monarchy and the second woman premier after her aunt Yingluck -- assumes office after two court rulings that threw the kingdom's politics into turmoil.

She will hope to avoid the fate of her father and aunt, both of whom were ousted as PM by the army during a two-decade power struggle between Thaksin and the kingdom's conservative pro-military, pro-royalist establishment.

Lawmakers approved Paetongtarn of the Pheu Thai party as premier by 319 votes to 145, House of Representatives Speaker Wan Muhamad Noor Matha said on live TV. Paetongtarn said she was "very honoured and happy".

"I really hope that I can make people feel confident. I hope to improve the quality of lives and empower all Thais," she told reporters.

"I decided that it's about time to do something for the country and the party. I hope that I can do my best to make the country go forward."

Pakistan logs first mpox case

China takes precautions as fears of global spread grow

AFP, Islamabad

Pakistan said yesterday it had confirmed a case of mpox, a day after Sweden recorded the first infection outside of Africa involving a new, more dangerous strain of the virus that has killed hundreds in the DR Congo.

China said yesterday it will begin screening people and goods entering the country for mpox over the next six months.

The mpox surge in Africa -- which has also affected Burundi, Kenya, Rwanda and Uganda -- prompted the World Health Organization on Wednesday to declare a public health emergency of international concern, the highest alarm it can sound.

Archaeologists find 'hidden empire' in long-lost Roman city

INDEPENDENT.CO.UK

Archaeologists in Spain have uncovered a trove of ancient Roman settlements that could point to the existence of a "hidden empire" previously unknown to historians.

When researchers from University of Cádiz embarked on their exploration in the Guadalete area in 2023, they only expected to find a few remnants of Roman influence.

Instead, they unearthed 57 sites revealing a complex interconnected web of settlements that may reshape the understanding of Roman history in the area.

The sites were scattered across the Spanish regions of Arcos de la Frontera, Bornos Villamartin and Puerto Serrano and were originally linked by trade and communication routes along the Guadalete river.

Experts believe the sheer number of settlements and their strategic locations suggest the area was far more significant during the Roman era than previously thought.

As part of the ambitious project, the team employed cutting-edge technology, including ground-penetrating radar to detect structures buried beneath the surface.

FROM RESISTANCE TO REVOLUTION

Women's role in TOPPLING THE GOVT

MASHFIQ MIZAN

A female student, her face streaked with blood, pleads with Chhatra League activists to stop the relentless beatings.

Another lies alone on the ground, surrounded by the taunting faces of Awami League supporters. Two others, sprinting for their lives as BCL members chase them, brandishing rods and sticks.

These were some of the many scenes that emerged from Dhaka University on July 15, when AL and BCL activists attacked quota reform protesters.

Sanjana Afifa, a resident student of Shamsunnahar Hall at DU, said, "Once they [BCL members] spotted us, they lunged towards us and threw brick chunks. We tried to hide, but they hunted us down... At one point, I hid inside a bus and heard the attackers screaming, 'You are razakar (collaborators of the Pakistani army)'. Many of those hiding with me were dragged out and beaten."

The attackers, nearly 500 BCL activists, targeted female students. Their main goal was to prevent the participation of women in the quota reform protest.

But the strategy backfired. The country was outraged, and instead of retreating, the female students rose stronger.

They returned to the protests the next day with a newfound determination.

The movement, which began as a protest against an unfair quota system, evolved into something much greater eventually.

From the beginning of the protests on July 5 to the day Sheikh Hasina was forced to resign and flee on August 5, female students were at the forefront of the movement.

Some scenes from the protests have become emblematic of the resistance. In front of the Supreme Court, a lone female student stood defiantly before a prison van, using her bare hands to stop it from driving away with her detained friends.

Tangila Tasnim, a resident of Ruqayyah Hall at DU, joined the protests on July 5 not because she aimed to secure a government job, but to ensure fairness for those who did.

"It was all peaceful until Sheikh Hasina called us razakars. We could not accept it," she said.

The female dormitories of DU generally get locked within 10:00pm.

But on July 14, after Hasina's controversial press conference, at least 700 Ruqayyah Hall students broke the gates of the dorm at 11:30pm and took to the streets. Students from all the female dormitories then joined in at midnight.

But on July 15, Tangila and her friends were targeted and assaulted by BCL members.

They returned the next day armed with pepper spray and sticks.

On July 16 night, Ruqayyah Hall became the first to chase away BCL leaders, rest of the female dorms followed, eventually setting off a wave of similar actions across all male halls.

"Dhaka University dormitories were bastions of BCL for 15 long years. What the female students started [chasing BCL away] was unthinkable even a few hours before it actually happened," Tangila said.

The next day, the campus was besieged by police, BGB, and Rab. A sudden directive ordered the evacuation of all dorms.

Tangila, who was off-campus at the time, managed to sneak back in, pack her belongings, and join a protest near the Mall Chattar.

However, when the procession reached the DU public library, it was met with tear gas and sound grenades from the police. Tangila first took refuge in Kalabhaban, then at Jashim Uddin Hall.

Then police started firing in front of the dormitories. Tangila narrowly escaped rubber bullets and shotgun pellets.

"I thought I would be killed," she recalled, as she fled her campus under a hail of gunfire.

She sought refuge in houses of two former DU students. She could not leave Dhaka as the country turned into a warzone by then.

On August 3, Tangila left Dhaka for her home in Rajshahi, hiding her student ID card throughout the journey, fearing it had become a mark of criminality.

She believed she might never return to Dhaka, but then, on August 5, Sheikh Hasina resigned. Tangila said, "Sheikh Hasina resigned, and I got my normal life back."

Nourin Sultana Toma, a Dhaka University student, joined the quota reform protests on July 5. After BCL attacked students on July 15, Toma was forced to return home to Savar.

"However, after I saw the video of Abu Sayed being shot dead by police on July 16, I was outraged. I knew the Hasina government must go. I told my parents I had work, left home, and called them from campus, saying I wouldn't return until we got justice for the murder," Toma recalled how she rejoined the protests.

After the brutal clear-out of the campus, Toma sought refuge in Azimpur Government Colony, in a sublet flat.

On July 18, when law enforcers opened fire on protesters outside the colony, Toma retreated but found her building's gate locked.

She took shelter in another building, where she and others tended to the wounded.

The violence continued the next day.

Sensing the imminent threat of arrest as curfews and internet shutdowns gripped the city, Toma left Azimpur for Savar.

"The night I left, a block raid happened, my room was searched by police. They arrested some of my female friends who stayed back and warned flat owners not to rent to students anymore."

Back in Savar, Toma joined the protests at Jahangirnagar University. She painted graffiti demanding Hasina's resignation.

On August 4, following a call for a march to Dhaka demanding Hasina's resignation, Toma told herself, "I will return to Dhaka, or die trying."

On August 5, Toma, alongside a female friend, braved police, BGB, and army checkpoints to return to Dhaka. Shots rang out near Shahbagh and Central Shaheed Minar, but they pressed on.

Despite their crucial role in the revolution, these women felt sidelined after August 5.

"We are only talking about a select few individuals while discussing the mass uprising," Toma said.

She said the contributions of women, as well as students from Jahangirnagar University, private universities, schools, colleges, and even rickshaw pullers, should be recognised and celebrated.

Mifthaul Janat Mithila, a college student, joined the protests after witnessing BCL activists attacking protesters at Dhaka University.

"After finishing our HSC exam on July 15, I saw pictures of our senior sisters being beaten by BCL men. I couldn't just sit back. I joined the protests the very next day," she recalled.

"I saw people being killed, my friends being arrested, police shooting at us. But we did not back down," she said.

Sazzad Hosain, another college student, said he fell unconscious after BCL members attacked him in the Science Lab area.

"When I regained consciousness, I found myself in a city hospital, being cared for by female students. They brought me there, risking their lives. If they hadn't, I would have bled to death."

His friend, Al Fahad, said after being attacked and handed over to the police by BCL, he was saved by female students who intervened.

"The police were trying to take me away, but some apus [sisters] arrived like angels and held onto me tightly. They didn't let me go."

'MOTHERS OF MARTYRS'

On July 19, as the BGB fired live bullets at protesters in the Bansree and Rampura areas, many women, mostly mothers, acted as human shields to protect the students.

These women provided first aid and water to students, and also took the injured to hospitals. When the student dormitories were cleared and block raids began, they opened their homes to protesters, offering shelter.

Many mothers also lost their children since July 18.

Selina Begum, the mother of 18-year-old Shawon, who was shot dead by BGB in Rampura, said, "My son died a martyr. I am a proud mother."

Similarly, Yasina Akhter, whose 16-year-old son Ahmed Imran was killed by police in Narayanganj, said, "I am proud to be a mother of a martyr."

FACES OF THE REVOLUTION

Nusrat Tabassum is one of the six protest coordinators who was detained by the DB without formal charges and coerced into making a statement to withdraw all protest programmes.

On the night of July 19, DB officers entered her home without a warrant, she said.

They detained her and subjected her to severe physical and mental torture over six days, using intimidation tactics to extract statements.

Eventually, after starting a hunger strike in protest, Nusrat and the others were informed they would be released, she added.

On the protests of July 14 against Hasina's statement, she said, "That night, we didn't expect all the female students to gather in just a few minutes. The consensus among the women was clear: if the male students were barred from coming out of their halls by BCL, we would break the male dormitories locks and get our brothers out."

"When we gathered at Raju Sculpture, there were only a handful of male students present. We marched to the VC's office, and eventually, the male students joined us. We returned to the hall around 2:00am."

On July 16, as police opened fire inside DU, the female students were the last to leave their halls, she said.

Rafia Rehnuma, a female leader of the movement, said they held strong despite facing brutal attacks, and fought till the last day alongside their male counterparts.

Umama Fatema, another female leader of DU, echoed her.

She said they don't want dormitory based student politics, rather she called for student council elections.

CREATIVE NONFICTION

Not waiting for answers

Are our bodies an extension of the land we are born into? Do footsteps over our native terrains vibrate in our insides? Do the silences of its hidden silos create pockets of voids in our lungs and minds?

IFFAT NAWAZ

How long does a corpse of a hero take to rot? 50 years or more? What about the corpses of martyrs? One week? 10 days? The 40-day mark to blow the candles of funeral fires? What if these corpses were mummified and inserted into living bodies by some strange mechanism, then does the soul of a bygone hero survive intermingling with the soul of the living? Do we even have souls? Do they also know how to cry? Do the dead leave the world at all? Mixing with the soil beneath and the air above water–do they become dark-skinned fruits, hard-pitted seeds, scentless flowers?

Do the unhealed, vengeful living misconstrue the words of the corpses they carry? Can corpses talk? Can the past's language still be relevant today? Do pasts speak only on repeat, in muted sighs and high volumes on screens to remind us how dead they are? Do these pasts ever beg to be let go? Do these pasts want to swallow whole the living which use them to survive?

What's the meaning of survivor's guilt and how many of us have it? How many times can an event be played on loop for it to lose its power? What are the dilemmas of the ones who hang in the middle? Besides shelter and food? Is it that we always have too much to lose yet not enough to go by? Is it our supposed clear conscience matched with bent spines? Is it fear of deaths and tears shed over recent corpses which have turned our clocks counterwise?

Are we stuck or are we moving forward? Is death yesterday's news or is it tomorrow's? Can we lend courage from posterity to untie our hands, so we can hold the truth that keeps sliding by?

What's the maximum length of time we are allowed to stay in purgatories? Do limbos run out of space or give up replicating patterns of demise? Does history really repeat itself? Or are we struck by some magician's dark spell, reenacting history–painted on walls, bleeding till we fall, to become corpses in a soulless world–bulldozed, stampeded, wiped clean for a future that resembles old sorrows?

Are our bodies an extension of the land we are born into? Do footsteps over our native terrains vibrate in our insides? Do the silences of its hidden silos create pockets of voids in our lungs and minds?

Do we all carry remains of war-fields in our ribcages? Do we then lie down with the weight of ancient weapons, face-up to the sun, and beg for mercy, for Grace to enter, to pardon us for crimes we committed and didn't, for words we spoke and that which remained unspoken, for our breaths which always feel borrowed? Should we cut open our chests, exposing our hearts and its muffled screams? Are there any tears left to shed by the clouds who stare at us cold and distant, can they break open blood-stained skies?

And then when the sky breaks, do we howl from the base of our spines, all of which we had held inside–disguised, disowned? Do we learn how to swim in mud to become lotus buds or do we get stuck between yesterday's wrath and today's shifting power? Who do we trust? Can we even trust our own impulses, emotions? Can we grow new ears to differentiate truths from half-truths and half-lies? Or do we spend a few days in stillness to stop the earthquake and its aftershocks or have our nerves turned to steel? Is anyone working on calming our insides, banking on the overused but unignorable word––heal?

Did someone tell us that victory can also be vicious? Do we draw boundaries in our celebrations or let our joy run wild while mobs ravage our earth in the name of justice and pent-up scorn? Will we always have scores to settle, is forgiveness just a myth we were told about, are its edges too soft to carry, its voice too bold?

Do all deaths–of children, young ones, mothers, fathers, animals, objects, nations, trees, beliefs, hope, identity and foresight–reincarnate to bring us peace? How long do we have to wait for clarity? How long till the unheard speaks?

Will the world revolve faster tomorrow? Spin us out of our morbid guises and fling us to someplace fresh and high? Do we dare ask the Universe to whimper, do we dare go off orbit searching for a guiltless star's warmth and light?

The children of the red storm

TAHSEEN NOWER PRACHI

You've ignited a tempest,
a crimson anger,
A defiance burning brighter than the summer's sun.
They'd armored the skies,
and paved the earth with steel,
A chilling sword of blooded power,
raw and cold.
Days bleed into nights,
as wounds begin to heal,
Yet courage persisted,
stories yet untold.
We yearned for triumph,
a rise of liberty's gleam,
But memory's echo whispered coldly of winter's chill.
Millions of hearts restless,
Dreaming a fervent dream,
Of a nation transformed,
where justice runs its fill.
They fabricated sunshine,
a plastic, hollow sphere,
While outside, Commander Bengal Rain, too roared in cheer.
Now, victory's dawn has come,
We'll also bring questions anew,
For power once grasped,
is hard to subdue.
Debating with questions to whoever's rule,
with youths' voices now strong,
Demand explanations,
where playing with power goes wrong.
No longer the silenced,
the fearful and meek,
Shape our own destiny,
Your future to seek.

The color of courage

MARZIA RAHMAN

Surely, it's madness
it's insanity—that he walked on.
That he stood alone, facing hundreds of the police with their rifles pointing at him.
And
he shouted.
And
he showed—what courage looks like.
What youth is made of.
Right then, there, the shot was fired.
Valor lay still on the dusty street, dripping blood, colouring the earth with the colour of courage—RED.
RED
1. The colour that screams like police vans, the rifles, pointed at people, point-black.
2. The blood stains on the clothes after the bricks are thrown, after the shots are fired.
3. After the bodies are dragged down the roads, leaving marks.
4. How the protesters with posters and banners look like in daylight!
5. How the streets filled with graffiti look like in moonlight!
6. The colour of Facebook screens on a particular day for a particular cause.
7. The colour of rebellion, hundreds of thousands of closed fists, shouting reform.
8. The colour of sky, just after dusk, heralding a new beginning, a new era.
9. The procession, carrying flags, celebrating victory.
10. The colour of freedom.

Days in the blackout

MALIHA TRIBHU

The silence forced upon the mass came on a sudden Thursday, as all means of communication were shut down abruptly overnight. A sense of terror rising over the nation, mothers wailing for their lost child, fathers running on the streets looking for their sons. Somewhere afar the sounds of gunshots and grenades fade behind the roaring sirens of patrolling police cars. The once scarlet-red streets and alleyways are now enveloped with dust and burnt out garbage from the past week; a rather cunning attempt at damage control, they'd say. The radios only cover their shuffled playlists on repeat, the televisions show their routined statements and further schedules about the ongoing curfews, and a falsified hope to calm down the distressed, "the situation is under complete control", they said. When an entire nation burns and bleeds at the cost of speaking up for their rights, the general people count their days of survival under repeated internet shutdowns and strict curfews. Although, it doesn't seem to affect them as much. Like a normal Sunday, the vegetables vendors hollers in the alleyways with their freshly brought tomatoes and cucumbers, the neighboring women quarreling with the vendors over the hiking prices of onions and chillies, elderly men idling away their times sitting at the street-side tea stalls, debating over their senseless notions of prejudices and superstitions—war hasn't reached over to these alleyways just yet it seemed.

Here, some sleep at night without a single noise coming out of their windows, some sleep in terror as the helicopters continue to fly off of their skylines. One... Two... Three... Ten... The child falls asleep counting the roaring choppers instead of sheeps. The mother weeps silently in a quiet corner upon the prayer mat, asking the Almighty for the impossible. Somewhere far away, far into the future where past is only a falsification deemed to be the truth accepted by the mass; someone repeats the rhyme as a lullaby to their wailing children, to shut them up from asking too much—

"Here comes a candle to light you to bed

And here comes a chopper to chop off your head!"

SCALING MOUNT WHITNEY

Soon, I realised that the thermal water bottle I had was no match for this extreme cold as the water started to freeze inside the bottle. I looked around; the large lake was completely frozen, and it was certain that no water source would be available throughout the climb to refill my bottle.

EASHAN HASAN

"My God! How can a mountain change so much in just a month?"

Standing just below the summit of Mt. Whitney in the Sierra, I couldn't help but wonder if this was the mountain I had researched for hours.

It was late, almost evening. The early December sun in the west was setting quickly as if it was in a race. I stood alone halfway up an icy slope, panting heavily. A gust of brutally cold, dry winter air slashed my face like a sharp knife as I looked up. The summit of Mt. Whitney in the great Sierra was just about a hundred feet away, the last pitch before the top. My lips and throat felt as dry as desert sands, desperately craving a sip of water. But alas, all I had in my insulated, thermal bottle were ice clusters – the negative thirty-degree Celsius temperature was too much for the bottle to keep the water in its liquid form.

"Just a little more, just a few minutes to the top," I tried to motivate myself. Alone in that ethereal environment, I couldn't help but remember what brought me there.

For some time, I wanted to add the experience of a winter solo climb to my repertoire, and my eyes fixed on Mt. Whitney for a couple of reasons. First and foremost, the magnificent Sierra Nevada -- the mountain range home to this peak. "There's nothing like the Sierra," the words from the legendary mountaineer John Muir had been playing in the back of my mind for quite a while, and I was keen to explore those incredible mountains.

The thought of attempting Mt. Whitney, the highest peak (14,497 feet) in the continental US (excluding Alaska), as my first winter solo, was quite appealing.

Another reason was the beauty of the trail leading to the basecamp and the relatively low technicality of the climb under normal conditions. Though the trail is around 34 kilometres long, the actual climb is non-technical in its normal climbing season until late October.

After that, the snowfall starts and the trail gets buried under tonnes of winter snow, raising the difficulties of the climb significantly. The winter climb requires proper gear and preparation to survive in the extreme cold. Finding a route through the white ice becomes a daunting challenge.

Winter arrives in the Sierra Nevada around mid to late November, so I set my plan in motion following the Thanksgiving holidays. After flying to Nevada, I drove to the Alabama Hills, a picturesque desert nestled in the Sierra foothills. I camped overnight there to acclimate and started my hike from the trailhead the next day around 11:00am. With the vast distance ahead, the plan was to cover at least a third of the distance and establish a basecamp for shelter against the biting cold wind. The trail quickly steepened, soon disappearing beneath soft layers of snow that hardened as elevation increased, obscuring any discernible path. Not many people climb in the Sierra during winter, so there was not much beta data to know what to expect beforehand. As I neared my probable basecamp, the plummeting afternoon temperature, the almost frozen lakes, and the amount of snow on everything made me realize that it was going to be a lot tougher than I thought.

After setting up my campsite at a good spot protected by a big boulder, I cooked, had my meal, and went to sleep early. The wind intensity and the harsh cold increased ferociously with time. Though I had prepared my sleeping system well for the extreme cold at night, it still felt too much at times. The sleep was erratic, and as a result, I woke up about three hours late. Instead of my planned 3:00 am start, it was now 6:30 am when I finally left my campsite for the summit push with a 10.5-kilometer distance and a 4,500-foot elevation gain ahead.

I took my first break at Consultation Lake after a couple of hours to have my peanut butter-chocolate sandwich. Soon, I realised that the thermal water bottle I had was no match for this extreme cold as the water started to freeze inside the bottle. I looked around; the large lake was completely frozen, and it was certain that no water source would be available throughout the climb to refill my bottle. So, if my water froze, I wouldn't have any other option except to crush that ice with the pointy end of my ice axe and chew on it!

Despite being a bit frustrated, I decided to move forward. After a short while, I reached the notorious "99 switchbacks" section where the trail became extremely dangerous as it steeply traversed the mountain, and there were places where a slip could be fatal. What began as a strenuous uphill snow hike had become a formidable test of endurance and skill amidst frozen landscapes and treacherous conditions. Negotiating through snow, rock, and ice demanded expert route-finding and the fortitude to withstand extreme cold and furious wind gusts – a true testament to the resilience required for a winter ascent.

Time was flying by, and in contrast, I was advancing at a sloth-like pace with a constant feeling of dehydration and the fear of altitude sickness that comes with it. It was late afternoon when I got a clear view of the summit, which was still about an hour away by my estimation. Though the weather was pretty good with a blue, clear sky and still some warm sunlight left, I knew the temperature would drop at least ten degrees more just after sunset. I hastily moved forward and soon stumbled upon the last pitch – fifty meters of an icy section just before the summit.

What would be just boulder-hopping in normal conditions was now under feet of solid, slippery snow. I looked at the slope – it did not look good with its formidable gradient. I was using microspikes, a traction device similar to crampons but not as good as the actual ones, so I could not be very secure about footing on that slippery ice. It would have to be one step – strike the axe into the ice – pull the body up using the axe – another step – and repeat probably a hundred more times. It was surely going to be a tough, tiring climb!

> With the vast distance ahead, the plan was to cover at least a third of the distance and establish a basecamp for shelter against the biting cold wind. The trail quickly steepened, soon disappearing beneath soft layers of snow that hardened as elevation increased, obscuring any discernible path.

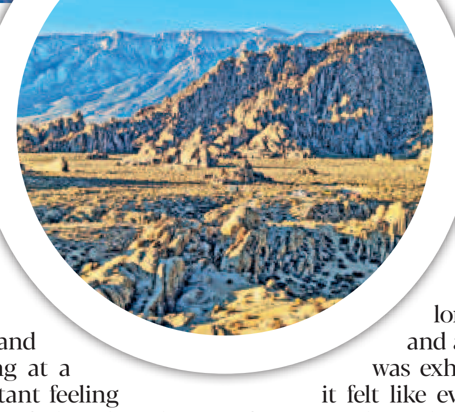
As every nightmare ended, that pitch was over just a few minutes before sunset. I reached the top, ate a few Oreo cookies I had with me, chewed some of those ice clusters again to keep myself hydrated, and experienced one of the best sunset views of my life. It was a surreal moment – summiting the highest peak of the incredible Sierra in those winter conditions, finding myself way above all the clouds with the grand panoramic view of this marvellous range, and witnessing the last rays of the sun over the region before it set.

But I had to climb down quickly reigning in all emotions as it would be dangerous to climb down that last pitch in the dark.

As expected, the night was even colder, and I had to keep moving constantly because my body started to freeze every time I stopped for a second. But I still couldn't resist stopping to marvel at the epic scenery of the moonlit mountains.



My God! It was undoubtedly the most wonderful moonlit night I have ever witnessed.

Despite the breathtaking beauty, I was climbing down swiftly, almost running, thanks to the slope and gravity. It took just half the time to reach my basecamp compared to the ascent, and "Ah, peace!" I exclaimed loudly, drinking the "liquid" water after almost a day.

So yes, it was a ten-hour long push to reach the summit, and another five to come down. I was exhausted and heavily drained; it felt like every system in my body was frozen, and my lips and face were dried and burning from the extremely cold, biting wind. All twenty fingers felt almost numb all day, even after wearing Gore-Tex gloves, boots, and layering with multiple socks. I was constantly worried about getting frostbite. But still, the wonderful feeling of standing on top of the majestic Sierra Nevada, the mesmerizing beauty of the sunset and moonlit mountains, and the adrenaline rush – nothing could beat that combination.

KOREAN EPZ

A modern facility draped in greenery

The KEPZ covers 2,492 acres of land, of which 52 percent is kept green by plantations, water bodies and open areas. It has 33 lakes and waterbodies that attract around 137 species of birds and more than 87 mammals

Our journey to the Korean Export Processing Zone (KEPZ), an eco-friendly industrial area in Chattogram, began on a sunny morning.

Upon reaching our destination located in Anowara, about 40 kilometers southeast of Chattogram, we passed through an automated entrance and observed several well-designed, multi-storied buildings.

To the right, a warehouse and a highly sophisticated factory operated by a world-renowned company came into view. On the left, a vast facility to produce much-needed manmade fibre (polyester yarn) caught our attention although it was still under construction.

We then drove past a long stretch of factory units housing padding, printing, and garment-making facilities.

Initially, everything was quiet. Security personnel, on high alert, were the only ones visible outside the large prefabricated structures.

As we continued, we found ourselves surrounded by lush greenery and complete tranquillity. The landscape featured shrubs, trees such as ear leaf acacias, and small lakes nestled between rolling hills.

If fortunate like us, one might catch a glimpse of a wild elephant peacefully grazing on the shoreline opposite one of the lakes, where a dense green forest adds to the sense of seclusion and wilderness.

The KEPZ covers 2,492 acres of land, of which 52 percent is kept green by plantations, water bodies and open areas.

This unique zone is the country's only private export processing area where humans, machines, flora and fauna peacefully coexist.

Within the industrial enclave, there are 33 lakes and waterbodies, which attract around 137 species of bird and more than 87 mammals.

A subsidiary of the South Korean Youngone Corporation, the KEPZ currently hosts 48 industrial units, largely under the ownership of Youngone.

Youngone is recognised as one of the early leaders in setting up garment factories in Bangladesh for overseas exports.

Its EPZ-based factories specialise in producing premium jackets, trousers made from synthetic fibre, sports shoes, leather handbags, backpacks, and travel bags for international retail markets.

Presently, the KEPZ factories collectively export goods worth approximately $400 million each year.

"Our goal is to increase annual exports to $1.2 billion from the KEPZ. We are optimistic about reaching this target once the facility is operating at full capacity," Md Shahjahan, managing director of the Korean EPZ (KEPZ) Corporation (BD) Ltd, shared during our meeting at the dormitory, which provides accommodation for overseas employees and clients.

Since the commencement of the project, the KEPZ has created direct job opportunities for 31,000 individuals, most of whom are female, within the industrial facilities. It has also created over 25,000 indirect jobs outside the zone.

The private industrial enclave commenced operations in 2011 under the Bangladesh Private EPZ Act.

"This area was once an undulating and sandy hillock, with most of it being 'khas' land that was left barren. We developed this area while preserving its natural surroundings," Shahjahan stated.

Officials reported that they had planted 27 lakh trees to enhance forestry, encompassing over 400 plant species.

A six-kilometre main road has been constructed by the authorities to facilitate the transportation of raw materials and finished goods to and from factories, with a total road network of 40 kilometres within the KEPZ.

The KEPZ is the third major project undertaken by Youngone, following their decision to start manufacturing garments for export markets in 1980.

Youngone Chairman Kihak Sung, a Korean national, chose to invest in Chattogram, leading the way in garment production in Bangladesh through a partnership with a local company. Production began in a rented facility in the port city.

In 1987, Youngone set up a factory in the Chittagong Export Processing Zone. The Dhaka EPZ started operations in 1993 with Youngone's first investment.

Shaikh Shahinur Rahman, managing director of Youngone Group in Bangladesh, explained that all these factories specialised in producing apparel from manmade fibre.

The Korean investor diversified its production to include shoe manufacturing and emphasised expansion in 1997.

As per the authorities, of the 2,492 acres of land, 52 percent (1,296 acres) has been transformed into green areas to comply with the Environment Clearance certificate from the Department of Environment.

The remaining 48 percent (1,196 acres) has been designated for industrial use, including roads, utilities, and other logistical and infrastructural facilities.

Within this 48 percent, 30 percent is allocated to roads, utilities, and infrastructure, leaving 812 acres for industrial development.

A significant portion of this land has already been allocated to various investors for industrial setup, with 732 acres already developed.

Currently, factories and related facilities have been established on 600 acres while construction is ongoing on the remaining land.

Youngone is planning to construct 16 24-storey buildings in the private EPZ for software and IT development.

Shahjahan stated that they are exploring the idea of creating mixed-use towers in the IT block, which would offer both work and living facilities, in anticipation of generating 20,000 IT-related jobs.

This underlines further diversification.

In addition to garment, textile, and footwear facilities, Youngone has also set up 10 design and development centres (DDC) for global retailers and brands to create their products for international markets. These DDCs were designed by leading local architects, and are already operational.

"We do not allow polluting industries in the KEPZ. Any investor looking to set up textile and dyeing factories must establish effluent treatment plants (ETP)," he firmly stated.

KEPZ especially focuses on renewable energy and thereby supports the development of rooftop solar power technology as a way to produce renewable energy and decrease reliance on fossil fuels.

Youngone has established a 40-MW solar rooftop power plant in the KEPZ, which is the biggest in Bangladesh.

The foreign investor has also established dormitories to accommodate 5,400 female workers, alongside a medical centre and daycare facilities for working parents.

An automated kitchen prepares food to serve as lunch to the workers at a nominal price of Tk 2 only. The lunch hour begins at 11:30am and continues until 2:00pm to ensure that workers of all units can have their lunch in batches.

After moving from one production unit to another, we reached the canteen around 1:30 pm. The atmosphere was bustling, with workers chatting and engaging in various activities around the lunch tables.

Men and women, all holding blue tokens, stood in line patiently to receive their meals.

Upon entering the kitchen, Ferdous Al Kowser, the deputy general manager at Youngone Corporation in Dhaka, proudly stated: "We have a nutritionist who oversees the quality of food served to our workers."

Nearby is a medical facility where we found nearly a dozen of workers waiting to see doctors.

At the end of the workday, the fair price shop at KEPZ is bustling with activity.

Shahjahan stated that a majority of the workforce in the KEPZ are from nearby communities and started earning for the first time after joining the factories.

The employment opportunities have provided economic independence to female workers in the area, he added.

The creation of jobs in this area has led to an improvement in the socioeconomic condition. As a result, the local economy is thriving due to the increased spending by residents. Additionally, over 600 vehicles are utilised daily to transport workers to and from surrounding villages.

Asked about the incentives for investment in KEPZ, he informed that investors get all fiscal and non-fiscal benefits established by the government.

Shahjahan also added that chairman Sung has a vision to uplift the socioeconomic condition of Youngone's workforce.

He plans to build an international standard medical complex, which will include a general and specialised hospital, medical college, nursing college, and health technology institutes, to provide the best healthcare services to workers and their families.

He also aims to establish a technical institute and general education facilities to improve the skills of employees.

Sung also emphasises health and hygiene of the people of surrounding villages. To achieve this, a massive cleaning and awareness campaign is underway.

As we wrapped up our activities and started heading back in the evening, the main road, which had been quiet all day, suddenly became crowded with male and female workers, eagerly awaiting their rides home.

It was around 7:30pm when we arrived at the main entrance of the KEPZ.

In the distance, the sound of security personnel blowing whistles could be heard, helping workers get on buses and electric three-wheelers in an organised manner.

Civil admin still on edge

BAHARAM KHAN

Chaotic is the word that best describes the days at the Secretariat after the fall of the Sheikh Hasina government of 15 years on August 5.

Those who were denied promotions for political reasons or poor track records; those who were given promotions but not their placement of choice; and those who are in good positions but were denied a big promotion for below-par performance are agitating -- all at the same time.

Throughout last week, processions were seen every few hours. None of those were to press home demands for improved public services but for personal benefits.

"I have never seen such a situation in my 29 years of service -- it is unimaginable that BCS cadres of the Secretariat can behave like this," said a secretary who asked not to be named to speak candidly on the issue.

It is a "chaotic' situation", he said, adding that such a situation has arisen due to a lack of qualified leadership.

"This administration is rotten. We have failed to set a good example in the administration," the secretary added.

So disorderly are things that the ministries housed in the Secretariat have not been able to do their normal work since August 5.

However, the ministries and departments that have new advisers or secretaries are returning to normalcy.

To avoid getting heckled, Mohammed Mezbah Uddin Chowdhury, the senior secretary of the ministry of public administration, comes to the Secretariat occasionally.

> "This administration is rotten. We have failed to set a good example."
> A secretary who asked not to be named

But he is struggling to handle the aspirants for promotion, The Daily Star has learnt with people familiar with the proceedings.

The chief adviser is at the helm of the ministry along with several other ministries. The ministry, the most important in state administration, does not have a dedicated adviser.

Besides, Cabinet Secretary Md Mahbub Hossain is not coming to the Secretariat at all from August 6. He is discharging his duties by going to the office of the chief adviser of the interim government or the Bangabhaban.

The Daily Star spoke with a host of mid-level officials, who attributed the current state of general administration to two issues.

Firstly, the top brass of the current administration -- the secretaries -- have not been able to set an example of integrity in their work and leadership.

"This is why most of the secretaries did not join office after the fall of the Hasina government. As a result, subordinates do not respect them," said one of the officials.

During the past regime, the top officials have only spent their time taking various benefits including promotion, and contractual appointments, said a joint secretary of the public administration ministry on the condition of anonymity.

In the last decade and a half, no administrative reforms were done, and those who wanted to push for reforms were not allowed to work, he said.

"Despite having a lot of merit, some officers were cornered along with some corrupt ones. However, incompetent, corrupt and partisan officials were mostly promoted. As a result, many of the beneficiaries of the previous government are trying to destabilise the administration by claiming they have been deprived," the joint secretary added.

Those people with a view to safeguarding personal interests including transfer, appointment, promotion and change of designation exploited the vacuum in governance for the first three days after the fall of the Awami League government, officials said.

S Alam drains Janata branch dry

AM JAHID and MD MEHEDI HASAN

As much as 90 percent of the loans disbursed by a branch of state-run Janata Bank was for S Alam Group, in yet another instance of how the Chattogram-based business giant exerted its influence on the country's banking sector.

Janata's Sadharan Bima Bhaban Corporate Branch in Chattogram provided Tk 8,216 crore to S Alam Group, which is 167 percent more than the branch's single borrower exposure limit, according to the bank's documents.

The business conglomerate took another Tk 2,233.45 crore from Janata to take the tally to Tk 10,449.45 crore, which is 451.57 percent of the struggling state-run bank's paid-up capital.

As per law, a bank is not allowed to lend more than 25 percent of its paid-up capital to a single client. At the end of June this year, Janata's paid-up capital stood at Tk 2,314 crore.

The loans to S Alam, which has controlling stakes in as many as eight banks, accounted for 10.7 percent of Janata's total disbursed loans of Tk 98,000 crore at the end of June.

As much as 49 percent of the bank's outstanding loans have turned bad, putting its financial health at risk.

Amid such a situation, the bank on June 25 rescheduled the Tk 1,844.60 crore loans taken by the six companies of S Alam Group for four years -- by breaching rules but with special permission from the central bank.

Of the sum, Tk 1,038.75 crore was for S Alam Refined Sugar Industries, Tk 1,186.43 crore for S Alam Trading Company, Tk 696.42 crore for S Alam Vegetable Oil, Tk 221.13 crore for Global Trading Corporation and Tk 1,229.55 crore for S Alam Cold Rolled Steels.

S. ALAM GROUP

The companies were given the rescheduling facility although S Alam Group had outstanding loans of Tk 8,895.91 crore.

As per banking rules, a fresh loan rescheduling facility can be granted for a client only if it is within the permitted limits.

INJURED IN PROTEST

They are to be treated at separate units in hospitals

STAFF CORRESPONDENTS

Separate specialised care units will be formed in all government hospitals nationwide to ensure better treatment for those injured during the Anti-discrimination Student Movement.

The decision was made during a meeting between two coordinators of the student movement and the authorities of the Directorate General of Health Services (DGHS) at the Dhaka Medical College Hospital (DMCH) yesterday.

At the meeting, it was decided that only doctors, nurses, and legal representatives of the patients would be allowed to enter these specialised units as many of the injured were in critical condition.

Besides, it is also required to prevent the spread of diseases, particularly during the post-operation period.

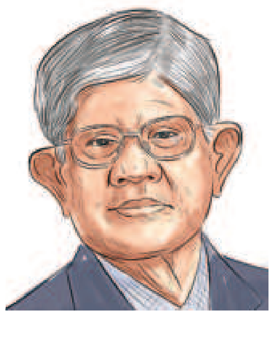
'Big defaulters won't be spared'

Finance Adviser Salehuddin Ahmed shares his plan to discipline rogues in banking sector

REJAUL KARIM BYRON



Finance Adviser Salehuddin Ahmed has vowed to mete out exemplary punishment to big loan defaulters as the interim government scrambles to fix the ailing banking sector of Bangladesh.

The new government has begun its journey with banks struggling to cope with a ballooning bad debt. At the end of March, delinquent loans increased to Tk 182,295 crore, the highest in the history of Bangladesh. That means 11.1 percent of the disbursed loans have soured. The amount is even higher if outstanding rescheduled loans and outstanding restructured written-off loans are taken into account.

"How did it happen?" said Salehuddin, who worked as the central bank governor from 2005 to 2009. He presided over the financial system during the army-

Bavarian Nordic to ramp up production of mpox vaccine

REUTERS

Danish biotech firm Bavarian Nordic BAVA.CO said on Saturday it plans to ramp up production of its mpox vaccine and work with international health organisations to ensure fair access as the disease has been declared a global public health emergency.

The company, one of the few drug firms that have an mpox vaccine, said it has informed the Africa Centres for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) that it can manufacture 10 million doses of the vaccine by the end of 2025, and could already supply up to 2 million doses this year.

The company said that it is expanding its production network to include Africa, and is prepared to work with Africa CDC as well as the World Health Organization (WHO) to make the vaccine accessible to all countries.

Earlier this week, the WHO declared mpox a global public health emergency for the second time in two years.

Two Somoy TV journos attacked by 'students'

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Sylhet

Two journalists from Somoy TV were attacked and beaten yesterday afternoon, allegedly by a group of students demonstrating in Sylhet city.

The injured were reporter Avijeet Banik Apu and cameraman Naushad Ahmed Chowdhury.

According to Avijeet, students surrounded their motorcycle and started beating them with sticks as soon as they arrived at the city centre after the protest started there around 3:00pm.

The journalists went there to cover the demonstration organised by HSC examinees demanding that the rest of the exams be cancelled and they be given pass grades on all subjects.

The journalists went there to cover the demonstration organised by HSC examinees demanding that the rest of the exams be cancelled and they be given pass grades on all subjects.

The injured were able to escape with help from some of the protesters and later went to a hospital for necessary treatment.

Speaking on the matter, Sojol Chotri, president of the Electronic Media Journalists' Association in Sylhet, said, "The attack on journalists is a heinous crime, and we strongly condemn this incident. We demand prompt justice."

Hasina sued

Osman Ayon, nephew Azmery Osman, brother-in-law Tanvir Ahmed Titu, who is also a director of Bangladesh Cricket Board, and Narayanganj City Corporation Mayor Salina Hayat Ivy's younger brother Ahammad Ali Reza Uzzal were also among the accused.

Around 100-150 unnamed people were also accused in the case.

According to the case statement, a few hours before the announcement of Hasina's resignation on August 5, Sajan was shot at Chashara during the clash between protesters and Awami League men.

"He died while undergoing treatment at Dhaka Medical College Hospital the following morning," Sajan's brother Anik had told The Daily Star earlier.

Sajan, son of Jakir Hossain, was a sales representative at a private company. He was living with his family at Kushiara village in Narayanganj's Bandar upazila.

In Chattogram, Hasina, along with former education minister Mohibul Hasan Chowdhoury Nowfel and 32 leaders and activists of the Awami League, was sued for the killing of a college student on July 18.

Tanvir Siddique, 19, a Higher Secondary Certificate (HSC) examinee from Ashekan Awlia Degree College, was shot dead during a clash between protesters on one side and police and AL activists on the other side in the port city's Bahaddarhat area.

His uncle, Mohammad Parvez, filed the case with Chandgaon Police Station late Friday night, accusing 34 people and 100 to 150 unnamed individuals, the police station's Officer-in-Charge Jahidul Kabir told The Daily Star.

He said, "Three people were killed during the violence in Bahaddarhat area on July 18. The plaintiff mentioned the two other victims' names in the case statement."

Jubo League leader Babar Ali and three ward councillors of Chattogram City Corporation -- Nur Mostafa Tinu, Saibal Das Sumon, and Esrarul Haque -- were also among the accused.

The case statement said armed Chhatra League and Jubo League activists opened fire on the protesters.

This was not the case for the S Alam companies: the rescheduled liabilities of the S Alam companies were Tk 4,372.28 crore against the limit of Tk 3,250 crore.

Yet the central bank gave a no-objection certificate for rescheduling the loans on July 28.

However, in its no-objection certificate, the central bank set some conditions, including the loan amount cannot be increased anymore, and the loan amount must be brought within the permitted limits by December 31, 2025.

Civil admin still on edge

During the tenure of the previous government, the most privileged employees at the Secretariat were the officers of the administration cadre.

The chaos at the Secretariat was initiated by officers of this cadre on August 6.

After that, officers of the other cadres started presenting their demands.

Officers coming to the administration cadre through the deputy secretary pool are the most vocal protesters.

They say that even if they join as deputy secretaries from different cadres, they are not properly evaluated by the administration cadre officials.

At the time of promotion, they are overlooked. On August 12, they made a complaint to Mezbah Uddin, the public administration ministry's secretary.

On the other hand, the lower-grade employees (10th to 20th) have joined in the chorus. On August 15, they gave a memorandum to Youth and Sports Adviser Asif Mahmud and others with various demands.

Even though the interim government assumed responsibility on August 8, no specific instructions have come about the general administration.

Doubts have also arisen over whether these officers, who are on contract, will remain in office as the government has announced that all contracts will be cancelled.

There is no clear message about whether there will be a change in the other important posts of the administration such as that of the cabinet secretary and the secretaries of the public administration, finance, local government and law ministry.

As a result, no one can perform their duties with confidence. This is another reason for the crisis.

Meanwhile, the employees of the food department are set to protest against the corruption of the former minister and the current secretary of the food ministry. They are scheduled to hold a rally in front of the Food Directorate.

Earlier on August 14, the employees of the Directorate of Agriculture Extension (DAE) in the capital demanded the trial of the former agriculture secretary Wahida Akhtar in the conference room of the Directorate.

Meanwhile, Dhaka Mass Transit Company Limited employees working in grades 10 to 20 are on indefinite strike for more than 15 days.

As a result, metro rail services are yet to resume despite instructions from the advisory council of the interim government to start operations yesterday.

The administration is led by secretaries and if they can't lead by example, it is natural that such a crisis will emerge, said Firoz Mia, a former additional secretary at the ministry of public administration.

"Earlier, we would hear that qualified officials were not appointed to the top posts, but now it is out in the open," he added.

Ali Imam Majumder, an adviser to the interim government, and Mezbah Uddin, could not be reached for comments.

'Big defaulters won't be spared'

backed caretaker government until Sheikh Hasina formed a new administration.

In an exclusive interview with The Daily Star on Thursday, Salehuddin, the head of the finance ministry, spoke about his plans to take recourse to the judiciary to punish the big loan defaulters and tackle the ongoing situation through the central bank. On Friday, he got the additional charge of the commerce ministry.

"Big defaulters will not be spared. If necessary, we will urge the chief justice to form a special bench [to deal with such cases]," he said.

Salehuddin pointed out that the central bank, along with the banks, has a responsibility to reduce bad loans. He has already talked to new Bangladesh Bank Governor Ahsan H Mansur who assured him of taking stern action against the loan defaulters, including the big ones.

As part of the immediate steps to rein in default loans, the central bank will discontinue concessions and rescheduling facilities enjoyed by the loan defaulters over the years, Salehuddin said.

The interim government headed by Nobel laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus took charge earlier this month with a pledge to bring reforms as demanded by the student movement against discrimination that ousted Hasina.

Despite uncertainties amid chaos in the immediate aftermath of the uprising, the political changeover has brought optimism among economists and civil society who expect big changes, especially in the economic sector.

Salehuddin said they took charge when the country was reeling from a multi-pronged economic crisis caused by domestic issues alongside global headwinds. There were regulatory failures and irregularities in the name of development.

The adviser pointed out inflation, banking sector irregularities, low revenue collection, a sharp decline in foreign currency reserves, money laundering, and graft as the key challenges to the economy.

Along with restoring law and order, the government has prioritised steps to wipe out setbacks to economic growth, he said. The new central bank governor was appointed in a swift move to fill a vacuum created by the resignation of his predecessor. The interim government was also working to bring changes to the posts of chairman of different banks, he added.

In the past financial sector, rules and regulations were violated using "special power". For example, the single exposure limit was not followed in disbursing loans, Salehuddin said.

The new government has stopped such irregularities, he said.

"Most importantly, transparency and accountability in the financial sector have been ensured," he added.

The adviser said he has asked officials to end the culture of passing the buck in the sector where everyone has to take responsibility and be accountable.

Asked about medium-term reform plans, he said the authorities would bring some necessary changes to the financial and banking sectors, and he has talked with the development partners about the matter.

"Some reforms are required urgently which we will ensure," he said.

On the other hand, establishing a banking commission could be part of long-term reforms. The interim government may take initiatives to this end, he added.

CENTRAL BANK AUTONOMY

The full autonomy of the Bangladesh Bank has always been in question in the past. The finance adviser said the issue depends on the person who remains at the helm of the regulator.

"The Bangladesh Bank Order is a very good law which provides enough authority to the central bank. Yes, there are issues which demand discussion with the government. However, those are not day-to-day issues," he said.

It is the central bank's full authority to decide what will be the country's monetary policy, and interest or exchange rates. Besides, it is also the duty of the central bank to act against loan defaulters, Salehuddin said.

In his view, the central bank has enough autonomy. There are some limitations mainly because of the Bank Company Act.

The Daily Star asked whether the interim government will support the central bank when the latter needs to increase the policy rate to tame inflation and boost reserves, or slightly raise the crawling peg mid-rate against the dollar.

Salehuddin said the central bank governor has talked about revisiting some rates and spoke about the differences.

He said Governor Mansur will work to this end because if these issues are not addressed, then there will be uncertainty over inward remittances and the currency market.

DEVELOPMENT PARTNERS

The finance adviser identified development projects, some of which have not started while some are ongoing, as the biggest issue for the interim government.

Bangladesh's development partners also wanted to know the interim government's position on the projects and they were informed that the ongoing projects will continue.

However, some large projects could be placed at the Executive Committee of the National Economic Council.

This newspaper asked him whether the interim government would seek budget support from international development partners such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to ease pressure on reserves.

Salehuddin said support from development partners is not a "big issue" when it comes to improving the reserves, for which he emphasised increasing export earnings and remittances, and bringing more foreign direct investments.

The development partners set different conditions in line with Bangladesh's economic reforms in their loan programmes and these reforms are also the interim government's priority, he said.

If their priorities match, then the government will be able to secure funds from the development partners, Salehuddin said.

The development partners have pledged budget and project support if the government continues going forward on the path it has taken, he added.

MONEY LAUNDERING

Salehuddin also vowed action against money launderers, saying the government has heard about flights of foreign currencies from the country and it will look into the matter seriously.

The government has a committee on money laundering but it has not held a single meeting in the past two and a half years.

The committee sat on Wednesday within a week of the interim government taking charge.

Salehuddin said the committee has a list of money launderers and that it was asked to include names of old launderers alongside new ones.

Also, the government has ordered investigation authorities to make their job visible by conducting quick probes into allegations of money laundering.

Salehuddin said he has directed the National Board of Revenue to fix the collection system since revenue is crucial for the country's economy and the government's operations.

Although the digitalisation of revenue collection has been talked about for a long time, it has not been completed. The government will solve this problem soon, Salehuddin said.

He also said the current government will allow the universal pension scheme, introduced by the Hasina administration, to continue as many developed countries have strong social safety schemes, including health insurance.

However, some of the components of the universal pension scheme will be revisited, he added.

Hurricane Ernesto pounded Bermuda on Saturday with powerful winds and 35-foot (10-meter) waves while drenching the British island territory with rain that could produce deadly flooding.

Power was out for more than 70% of the territory's 36,000 customers.

The eye of the storm passed over the west end of the archipelago early Saturday as it moved toward the north-northeast and as of 11 a.m. EDT (1500 GMT) it was 50 miles (75 km) away from Bermuda, the U.S. National Weather Service said.

out vital reforms in our electoral system, judiciary, local government, media, economy, and education," 2006 Nobel Peace Laureate Yunus said.

Prof Yunus, along with heads of governments from different countries, including India, Nepal, Sri Lanka, Bhutan, Fiji, Oman, and Vietnam, joined the summit virtually.

He invited all who joined the summit to visit Dhaka soon.

"I invite you to visit Dhaka soon. Otherwise you may miss something important. Much of Dhaka has turned into the graffiti capital of the world."

Mentioning that much of Dhaka has turned into the graffiti capital of the world, the economist said young students and children aged as young as 12-13 have been painting the walls of the 400-year-old city with images of a "new, democratic, environment-friendly Bangladesh."

There is no central planning or guidance for that. No budget support from anybody. It is just an outpouring of their emotions and commitment to the goals of the "Second Revolution," he went on to say.

"The messages they are painting will thrill anybody. Anyone can read in them what the youth are dreaming of. It is our job to make their dreams come true," he said.

"We must place the youth and students, who constitute a significant portion of the Global South's population, at the heart of our strategies. Two-thirds of our population is youth. They are the most powerful segment of society. They are different. They are committed to creating a new world. They are capable. They are technologically far ahead of the previous generation. They can make all the impossible possible."

Prof Yunus said, "Our education system and financial system are built only for creating job seekers and providing jobs for them. We have to redesign our system."

"My life-long experience has been that our financial system was created to promote wealth concentration. We have to redesign our financial system to make sure wealth is shared by all. It should not be a one-way path to wealth. We must ensure financial services for all people, particularly women and youth," he added.

He said that in 1952, the Bangladeshi students sacrificed their lives for their mother tongue. It inspired struggles for the right to speak in their mother tongues all over the world.

"Some seven decades later, our student-led second revolution is inspiring youth throughout the global south to raise their voice for democracy, human rights, dignity, equality, and shared prosperity."

Prof Yunus further said, "I am honoured to be the oldest 'young person' to take part in this revolution and help them make their dreams come true. They need support from all of you. Wish them all the success."

raised by his aunt.

"I was hungry and wanted to eat something. I went outside and saw that the shop was closed. Then I heard commotions and gunshots. Everyone was saying the police were shooting at people," Rifat said.

He saw people running and he started running too.

"Then I fell to the ground and saw blood coming out of my leg. Then I stood up and tried to walk but fell to the ground again. This time, I was unable to move again. After some time two older boys came and carried me away from the street," he added.

In another bed of the hospital, 14-year-old Muhammad Sifat was struggling to hold back his tears.

A bullet hit his right knee. Doctors told his parents that he may never be able to walk normally again.

On July 18, Sifat, who is a student of class eight of Pallabi Majedul Islam Model High School, joined a procession with his friends. He got shot when the police opened fire.

"I don't know when my son will be able to walk again. Three surgeries have been done and doctors said another one is needed," said his mother Rekha Akhtar.

There are at least 12 children with gunshot wounds being treated at Nitor. They were shot between July 18 and August 5. One or more surgeries were needed for all of them.

The limbs of some of them had to be amputated.

Twelve-year-old Muhammad Soliman loves football. As his poor parents could not afford to pay for school, he used to work at a knitting factory at the capital's Shonir Akhra for Tk 5,000 a month.

On July 19, he was playing football in an open space with other boys in the area after work. All of a sudden, he saw people running towards the field.

"We ran when we saw the protesters and police coming towards the playground. Within moments, I got shot in the leg. Please ask the doctors if I will be able to play again," the boy eagerly told these correspondents.

Most of the children treated at the hospital are from poor families. They are struggling to bear the cost of treatment.

At just 17, Muhammad Minhaj is the breadwinner of his family. He was shot in the left leg on July 18 near Jatrabari kitchen market where he worked.

Four surgeries have been done on his leg and more will be needed. His parents have already incurred loans to pay for the treatment.

"I used to pull a rickshaw. My son has been taking care of the family since I became ill. Solaiman used to earn Tk 500 to Tk 800 a day by working at the fish market. He was the only earner in the family," said his father Bachchu Miah.

He said he has no idea how Minhaj's treatment will go on as he has no money and no means of earning.

HELEMUL ALAM

At least 18 dengue patients have died in the first 17 days of August, the highest monthly death toll in 2024 so far.

Meanwhile, 2,897 people have been admitted to hospitals during the same time, according to the Directorate General of Health Services.

Last year, Bangladesh recorded its highest-ever dengue toll since the first outbreak in 2000, with 1,709 deaths and 3,21,179 cases.

Experts warn that the number of cases could rise further in September if immediate action is not taken.

Prof Kabirul Bashar, an entomologist at Jahangirnagar University, said inadequate response from local government bodies, and absence of any anti-mosquito drives during the recent political upheaval has contributed to the deteriorating dengue situation.

"Anti-mosquito drives across the country are not being conducted properly. Even in Dhaka, the efforts are insufficient," he said.

He urged for comprehensive measures to control the spread of the dengue virus nationwide.

Dr HM Nazmul Ahsan, associate professor at Shaheed Suhrawardy Medical College Hospital, said the number of patients with dengue shock syndromes has increased recently.

He urged everyone to remain wary of dengue warning signs, as early intervention can reduce fatalities.

The World Health Organization introduced the term "expanded dengue syndrome" in 2012 to describe patients exhibiting atypical symptoms in vital organ systems, such as the cardiovascular, neurological, renal, gastrointestinal, and hematological systems. Dr Nazmul pointed out that a large number of patients last year were admitted with dengue shock, a critical stage of the disease.

"Many people do not realise they have symptoms and delay seeking medical attention, increasing their risk of developing shock syndrome," he said.

Shock syndrome in dengue patients can be categorised into two types: compensated shock and decompensated shock.

In compensated shock, blood pressure may appear low or normal, with a narrow pulse pressure of 20 or less.

Decompensated shock, however, is more severe, with disorientation, cold clammy skin,

UK shouldn't offer asylum to Hasina

Says British MP Rupa Huq

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh origin British MP Rupa Huq has said it would be unwise for the UK to give refuge to Sheikh Hasina.

"As a British Bangladeshi MP, my inbox is a lightning rod for Bangladeshi issues worldwide. At the moment, pleading mails ask me to 'ban the butcher' and similar requests as it is rumoured London is her next destination," she wrote in an opinion column published by the Standard newspaper of UK on Friday.

"I personally think given the deep unpopularity of her bloodthirsty regime and political sensitivities around immigration, it'd be unwise for the UK to give refuge to such a high-profile asylum seeker who is subject of an International Criminal Court application," Huq opined.

Two former AL MPs held, four more sued

Cases filed against hundreds of party men

STAR REPORT

Two former Awami League lawmakers were arrested yesterday, while cases were filed against at least four other ex-parliamentarians in separate incidents across Chattogram, Dhaka, Thakurgaon, Dinajpur, Cox's Bazar and Rangpur.

In Chattogram, Md Abdul Latif, the former Awami League lawmaker from Chattogram-11, was placed on a three-day remand by a court in connection with a case involving the shooting and injuring of a protester during the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement.

Chattogram's Metropolitan Magistrate Jewel Deb granted the remand after police presented Latif with a 10-day remand prayer.

Latif was arrested in the Baizid Bostami area early yesterday, said Fazlul Quader Patwari, officer-in-charge of Double Mooring Police Station.

The arrest followed a case filed by Md Ershad, accusing Latif and others of opening fire on protesters on August 4.

The former MP was allegedly hiding at a relative's house in Madarbari before being picked up by the army on August 10.

Meanwhile, in Thakurgaon, former Water Resources Minister and Thakurgaon-1 lawmaker Ramesh Chandra Sen, was detained at his ancestral home in Ruhea Ramnath village by a police team from Dhaka.

Officer-in-Charge Gulfamul Islam Mandal reported that law enforcers from Police Headquarters claimed they were taking the political leader for his safety.

Sen's wife Anjali Rani Sen said police assured her they would bring him back within half an hour, despite her pleas not to take him due to his illness.

A photograph of the former lawmaker, tied with a ribbon or rope, soon went viral on social media.

The family insisted that, to their knowledge, no case had been filed against him.

He was later produced before a Thakurgaon court in a case filed over attack on protesters on July 16 by BCL activists.

METRO SERVICE RESUMPTION

Work abstention behind the delay

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Uncertainty looms over metro rail service resumption as a group of its employees vowed to continue their work abstention until all six of their demands are met.

Authorities will meet newly appointed adviser of the road transport and bridges ministry today to end the stalemate, said MAN Siddique, managing director of Dhaka Mass Transit Company Ltd.

Once the employees rejoin, operations can be resumed within five days, he said.

Operations of metro rail have remained suspended since July 18 after two stations were vandalised during the quota reform protests, which later turned into an uprising that toppled the Hasina-led government on August 5.

On July 19, attackers vandalised two metro stations -- Mirpur-10 and Kazipara.

The government directed DMTCL on August 11 to complete necessary technical checks in seven days to resume services, without the two vandalised stations.

On the same day, the advisory council of the interim government decided to resume metro rail services on August 16.

But, DMTCL, in a press statement on August 15, said it would not be possible to resume metro rail operation as they could not start necessary technical checks due to an unavoidable situation.

Sources said the authorities failed to start the trial runs as around 700 of the DMTCL employees of grade 10 to 20 have been on work abstention since August 6 to press home their six-point demand, including pay hike.

Expedite visa for journos who want to come here

Press secretary tells missions

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The interim government has asked all missions abroad to expedite visa approvals for any journalists who want to visit Bangladesh, according to a Facebook post by Shafiqul Alam, press secretary of the chief adviser.

Anyone who wants to report on Bangladesh and the performance of the interim government is most welcome, Shafiqul wrote yesterday.

"Yesterday, during his telephone conversation with Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi, Chief Adviser Professor Muhammad Yunus has said Indian journalists are welcome to Bangladesh and report from the ground here," he added.

"It is better they see the situation themselves and do reports accordingly rather than being dictated by any secondary -- and sometimes very exaggerated -- reports."

"We want to build an open society where freedom of press is non-negotiable."

150-year-old British ship found in Karnaphuli riverbed

MD NAZRUL ISLAM, Ctg

A century-old British merchant ship has been discovered at the bottom of the Karnaphuli River during dredging operations for the Chattogram Port Channel.

The 350-foot coal-powered vessel was found on August 15 in the Dangarchar area between Jetty 6 and 7 and has since been salvaged.

Artifacts recovered from the ship include silver coins from 1862-82 AD, silver furniture, binoculars, and a substantial stock of coal. The ship is estimated to be around 150 years old.

Officials reported that the vessel was cut into two parts for removal. Initial attempts by two organisations to salvage the ship failed, but Hiramoni Salvage Ltd was later successful.

Capt Faridul Alam, deputy conservator of the Chattogram Port Authority, confirmed the recovery, saying the vessel posed a risk to container ship movement in the Karnaphuli Channel.

Md Abul Kalam, manager of Hiramoni Salvage Ltd, stated, "We salvaged and removed the ship as per our agreement with the port. There are also two more sunken ships in the riverbed that will be removed to enhance the safety and efficiency of the port."

Artifacts recovered from the ship also include furniture, plates, bowls, water pots, spoons, candle holders, flower vases, and various items made from ivory, copper, brass, and silver. The ship is believed to have sunk during the British period while engaged in trade in the Indian subcontinent.

Senior diver Md Zahir explained that the ship was submerged 60 feet deep, leading to significant silt accumulation. Salvage operations involved dredging the silt and using skilled divers to cut the ship into two parts, which were then brought to the riverbank using four salvage barges.

Jihad Hossain, director of Hiramoni Salvage Ltd, said the artifacts recovered have not yet been examined by experts.

Dr Ataur Rahman, deputy director of the Directorate of Archeology and keeper of the Chattogram Ethnological Museum, confirmed the historical significance of the recovered coins.

He pointed out that the coins, predating Queen Victoria's direct rule over India, are of considerable archaeological value.

Dr Rahman added, "According to regulations, archaeological artifacts should be handed over to the Directorate of Archeology. The authorities involved in the salvage operation should have informed us to ensure the artifacts are preserved and no items are lost."

Two former AL MPs

A Chhatra Dal activist filed the case on Friday night. The court of Judicial Magistrate Rajib Kumar Roy later sent him to jail.

In Dhaka, a total of 119 Awami League members, including two former Dhaka-19 lawmakers, have been sued in connection with the death of Ash-Sabur, a 16-year-old student killed during anti-government protests in Savar on August 5.

The case was filed by Sahid Hasan alias Mithu at Ashulia Police Station on Friday night.

The accused include former MPs Muhammad Saiful Islam and Talukder Tauhid Jang Murad, Ashulia Thana Awami League President Farooq Hasan Tuhin, Savar Municipality Mayor Abdul Ghani, and several union parishad chairmen.

The complaint alleges that Ash-Sabur was beaten and shot dead by Awami League cadres and their affiliates.

His body was found at Bypile intersection after he had been reportedly attacked while returning from a shop.

In Dinajpur, Afsar Ali, chairman of Bochaganj Upazila Parishad and General Secretary of Bochaganj Upazila unit of Awami League, was arrested and sent to jail after an altercation with students at the Bochaganj Police Station.

The students, present near the police station, accused Afsar of threatening them.

Afsar, who had gone to the station to file a complaint about his house being vandalised and set on fire, was subsequently arrested based on a case filed by Faisal Mostak, a student from Hajee Mohammad Danesh Science and Technology University.

The case was filed for attacking protesters on July 18. It named former state minister for shipping and ex-Dinajpur-1 lawmaker Khalid Mahmud Chowdhury, along with 99 others as accused.

Additionally, in Natore, two cases of attempted murder were filed against former lawmaker Shafiqul Islam Shimul.

The cases, filed by district BNP joint convener Farhad Ali Dewan Shahin and BNP member Saiful Islam Aftab, accuse Shimul and others of orchestrating attacks against them.

The police are reportedly working to arrest the accused following the investigations.

In Cox's Bazar, a case has been filed against 150 individuals, including a former whip of the parliament, over shooting at protesters during the quota reform protest.

The case was filed against leaders and activists of AL, Jubo League and Chhatra League. Cox's Bazar Sadar Model Police Sub-inspector Md Salim Mia filed it early yesterday.

The case statement alleged that quota reform activists, engaged in a peaceful march in Cox's Bazar, were attacked and shot in Gungachtola area, resulting in the death of one activist.

OC Rokibuzzaman said no arrests were made by yesterday evening.

Among the accused are former MP and whip Shaimun Sarwar Komol, district AL General Secretary Mujibur Rahman, and Cox's Bazar Municipality Mayor Mahabubur Rahman Chowdhury.

The Local Government Division in Bagerhat has been urged for restoring these services promptly to alleviate public suffering.

Visiting Gotapara, Bemarta, Karapara, Shatgumbuj, Raripara, and Banagram UPs on Thursday, this correspondent found only a few public representatives present at the offices, with most services on hold. A similar situation was observed at Bagerhat Municipality office as well.

"I came for my citizenship certificate for an urgent need, but failed to collect it as it cannot be issued in absence of the mayor," said Nasir Sheikh, a resident of ward 9 in the municipality.

Kohinur Akter Dalim, a female councillor, admitted that the mayor and councillors have not been coming to the office for several days.

"Without the mayor, official work cannot proceed. I am occasionally visiting the office," she added.

Saiful Islam, a representative from Karapara UP, echoed her, saying, "Many citizens have been coming for services, but we are unable to provide any as the chairman has not been coming to office."

Dr Md Fakhrul Hasan, deputy director of Local Government Division in Bagerhat, said they have submitted a list of absentee public representatives in the district to the ministry.

According to the report, at least 50 percent of the public representatives are absent from their workplaces.

"We will take further decisions based on directives of the ministry," he added.

Many Bangladeshis think she should return to face charges there, she said.

Huq said there is a collective sense of relief among her Bangladeshi cousins, as the atmosphere of fear surrounding any criticism of the government seems to be easing.

However, risks remain, she said. The deposed camp argues they maintained stability, but as elections approach, it's time for a change, she added.

Instead of the ongoing feud between two families that has marked Bangladesh's history, the country should aim for a fresh start, she said.

"Many patients die within minutes if they experience such shocks," Dr Nazmul warned.

He said the death rate is higher among high-risk groups, including obese and elderly individuals, pregnant women, infants, and those with comorbidities.

Dr Nazmul also said severe stomach aches, breathing difficulties, severe weakness, bleeding from gums or nose, and vomiting are symptoms that require immediate hospitalisation.

"Failure to hospitalise patients showing warning signs can lead to shock syndrome," he added.

The other clause allows the government to appoint "competent persons or officials" as the administrators to the city corporations until further notice.

Similar amendments have been made to three other ordinances allowing the government to remove elected representatives of municipalities, zilla and upazila parishads and appoint administrators.

Damages worth Tk 23cr

Directed by the Police Headquarters, CMP has prepared a list of affected police establishments and estimated the damages to infrastructures to be worth about Tk 21 crore.

CMP's Traffic Police Department has prepared a separate report on the damages, which was not included in the aforementioned amount.

Abdul Warish, additional commissioner of CMP, said, "We have prepared a report on the damages sustained from the recent attacks on police establishments. The Police HQ will respond further in this regard."

District police sources said around Tk 2 crore worth of infrastructural damages were sustained in the attacks.

"We are compiling a comprehensive report in this connection," said Kabir Ahmed, additional superintendent of police (admin) of Chattogram District Police.

Meanwhile, around 50 of the looted firearms and around 3,000 rounds of ammunition have been recovered by members of the Bangladesh Army, Bangladesh Ansar, and Rapid Action Battalion (Rab-7) from different areas.

Still, at least 450 different firearms and around 12,000 rounds of ammunition remain missing, including those looted from the central armory at Dampara Police Lines, Kotwali, Double Mooring, Pahartali, EPZ, Patenga, Raozan and Lohagara police stations, said sources.

Niskriti Chakma, deputy commissioner (crime) of CMP, said, "We are working on recovering the looted firearms. Some have been recovered so far. After receiving full reports from the police stations, we will be able to confirm the number."

Quaiyum looted a semi-automatic pistol from a police station in Dhaka, said Mohammod Asadhuj Zamman, superintendent of police in Noakhali.

Later, Quaiyum handed over the pistol to Monir and asked him to sell it.

Acting on a tip-off, police arrested Monir from his residence with the firearm, the SP added.

A case was filed against Monir and Quaiyum.

Work abstention

Mohammad Abdur Rouf, company secretary of DMTCL, said they have already started meeting five of the six demands.

"We also assured them of meeting their demands for salary hike, as we [DMTCL authority] cannot fulfil this demand unless DMTCL board takes a decision in this regard. But they [employees] were adamant about not rejoining unless an order in this regard is issued," said Rouf.

The agitating employees said while DMTCL employees from 1st to 9th grade earn 2.3 times the national pay scale, employees from 10th to 20th grade earn only 2 times more than the pay scale. They want this "discrimination" to be removed.

MAN Siddique said they have, in writing, assured the employees that their demands will be met once a new chairman of the DMTCL board takes charge.

The interim government has cancelled the contract of the immediate past secretary of the road transport and highways division, who was the ex-officio chairman of the board.

He said the interim government appointed a secretary for the division yesterday, so they hope to hold a board meeting soon.

"We will inform the adviser on the issues. We hope that the problem will be solved very soon," he added.

The Daily Star was unable to reach any of the protesting employees for comments.

ATTACKS ON CTG POLICE ESTABLISHMENTS

Damages worth Tk 23cr, 500 firearms looted

FM MIZANUR RAHAMAN, Ctg

The spree of attacks on numerous police establishments in Chattogram district following the resignation of the Awami League-led government on August 5, caused infrastructural damages worth around Tk 23 crore, said police officials.

The estimated value of other damages, including those caused to vehicles, is still being assessed.

Also, at least 500 firearms of different types, including SMGs, shotguns, Chinese rifles, gas guns, rifles, pistols, and more than 15,000 rounds of ammunition were looted from police stations, raising concerns as only a few of those could be recovered so far.

According to Chattogram Metropolitan Police and Chattogram District Police sources, 12 of the 16 police stations in the district and 11 other police outposts sustained damages in the recent spate of attacks and violence. Of those, Kotwali, Sadarghat, EPZ, Patenga and Lohagara police stations sustained significant damages after being set ablaze, while Hathazari and Raozan also came under mob attack and underwent considerable damage due to vandalism.

"My station, set up in an old building, was completely destroyed in the violence and is now unusable. We have begun setting up a new office in an outpost near the Karnaphuli Tunnel," said Md Mahfuzur Rahman, officer-in-charge of Patenga Police Station.

Administrative deadlock in Bagerhat

Residents struggle as most offices remain inactive

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Bagerhat

An administrative stagnation persists in Bagerhat due to suspended operations of union and municipal offices following the resignation of the Awami League-led government on August 5.

Bagerhat district comprises of nine upazilas, three municipalities, and 75 unions, employing a total of 1,041 public representatives, including mayors, councillors, upazila chairmen, vice-chairmen, union parishad members, and female UP members, most of them being affiliated with the AL and its front organisations.

Since the fall of the government following a mass upraising, most of these AL-affiliated public representatives have gone into hiding over security concerns.

Their prolonged absence has been disrupting services such as issuance of birth and death registrations, citizenship certificates, trade licences, and inheritance certificates.

As such, residents are being deprived of essential services.

Protect children and their rights

UN calls on interim govt

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

A high official of the UN has called on the interim government to seize the current transition as an opportunity to address existing gaps in laws and methods to protect children from all forms of abuse and exploitation, and from arbitrary detention.

The call comes as, according to the latest verified figures by Unicef, more than 65 children were killed during the crackdown on peaceful demonstrations leading to the fall of Awami League regime on August 5.

"Youth and children in Bangladesh have been at the forefront of the recent protests in the country. They have achieved a lot, but they have also paid a huge price," said Special Representative of the UN Secretary-General on Violence Against Children, Najat Maalla M'jid, on Friday.

"I add my voice to those of the UN Secretary-General and the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights underscoring the need for a full, independent, impartial, and transparent investigation into all acts of violence.

"In particular, I would like to stress the importance of ensuring adequate safeguarding mechanisms for children and young people who have been victims of violence, arbitrary arrests and detention."

Maalla M'jid encouraged the interim authorities to expand and strengthen institutions and social programme so that they are easily accessible to all children.

She recalled the critical importance of a child-friendly justice system, including independent courts for minors, even more so considering the high number of children and youth that were detained during the recent protests.

"I welcome that the release of children has begun, and call for the swift release of all children," she said.

"It is critical that all charges against them are lifted, especially under the cybercrime and anti-terrorist legislation, and that there are guarantees of no further prosecution."

The UN official also called on the authorities to protect youth and children's right to freedom of expression and peaceful assembly.

The injured was admitted to Chandina Upazila Health Complex.

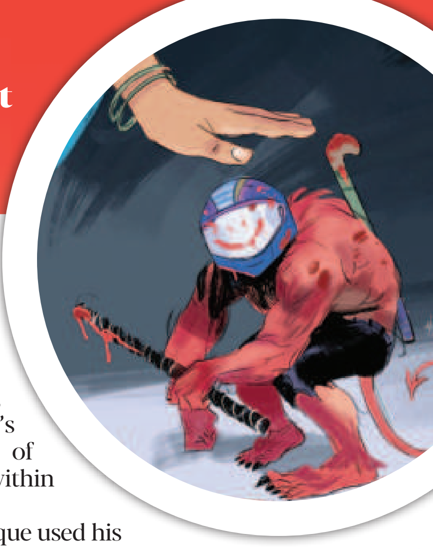
CARTOON EY BIDROHO
Drik celebrates revival of political cartoons

History has its own grim sense of humour. When power betrays the very people from whom it arose, it ignites like a furious blaze, consuming anyone who dares to threaten its inherent drive for freedom.



CARTOON: MAHATAB RASHID

Cartoonist Mehedi Haque used his art to strike the authorities directly. "An artist's job is to do what's right at the right time. We paid a debt to the countless deaths and assaults suffered by cartoonists like Ahmed Kabir Kishore," Haque stated.

DOWEL BISWAS

The history of revolution is almost always shaped by artistic resistance. While some fought in the streets, artists wielded pens and pencils as weapons, inspiring and mobilising the masses with their creations. Political cartoons played a pivotal role in the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement, transforming the revolution with artistic brilliance and courage.

Acerbic political cartoons—hundreds of them—flooded social media. Drik honored this tradition through their exhibition Cartoon Ey Bidroho (Rebellion in Cartoons), held at their photo gallery in the capital's Panthapath. The exhibition brought together distinguished cartoonists, showcasing the incredible artistic contributions of these revolutionary figures. The initiative is timely, serving artists, spectators, and the cultural 'renaissance' currently being witnessed.

"There was a time when political cartoons, caricatures, satires, graffiti, and other artistic forms of vigilante justice were deeply rooted in our culture to critique and question authority. Cartoons and caricatures used to grace the front pages of every newspaper, delivering potent messages against malpractice and corruption," said ASM Rezaur Rahman, general manager of Drik and curator of the exhibition. "However, due to undue censorship and the culture of fear perpetuated by the former government, this artform was stifled, threatening to become nearly obsolete."

Rahman also emphasised the shift in power dynamics with the rise of social media and citizen journalism, particularly during the youth protest movement. Authorities, shaken by the power of this movement, found the usual rules of political engagement upended. Ordinary people, through their phones and personal devices, risked their lives on the front lines to reveal ground realities often beyond the reach of traditional journalists.

Drik's exhibit showcased the unprecedented draughtsmanship and satirical verve of 82 cartoonists, featuring a well-curated collection of 175 artworks in the Drik Picture Library. One cartoon published on July 15 captured the spirit of the movement perfectly: it depicted the figure of Shontrash Birodhi Raju Sharokh Bhashkorjo, with a red sun at its apex, covered in blood while a black boat floated gloriously amidst the red waves. Another work from the same day portrayed a grotesque red creature, battered with hockey sticks, being blessed by a hand adorned with blue bangles—a vivid critique of authority.

Mahatab Rashid, a cartoonist at The Business Standard, whose work took centre stage at the exhibition, explained his motivation: "I, along with my friends, was involved in the protests. As a cartoonist, I felt bound to create something that spoke to the tyranny we were witnessing. When the Chhatra League brutally attacked my friends and fellow protesters, I felt an unstoppable urge to create. When they killed Abu Sayed the next day (July 16), I had no choice but to resist through my art."

Another of Rashid's cartoons, which became iconic, depicted a stout woman flying through the air, clinging to a rope with only one sandal on her feet. She flew above a wooden throne placed atop countless corpses. This character, seen repeatedly in Rashid's work, became symbolic of the oppressive forces within the movement.

Cartoonist Mehedi Haque used his art to strike directly at the authorities. "An artist's job is to do what's right at the right time. We paid a debt to the countless deaths and assaults suffered by cartoonists like Ahmed Kabir Kishore," Haque stated. In one of his artworks, a woman is shown fleeing with only one sandal on her feet, as hands throw trophies named "Muktijuddho" after her. His work captured the inevitable collapse of an oppressive regime, inspiring hope among the protesters.

Reflecting on his work, Haque explained, "As political observers, we know from history that nothing beats the mobilization of middle-class urban people who have nothing to lose. When they take to the streets, the government cannot subjugate their spirit."

Simu Naser, Founder and Editor of Earki and a curator of the exhibition, praised the unity and determination of the artists. "The first works of art came from cartoonists. Newcomers joined in, posting their works on social media and filling the pages of newspapers. Some were drawn anonymously, others bore signatures, but all of them spread across the internet and took their place in history," Naser said.

This exhibition, while only featuring a fraction of the political cartoons created during the movement, remains a tribute to the power of art in shaping resistance.

All the cartoonists featured in the exhibition, including, Abdullah Al Zunayed Shadat Mahbub, Mehedi Hasan, Eeha Nawar, Natasha Jahan, Purnota Sondhi, Raeid Hossen, Miskatun Jinat Tonni, Tuba Tanjum and many others only asked for only one thing and that is the end of censorship in their art.

Political cartoons have long served as powerful tools for challenging authority, exposing injustice, and mobilizing the masses. The exhibition highlights the essential role that these satirical artworks play in moments of resistance and revolution. However, censorship threatens to stifle this artistic form, as history shows that oppressive regimes often seek to silence the voices that challenge their power. The freedom to create and express without fear is fundamental to both art and society. When censorship prevails, it not only undermines artistic expression but also stifles the spirit of revolution, muting the voices that dare to speak truth to power.

muscle aches, backache, lack of energy, swollen lymph nodes and skin rash or lesions. Swelling of the lymph nodes is a distinctive feature of Mpox, according to the DGHS guideline.

According to the guideline, mpox spreads mostly in direct physical contact, liquid of vesicle and pustule, body fluid, sneezing, coughing and physical intercourse.

Those who have previously been vaccinated against smallpox are significantly protected from mpox infection. The mpox vaccine is not available, however, the smallpox vaccine is largely effective in combatting mpox.

The last time the smallpox vaccine was administered in the country was in 1980, according to DGHS.

"If someone has the symptoms of mpox or comes into contact with an infected person, or develops any symptoms within 21 days of travelling to a country where the disease has been reported, please contact 16263 or 10655," said the DGHS in a press release yesterday.

About the treatment of mpox, DGHS said that in most cases, the symptoms of mpox are relieved on their own, so specific treatment is not required for it.

The DGHS asked people to eat nutritious food and drink enough water if anyone is infected with mpox.

"Consult a doctor and take medicine if the mpox-related complications get worse," said the guideline.

service. The was made to retire while being on special duty (OSD), which is seen in the civil service as a punishment.

Meanwhile, Dr Abdur Rashid was appointed secretary to the education ministry. He stood first in the 1982 Bangladesh Civil Service exams, Public administration ministry sources said.

A former additional home secretary, he had been OSD for nearly seven years.

Meanwhile, Ehsanul Karim was made the secretary to the Road Transport and Highways Division.

Ehsanul was private secretary to Fakhruddin Ahmed, former chief adviser to the 2007-'08 caretaker government.

Ajmol Hossain Azad has been appointed as the secretary to the railways ministry while Nasimul Gani has been given the responsibility of the President's Office (Public Division).

Nasimul, a former private secretary to former Speaker and BNP leader Jamiruddin Sircar, was forced to retire on May 29, 2013. Before that, he had been OSD since the AL government came to power.

Meanwhile, the contractual appointment of Wahidul Islam Khan, secretary, (Public Division), President's Office, Bangabhaban, has been terminated.

The directors general of the Bangla Academy and the Shilpakala Academy also lost their contractual appointments.

The government also scrapped the contractual appointments of at least four officials at the foreign ministry.

Indian doctors go on strike their daughter was gang-raped.

One man, who worked at the hospital helping people navigate busy queues, has been detained.

However, Kolkata's police were accused by an angry public of mishandling the case and the city's High Court transferred the investigation to India's top Central Bureau of Investigation to "inspire public confidence".

Those in government hospitals across several states on Monday halted elective services "indefinitely", with multiple medical unions in both government and private systems backing the strikes.

The Indian Medical Association (IMA) escalated protests on Saturday morning with a 24-hour "nationwide withdrawal of services", and the suspension of all non-essential procedures.

"We ask for the understanding and support of the nation in this struggle for justice for its doctors and daughters," IMA chief R.V. Asokan said in a statement ahead of the strike.

The IMA called the killing "barbaric".

"The 36-hour duty shift that the victim was in and the lack of safe spaces to rest... warrant a thorough overhaul of the working and living conditions of the resident doctors," the IMA said in a statement.

Doctors are demanding the implementation of the Central Protection Act, a bill to protect healthcare workers from violence.

"There is a lack of proper infrastructure," said 29-year-old Akanksha Tyagi, a resident at the Lady Hardinge Medical College in New Delhi who took part in one of the multiple protests around the country.

"After working for 24-36 hours at a stretch, there's no proper place for us to rest," she said.

The strike disrupted outpatient services.

At Delhi's Ram Manohar Lohia public hospital, one of the city's busiest, many who had turned up for their scheduled appointments were turned away.

Shivdev Kumar, 50, had travelled over 20 kilometres (12 miles) with the tuberculosis reports of his daughter, only to find the doctor's room locked.

"I had no idea, otherwise I would not have such a long way," he said.

Prime Minister Narendra Modi demanded on Thursday swift punishment for those who commit "monstrous" deeds against women.

Sexual violence against women is a widespread problem in India -- an average of nearly 90 rapes a day were reported in 2022 in the country of 1.4 billion people.

For many, the gruesome nature of the hospital attack has invoked comparisons with the horrific 2012 gang rape and murder of a young woman on a Delhi bus.

That woman became a symbol of socially conservative India's failure to tackle sexual violence against women.

Her death sparked huge, and at times violent, demonstrations in Delhi and elsewhere.

Under pressure, the government introduced harsher penalties for rapists and the death penalty for repeat offenders.

Several new sexual offences were also introduced -- including for stalking -- and officials who refuse to register rape complaints can now be jailed.

Public univs 'reopen' today

"As far as we know, students of different universities raised some demands. These have to be resolved," he added.

Prof Tarikul Islam, acting registrar at Rajshahi University, said, "The order to reopen was issued to the VCs. But we have no VC here. We have not decided how to resume academic activities. We will decide once a VC is appointed."

Azizur Rahman Mukul, deputy registrar at Jahangirnagar University, said, "We are facing numerous challenges as several key administrative positions are vacant."

The government on July 16, closed all educational institutions amid student protests. Hasina resigned and fled the country on August 5 in the face of a mass upsurge.

But classes at public universities have been suspended since July 1 when teachers went on strike in protest of a new pension scheme.

Prof Akhtarul Islam, president of the Federation of Bangladesh University Teachers' Association, said, "We called off the strike and are ready to take classes."

President Mohammed Shahabuddin, also the chancellor of the public universities, on August 14 accepted the resignations of 16 VCs, five pro-VCs, and three treasurers.

The VCs who resigned are from Dhaka University, Jahangirnagar University, Rajshahi University, Bangladesh Agriculture University, Sher-e-Bangla Agriculture University, Islamic University, Begum Rokeya University, Chittagong University, Sheikh Hasina University, National University, Hajee Mohammad Danesh Science and Technology University, Bangamata Sheikh Fojilatunnesa Mujib Science and Technology University, Shahjalal University of Science and Technology, Dhaka University of Engineering and Technology, Khulna University of Engineering and Technology, Mawlana Bhashani Science and Technology University, Jagannath University, Chittagong University of Engineering and Technology, Jatiya Kabi Kazi Nazrul Islam University, Islamic University and Islamic Arabic University.

The government on July 16, closed all educational institutions amid student protests. Hasina resigned and fled the country on August 5 in the face of a mass upsurge.

"For smooth operation, VCs will be needed first. The government can temporarily give the responsibility to someone. The decision has to be prompt," said Prof Alamgir.

Others who resigned at different universities are six dormitory provosts and the entire proctorial body at DU; the proctor, 11 assistant proctors, the student adviser, and 62 others at RU; pro-VC, treasurer, entire proctorial body, all provosts and assistant provosts at SUST; pro-VC, registrar, a provost, the proctor, 13 assistant proctors, and two house tutors at JnU; pro-VC and treasurer at Islamic University; pro-VC and registrar at JU.

Former DU VC Prof SMA Faiz said, "Many people will be needed to fill the vacancies. But one needs the right and qualified individual. Unqualified persons should not be appointed."

All secondary schools and colleges are also set to reopen today after almost a month. Primary schools reopened on August 14.

Make all probe reports public

Noor Taposh, and Sheikh Selim were directly involved in the Pilkhana massacre. Others were also involved behind the scenes. If an independent investigation commission is formed, their names will also come up," Rakin alleged.

He further said that he was unaware of any historical precedent where a country's prime minister (Sheikh Hasina) conspired with a foreign nation to orchestrate the killing of 57 army officers in the capital.

Advocate Saquib Rahman, son of slain Col Quadrat Elahi Rahman Shafique, said two investigative committees were formed at that time. Lt Gen (retd) Jahangir Alam Chowdhury, who is currently serving as the Home Affairs Advisor to the interim government, headed one of the probe committees.

Saquib said that the report that was released to the media had been revised three times before its publication.

He called for the release of the entire report.

The killings at the Pilkhana headquarters of the Bangladesh Rifles (BDR) on February 25-26, 2009, which resulted in the deaths of 74 people, including 57 army officials, left the nation in shock.

The families of the victims requested that everyone refer to the event not as the "BDR Mutiny" but as the "BDR Massacre."

Among other demands, the families proposed that February 25 be officially recognised as "Shaheed Shena Dibosh" through an official gazette, with all fallen officers acknowledged as "Shaheed" (martyrs).

They also called for the national flag to be flown at half-mast every year on this day and for the inclusion of a chapter on the BDR Pilkhana tragedy in school textbooks, ensuring that future generations learn about the sacrifices made.

Furthermore, the families appealed to the interim government to ensure that no innocent former BDR soldiers remain imprisoned and to reinstate or compensate Bangladesh Army officers who lost their jobs for advocating for justice.

POST-COUP MYANMAR

US pledges to expand support to opposition

REUTERS, Washington

US officials met virtually with members of Myanmar's opposition movement on Friday and pledged to expand direct support to help a transition to civilian government and agreeing on the need to maintain pressure on the military junta, the State Department said.

News of the meeting came after Washington's regional rival China urged neighbouring countries to help war-torn Myanmar advance its peace and reconciliation process when its foreign minister met counterparts from Laos, Myanmar and Thailand.

A US statement said Friday's meeting involved State Department Counselor Tom Sullivan, USAID Assistant Administrator Michael Schiffer and leading members of Myanmar's pro-democracy National Unity Government, the National Unity Consultative Council, and key resistance organisations, the Karen National Union, Karenni National Progressive Party, and the Chin National Front.

Myanmar's state media said on Thursday that China had promised technical support to conduct a census, followed by an election, signalling Beijing's backing to a junta cornered by an armed rebellion and steadily losing ground.

Myanmar has been in turmoil since 2021 when the military ousted an elected civilian government in a coup, abruptly ending the impoverished country's tentative steps towards becoming a full-fledged democracy.

DROUGHT IN AFRICA

Nearly 68m suffering

REUTERS, Harare

About 68 million people in Southern Africa are suffering the effects of an El Nino-induced drought which has wiped out crops across the region, the regional bloc SADC said yesterday.

The drought, which started in early 2024, has hit crop and livestock production, causing food shortages and damaging the wider economies.

Heads of state from the 16-nation Southern African Development Community (SADC) were meeting in Zimbabwe's capital Harare to discuss regional issues including food security.

Some 68 million people, or 17 percent of the region's population, are in need of aid, said Elias Magosi, SADC executive secretary.

"The 2024 rainy season has been a challenging one with most parts of the region experiencing negative effects of the El Nino phenomenon characterised by the late onset of rains," he said.

It is Southern Africa's worst drought in years, owing to a combination of naturally occurring El Nino - when abnormal warming of the waters in the eastern Pacific changes world weather patterns - and higher average temperatures produced by greenhouse gas emissions.

Ukraine 'strengthening' positions in Russia

Says Zelensky; Germany to cut Ukraine military aid in 2025 budget

AFP, Kyiv

Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky yesterday said his forces were "strengthening" their positions in Russia's Kursk region, where Kyiv has been mounting a major ground offensive for more than 11 days.

His comments came a day after Moscow accused Ukraine of destroying a key bridge over a river in the border region, as Kyiv seeks to disrupt supply routes and the movement of Moscow's troops in the area.

Ukrainian army chief Oleksandr Syrsky "reported on the strengthening of the positions of our forces in the Kursk region and the expansion of stabilised territory", Zelensky said in a post on Telegram.

"As of this morning, we have replenished the exchange fund for our country," Zelensky said, referring to Russian soldiers Ukraine has captured to be used in future prisoner swaps.

"I thank all the soldiers and commanders who are taking Russian soldiers prisoner and thus bringing the release of our soldiers and civilians held by Russia closer," Zelensky said.

Kyiv claims to have taken control of more than 80 settlements in the lightning incursion, which caught the Kremlin off guard almost two and a half years into its full-scale invasion of Ukraine.

The Russian defence ministry said on Saturday it had pushed back Ukrainian forces near three settlements in the Kursk region, and was searching for "mobile enemy groups" trying to pierce deeper into the country.

Russian officials on Friday accused Ukraine of striking a strategically important bridge just a couple dozen kilometres away from fighting in the Kursk region.

The region's governor, Alexei Smirnov, said on Friday evening the bridge was in the Glushkovsky district, some 11 kilometres (seven miles) away from the border.

An aerial video published by Ukrainian air force commander Mykola Oleshchuk appeared to show the bridge being hit by a projectile at high speed before collapsing in a cloud of smoke.

"Ukrainian pilots are conducting precision strikes on enemy strongholds, equipment concentrations, as well as on enemy logistics centres and supply routes," he said on Telegram.

Russian foreign ministry spokeswoman Maria Zakharova said the bridge was "completely destroyed" and that "volunteers providing assistance to the evacuated civilian population were killed".

"All those responsible for these inhumane acts will be severely punished," she said.

Russia yesterday also accused Ukraine of dropping an explosive charge on a road near the occupied Zaporizhzhia nuclear power plant in southern Ukraine.

The plant, which was seized by Russia's forces early in the war, has come under repeated attacks that both sides have accused each other of carrying out.

Russia meanwhile attacked at least four Ukrainian regions yesterday, according to officials, including the northeastern region of Kharkiv, where prosecutors said shelling killed a 49-year-old woman.

While the incursion has delivered a major morale boost to Kyiv, it appears to have had little impact on the larger battles raging in Russian-occupied parts of eastern Ukraine.

Zelensky yesterday said there had been "dozens of Russian assaults" on Ukrainian positions near the towns of Pokrovsk and Toretsk, where Moscow has made a string of advances in recent weeks.

Thai ex-PM Thaksin gets royal pardon

REUTERS, Bangkok

Thailand's billionaire former Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra received a royal pardon shortening his parole by two weeks, his lawyer said yesterday, a day after his daughter was elected premier by parliament.

Thaksin has been at the heart of a two-decade power struggle between the Shinawatra family and its allies on the one hand, and, on the other, a nexus of royalists, generals and old-money families that have long wielded influence over Thai governments and institutions.

After a dramatic return last August from self-exile to avoid jail time in the wake of his overthrow in a 2006 military coup, Thaksin served six months in hospital detention, due to health reasons, before being released on parole in February.

After his return, he was sentenced to eight years in prison for abuse of power and conflicts of interest during his time in office from 2001 to 2006. His sentence was commuted to one year by King Maha Vajiralongkorn last September.

"Thaksin is among the prisoners that received the royal pardon" for prisoners in honour of the king's birthday last month, his lawyer, Winyat Chartmontri, told Reuters. "It will take effect on Sunday."

Parole, granted in February, was due to end at the end of the month, but was shortened to Sunday as part of the royal pardon, Winyat said.

Thaksin's daughter Paetongtarn Shinawatra, 37, was elected on Friday as Thailand's second female prime minister and the third Shinawatra to hold the office, winning with nearly two-thirds of the Thai parliament.

US PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN

Rivals to hold rallies in key state

AFP, Wilkes-Barre

Donald Trump and Kamala Harris are holding duelling campaign stops in the crucial battleground state of Pennsylvania this weekend, as new polling shows the US vice president making major gains ahead of her big moment at next week's Democratic National Convention.

Trump will hold a rally in the small town of Wilkes-Barre on Saturday, while Harris is taking her tour bus on several stops around Pittsburgh on Sunday before heading to the convention in Chicago.

The momentum in the White House race has shifted dramatically since President Joe Biden abruptly pulled out on July 21, with Harris's whirlwind entry energizing the Democratic Party base.

A survey by the New York Times and Siena College published Saturday had Harris storming back into contention in four critical battleground states that Trump had looked set to win comfortably against Biden.

The Republican has struggled to find an effective counter to the Harris surge, and the new poll will likely trigger further consternation in his campaign team, with the vice president now ahead in Arizona and North Carolina, and getting closer in Nevada and Georgia.

The stakes will be high for Trump to find some fresh impetus at Saturday's public rally, after a series of distinctly low-energy events held at his Florida resort home and a golf club he owns in New Jersey.

Unearth all banking sector irregularities

Bring those involved in financial crimes to book

Since the fall of the Awami League government, increasingly alarming information about the banking sector has begun to surface. Most recently, it was reported in this daily that Tk 45,000 crore is tied up in dubious loans. In a questionable practice, eight banks have provided loans to directors of other banks, posing considerable risks to the entire sector. According to their financial reports, loans totalling Tk 25,000 crore were exchanged among these eight banks for their directors by the end of 2023. In addition, four of these lenders provided around Tk 20,000 crore to the relatives of the bank directors. This means the total reciprocal loans sanctioned for these directors and their relatives amounted to Tk 45,000 crore, with most of these loans changing hands over the last five years.

It has been known for some time that the banking sector experienced massive irregularities under the AL government. However, the true extent of these irregularities—despite various issues being regularly reported—seems to be beyond anyone's wildest imagination. For example, these eight banks were known for their questionable practices and were allegedly linked to the recently ousted AL government. During Hasina's 15-year rule, powerful business groups with banking assets, including S Alam, Beximco, Nassa, and Sikder Group, thrived on murky politics and routinely bent banking rules, exposing the entire financial sector to serious risks. The names of these business groups have once again surfaced in relation to the irregularities that have occurred at these eight banks.

What is further concerning is that the combined contribution of the eight bank directors to the lenders' paid-up capital is only Tk 2,400 crore, or about five percent of the Tk 45,000 crore in loans they have taken from each other. Since most of these groups would have been unable to secure loans if their business practices and financial health had been properly assessed, and given that central bank rules prohibit a bank from lending to its own directors, they engaged in reciprocal lending. Moreover, many of these loans were approved based on the direct orders of the directors, with bank officials playing a minimal role, according to some mid-level bank officials. In other words, the bank directors essentially made up the rules as they pleased, putting depositors' and national interests at risk in the process.

However, it is unlikely that they could have carried out such risky manoeuvres without "managing" the regulator in one way or another. This represents another disastrous outcome of the politicisation of our regulatory authorities. Therefore, it is essential that the interim government continues to uncover such irregularities and identify those responsible for these corrupt lending practices. The truth about the health of our banking sector needs to be revealed, and those responsible for financial irregularities must be held accountable. Additionally, steps must be taken to protect depositors' interests and recover these loans from politically connected businesses and individuals.

When will Ctg elevated expressway open?

The CDA must answer for the delay

We are disappointed by the unexplained delay of the authorities in opening the much-anticipated elevated expressway in Chattogram, which is supposed to ease traffic congestion and boost the port city's economy. Even though eight months have passed since its inauguration by the former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina in November 2023 (when it was still incomplete), it remains uncertain when the elevated expressway will open to the public. The Chattogram Development Authority (CDA), which constructed the 16-kilometre-long expressway—from the port city's Lalkhan Bazar to Patenga—has remained silent about its opening. Although the project director hinted in March this year that the expressway would be partially opened to the public within two months, this did not happen. Now, in mid-August, the continued uncertainty about its opening has frustrated the people of Chattogram.

Unfortunately, like most other mega projects in the country, the Chattogram elevated expressway has also faced cost and time overruns.While the project was originally scheduled for completion by June 2020, its deadline has been extended twice—with its deadline set for June 2024 the last time. Naturally, this delay has significantly increased the project's cost, which rose from Tk 3,250 crore to Tk 4,298.95 crore. Moreover, a dispute over land acquisition among the CDA, Chattogram Port Authority, and railways further delayed the work. As a result, the CDA had to alter the expressway's original design.

We would like to ask: Why was the project hurriedly inaugurated if it couldn't be opened to the public? Why do such projects always face time and cost overruns? Why are issues like land acquisition not resolved before the start of the project? Why do we repeatedly encounter these questions about most such projects? We urge the interim government to take a strong stance to address these anomalies in project implementation.

Over the past few decades, a culture of inefficiency, incompetence and irregularities have plagued all our government institutions. And the CDA is no exception. It has a record of failure in many projects it undertook over the years—and it cannot continue in this manner. We urge the CDA to open the first elevated expressway in Chattogram as soon as possible. This will not only provide commuters with some relief from unbearable traffic congestion, but also reduce travel time and cost and hopefully usher in a new era of connectivity and trade in the port city.

Can the new leadership save the economy?

OPEN SKY

Dr Birupaksha Paul is professor of economics at the State University of New York in Cortland, US.

BIRUPAKSHA PAUL

It is welcome news that Dr Ahsan H Mansur is going to lead Bangladesh Bank (BB). Former BB governor and current finance advisor to the interim government, Dr Salehuddin Ahmed, will serve as a knowledgeable advisor on finance and banking. The recent addition of a prominent economist like Dr Wahiduddin Mahmud as another new advisor has created a golden opportunity to correct the course of the economy, which is currently in disarray. It would be equally encouraging if the government appoints another expert to lead the Bangladesh Securities and Exchange Commission (BSEC), to represent the country's capital market.

Finally, Dr Muhammad Yunus, head of the interim government and a globally recognised pro-poor growth economist, has the potential to create a powerful leadership team that can not only rescue the economy from a possible downturn, but also guide us toward recovery. Their first task is to address the three groups of looters: bank defaulters, tax dodgers, and money launderers—who have formed a "devil's triangle" and have been coddled by politicians in power, nearly ruining the country's institutions.

Never has this country seen such a scholarly leadership team for economic policymaking in its history. At times, BB governors were duly qualified, but often the finance ministers or leaders in the capital market were not. On other occasions, both governors and finance ministers were inadequately qualified, placing the wrong people in key positions. This situation weakened the leadership triangle and undermined the effectiveness of the economy.

We know that the leadership team during this interim period is likely to be short-lived, as pressure for new elections is mounting. However, people expect to see a series of reforms in recruitment policies to ensure that only qualified individuals can become BB governor, BSEC chair, or finance ministers—not merely those who curry favour with big-ticket bank looters or who are sycophantic to the regime. People hope that future elected governments will choose scholarly leaders, especially for key financial institutions, whom the public can respect and rely on.

Controlling inflation in the short term and addressing massive youth unemployment in the medium term are their two main challenges. The previous two governors, who questionably held the leading position at the central bank, have made the task for the new governor significantly more difficult. The primary hurdle is to bring clarity and accuracy to the definition of defaulted loans, which were reported as much lower than their actual amount due to looter-friendly definitions. For example, a loan was considered "regular" if only 5 to 10 percent of it was repaid. This is a mockery, and the previous regime approved it easily, primarily so that these defaulters can participate in the one-sided election.

The parliament has largely become a club of corrupt businesspeople who occupy 61 percent of the seats, with the remainder filled by retired bureaucrats, elderly party stalwarts who still crave power, and a few promising youths. Politics has corrupted central-bank policymaking. The finance minister from 2019 to 2023 orchestrated this definitional perversion to favour delinquents, and the past two governors merely complied with the finance minister's wishes without assessing any merit or ethics. The new governor will face resistance from the beneficiary groups when attempting to implement best global practices in loan administration. However, since the finance advisor is not affiliated with any business mafia, the governor will receive wholehearted support from Salehuddin Ahmed whenever corrective measures are undertaken.

Full transparency of information and data should be maintained within the pentagon of leaders to break the "devil's triangle." Governor Mansur is right to emphasise that he will take necessary steps to ensure that financial hooligans who siphoned off millions of dollars from the country face serious consequences. Since the interim government is not concerned with political popularity, it is crucial for it to reveal true figures on inflation, unemployment, defaulted loans, written-off loans, money trafficking, and revenue gaps. This transparency will aid other agencies and researchers in working effectively. Hiding data has caused serious damage to the economy, though ministers adopted this tactic to remain politically expedient.

This is the time to abolish the Financial Institutions Division at the ministry. Its establishment after 2009 has caused more harm than good by weakening the central bank and empowering finance ministry officials who often served politically connected top-ranking oligarchs, including those who closely supported the former prime minister. Moral hazards have reached such a point that making a U-turn will be one of the toughest tasks for the interim government. It is also crucial to establish "Revenue" as an independent ministry, as it represents more than 10 percent of GDP. This is a significant weak point in Bangladesh's finance sector that has been long ignored. Leading such a crucial department with just non-expert bureaucrat has proven ineffective and will continue to do so.

In other countries, defaulted loans rise when the economy performs poorly. Bangladesh's growth continued to rise until 2019, reaching nearly 8 percent. Growth has become lacklustre after Covid-19, not due to global factors but because of increased wilful defaults and rampant corruption across all sectors. Still, growth has hovered around 5 to 6 percent, which does not justify requests for loan rescheduling or default. The nature of defaulted loans varies widely based on ownership structure, indicating that they are primarily institutional and political in nature, rather than being related to the real economy.

The share of defaulted loans out of total outstanding loans is as low as 3.38 percent in foreign banks, while it is as high as 22 percent in private banks. The corresponding figure for public banks is abnormally high at 38.56 percent, vindicating that the issue is primarily one of poor governance and political looting. The new governor is expected to address this problem. All boards of directors at both public and private banks must be reshuffled, and the directorship law should be revoked.

Professor Rehman Sobhan mentioned in a seminar on the banking sector on July 7 this year that Bangladesh Bank (BB) enjoyed a rich tradition of having scholars as governors, such as Dr Mohammed Farashuddin, Dr Fakruddin Ahmed, Dr Salehuddin Ahmed, and finally Dr Atiur Rahman. This tradition collapsed in 2016, leading to less favourable results in the banking industry. However, with the appointment of Ahsan H Mansur as governor, we hope that BB will regain its knowledge-based leadership and that subsequent regimes will uphold this standard, which is crucial for the economy to thrive.

It could've been any one of us in Moumita's place

In cases of being subjected to violence, being the woman in the story is difficult. She is constantly at risk of getting her narrative hijacked by the nit-pickers, power-holders, so-called well-wishers, pacifiers, prestige-rescuers, and of course, men. As I had started writing this, I was still reeling from the news of Dr Moumita Debnath from the neighbouring country, who met her demise in the most gut-wrenchingly painful and inhumane way imaginable. Moumita was a trainee doctor on duty when she was brutally raped and murdered. Even in her final hours, she was denied the slightest ounce of decency. The pain they inflicted on her was put on display in cold blood, snipping some invisible wings here and there across borders, setting us back just a little further and serving us once again, a grotesque reminder of what awaits if we dare to "act too smart."

I don't think it is possible for the "dominant sex" to even begin to fathom how deep such a piece of news can cut a woman. Women live their lives watching over their shoulders everywhere they go because their struggles have added layers, layers that can deeply wound them. They cannot show their fear because that makes them weak, they cannot assert their strength because that suggests they are "asking to be taught a lesson." They walk on eggshells which say, "You asked for independence, there you have it" or "That's equality for you."

Women, no matter how old or young, are always on somebody's radar. It's terrifying how anyone from any part of society can have almost the same power over a woman and her choices as the men in her life. That is only because they are women; viewed as prey first, humans later. Women seeking help on social media, a platform frequented by many supposedly "woke" individuals, are often met with curses and conspiracies that seek to invalidate their struggles. Once a rumour starts spreading, the original incident is never viewed the same way again, and, ironically, in the end, women often find themselves apologising for the injustices done to them.

When it comes to providing a viable solution for women's safety, people are quick to prescribe home arrest, a change in the way they dress, and ultimately, fall back to despair over how the "system" functions. Animosity toward all matters feminine among the general public has always been critical, contributing to toxic masculinity and identity crises among many men who perhaps genuinely wanted to do the right thing. Returning to the idea that the tragic news of one woman can have a ripple effect, shaking every woman, if not every person, to the core, it's women who suffer the most in all of this. When they protest, it is easy to reduce them to noisy, opinionated, over-educated, and "feminist-type" cliches, what is not easy is to see past their demeanour and feel the pain it caused them. How their knees grow weak at the thought of that girl in whom every woman right now sees herself.

For every precautionary step a girl is taught to take before going out, every man should be trained to ensure that such precautions are never necessary for women. For every #MeToo statement, there should be 10 people who come forward pledging to protect all women in need, not just the ones in their own families.

This message should have been written in Bangla, and, if possible, in regional dialects. It should have been printed as leaflets, and distributed among the masses, who often remain hidden and are only occasionally disturbed by a woman "who didn't know her place." Rural areas, quiet alleys, busy markets, and crowded vehicles should be covered with posters until the message has been received.

Some women have this idea that speaking out makes them a "bad" girl, it makes them an accomplice to the rebel. This tendency has been an ancient tactic used to control the womenfolk. It has earned women the notorious labels of being prone to "cat-fights" or "being their own worst enemies." A "good" girl gets the degree, a "good" girl has a great husband, and a "good" girl is put on a pedestal because she said nothing. A "good" girl basically can have everything as long as she never questions anything. Were these "good" girls never victims of abuse? The answer is, almost every single one of them has had such an experience.

Perhaps we are still far away from freeing our stories from the grasp of patriarchy. However, our right to live an equal life, free of gender-based violence has been overdue for a long time. The next best time to advocate for it is now.

Canards of a prejudiced neighbour

ON THE SHORES OF (IN) JUSTICE

Dr CR Abrar
is an academic with an interest in human rights issues.

C R ABRAR

The July massacre and the consequent second liberation of Bangladeshis have taken the world by surprise. At a time when millions in Bangladesh are celebrating the overthrow of Hasina's brutal dictatorship, when several hundred families including those of Abu Sayed, Mugdho, and Faiyaaz, are beginning to sense that the wheels of justice have begun to roll, when various countries, international development and rights bodies, civil society organisations and the global media are beginning to absorb and appreciate the courage, tenacity, and commitment of the young heroes, various actors in Bangladesh's next door neighbour (political leadership and the mainstream media, in particular) are busy crafting a narrative denying and undermining the magnificent achievements of the new generation of "freedom fighters."

In the final days of Hasina's regime, the decision to unleash armed Awami goons on the defenceless protesters and the subsequent mobilisation of the security forces with the order to "shoot on sight" (duly executed on a number of occasions, killing scores of people), and the indiscriminate use of tear gas, sound grenade, armoured personnel carriers and helicopters to disperse and terrorise the protesters made it amply clear to the people of Bangladesh and discerning international observers that the Awami regime has reached its nadir. The state's myopic policy of resorting to intimidation and brute force only contributed to further hardening the resolve of the protestors. By August 3, their nine-point demand coalesced into one-point, the unconditional resignation of the government.

On the fateful day of August 5, the students' Dhaka siege programme in realisation of the one-point demand was countered by the state by imposing a stringent curfew backed by the threat of using lethal force. When the former prime minister ordered the siege be quashed "by any means," the armed forces' decision not to open fire on the unarmed protestors sealed the fate of the regime, leading Hasina to flee the country. While her departure triggered joyous celebrations all over the land, the news of killing of more than 100 people on the final two days let loose frenzied outrage, resulting in ransacking of the prime ministerial office and residence in Dhaka, and attacking and, in some instances, torching of the offices of the Awami League and homes and facilities of its leaders.

The violence that ensued was the result of a combination of outrage at the indiscriminate killing of fellow protestors and the venting of a long-drawn pent up frustration of a repressed, disenfranchised populace, who were left out of the "economic miracle" conjured by the regime and subjected to denial of fundamental rights including those of assembly, expression and dissent and also ill treatment, seizure of properties, denial of justice and humiliation by the ruling elite in cahoots with the state agencies.

The glorious struggle of the youth of Bangladesh that culminated in the overthrow of a despot through sacrificing several hundred lives received widespread felicitations from all over the world. Unity, resilience, and creativity demonstrated by the student leadership in steering through the movement against all odds became the topic for discussion in every quarter that value justice, freedom, and liberty, both at home and abroad. In contrast to such a dispensation of triumph and positive image of Bangladesh's new found freedom, the dominant and influential sections of Indian commentators (diplomats, strategic experts, and "Bangladesh observers") and that of the media conjured up a conspiracy theory claiming that the students' movement was being "manipulated," if not "steered" by opposition political parties, such as the Bangladesh National Party (BNP) and Jamaat-e-Islami.Nothing can be further from the truth.

The quota reform movement was an autonomous, organic movement of the students. Though it was initiated by the students of public universities, the atrocities committed against them by the ruling party thugs, blatantly aided by the members of law enforcement agencies, galvanised the students of schools, madrasas, colleges and private universities to join the ranks. As the casualties mounted as a result of trigger-happy response of the state, siblings, parents, guardians and mass people from all walks of life joined the students, swelling the ranks of the protesters. By then they had overcome the fear to face live ammunition. All along there was conscious effort by the student "coordinators" (leaders) not to provide the government any pretext to brand the movement as proxy of the opposition parties. During this entire episode, being mindful of likely public backlash for usurping the movement, political parties such as the BNP and Jamat-e-Islami had little option but to maintain a low profile, let alone had any opportunity to direct or manipulate it, as claimed by Delhi and Kolkata based pundits.

Some Indian observers also beat the drum that the Pakistani spy agency, ISI, had a hand in orchestrating the protests to dislodge the Hasina government. Others have pointed fingers at China. If indeed such collusion existed, is it not incumbent on those observers to furnish credible evidence to establish the veracity of such claims?

Collective leadership with designated coordinators in major educational institutions and districts was a distinguishing feature of the movement. As and when top leaders got arrested, detained, or were forced to hide, the next tier of coordinators assumed the role and steered the struggle, often by declaring programmes that ensured the continued engagement of the masses. The unflinching commitment to unity and resilience frustrated all efforts (detention, abduction, and torture) of the state agencies to bring about a fissure in the leadership. After the state violence reached its zenith, the one-point demand for the resignation of the government was taken by the students and the students alone. Therefore, to ascribe the success of the protest movement to opposition political parties or external elements not only reflects the stark failure to recognise the depth of the students' agency and ingenuity, it also manifests the wretched level of understanding of the "Bangladesh observers" of India as to the ground realities of Bangladesh politics.

The claims of widespread violence targeting the Hindu minority were another issue of concern of the prejudiced Indian media and the intellectual elite. The matter also featured in the Indian prime minister's message to the newly installed chief adviser of Bangladesh. It is true, that public backlash against the Awami League leaders and activists engaged in excesses during the party's 15-year rule did impact on some members of the Hindu community. On August 9, Bangladesh Hindu Buddhist Christian Oikya Parishad reported that 205 cases of persecution, which includes the burning of temples, sexual assault, and even murders, on minority communities took place in 52 districts since the former prime minister's resignation occurred four days prior.

However, there is also burgeoning evidence that the issue was blown out of proportion by the vested quarters. Images of a prominent Hindu cricketer's home being torched, of Hindu women being gang raped and killed; of Hindu community members trying to cross the border en masse to escape engulfing violence that was rife in the social media were subsequently proven to be fake.

Fact checkers have found that many of the fake posts on social media about "widespread persecution" of Hindus in Bangladesh were posted from various Indian accounts. They noted, "While some attacks on Hindus did occur, houses were also vandalised and burned in Muslim communities." Instead of viewing them as incidents of "communal violence" the attacks were targeted at Awami League leaders and supporters rather than at individuals based on their religious identity. For political expediency "these events were given a communal colour rather than being portrayed as politically motivated." After reaching out to sources in some of the affected districts, Al Jazeera "discovered that the attacks on Hindu households were not driven by religious identity but by political affiliations." The BBC's fact-checking unit, BBC Verify, also arrived at a similar conclusion.

The prejudiced Indian intellectual elite and the media outlets' hypocrisy is palpable by their collective silence about the atrocities committed by the Awami League goons and members of the law enforcement agencies. From their interventions in the TV talks shows, opinion pieces and statements, it is obvious that the killing of hundreds of unarmed youths by illegal use of firearms by Hasina government and injury of several thousand have hardly been reported and thus far failed to stir the conscience of these champions of liberalism who interestingly have passionately condemned the mob vandalism of private and state property, including statues of Sheikh Mujibur Rahman.

Such insensitive and undesirable reaction by the mainstream Indian intellectual elite and its cohort media to the July massacre should not come as a surprise to ordinary Bangladeshis. They are well aware that it was the Indian government that continued to provide critical support to a regime that usurped power by conducting three sham exercises (falsely dubbed as general elections) in 2014, 2019, and 2024. Time has come for the Indian political establishment to discard its myopic policy of trying to shore up the fallen regime that was overthrown by a popular revolution of freedom loving Bangladeshis, particularly the young people, who aspire to be treated with dignity and respect by its neighbour.

The tasks ahead for Bangladesh

As Bangladesh is settling after the unprecedented events over the past weeks—the mass movement, hundreds of lives lost, the overthrow of Awami League government—one of the critical questions before us is what next. What needs to be done in today's Bangladesh, as the country is trying to move forward? The actions needed has an immediate perspective, a short-run one, as well as a medium-term and a long-term context.

Immediately, the broken structure of the law and order-enforcing police administration must be restored. No doubt increasing politicisation of the police force over time, and the recent police actions led to much anger and hostility of the common mass against the police. As a result, the police force is in a state of fear.

Second, social resistance to all kinds of violence must be ensured and legal actions taken. One aspect of this violence is the destruction of public property and buildings, which is not desirable because they belong to people. Measures must be taken to avoid all kinds of revengeful acts and looting. The other kind of violence manifests in the attacks on the lives and properties of minorities, especially religious minorities, and their places of worship. It is gratifying to observe that the collective and concerted efforts of student-public alliances are ensuring the safety of minorities and the protection of their properties and places of worship. Such efforts need to be consolidated.

One of the critical questions before us is what next.

Third, the destruction of historic national symbols, such as pictures and photos, paintings, sculptures, and museums, can never be beneficial. They are part of national heritage and identity. To understand where we want to go as a nation it is essential to know where we have come from. Setting fire to the Bangabandhu Memorial Museum on Dhanmondi Road Number 32, the desecration of sculptures of the Father of the Nation, and other notable figures represent the destruction of our historical journey as a nation. These are unpardonable crime, which deserves due punishment.

One immediate task of the interim government would be to undertake an objective inquiry into the killings over the past weeks, to bring them to justice and punish them. Similarly, actions should be taken against those who are responsible for the destruction of public properties, symbols of national history and national heritage.

After the immediate actions, the first task to be undertaken in the short-term involves the creation of a democratic, transparent and participatory platform for citizens' dialogue. In such dialogues, there has to be an effective representation of all groups in the society—women, young people, indigenous peoples, persons with disabilities, people of third gender, etc.

Those dialogues may have three aspects: one, a political dialogue which should raise questions such as should the future parliament of Bangladesh have two houses; should there be proportional representation in it; should there be term limits on government, etc. There can be public debates in the context of constitutional reforms as well—issues of reverting to the 1972 Constitution of Bangladesh or formulating a new constitution, reflective of the hopes and aspirations of the new generation. The latter issue, however, would require a constituent assembly.

Economic issues may constitute the second aspect of the public debate. The LDC graduation of Bangladesh would possibly be finalised during the tenure of the interim government, and as a result, some of its determinants would be relevant for them. Therefore, the interim government has to confront, in the scenario of changed realities, the issue of Bangladesh's readiness for the graduation, the negotiations with our trading partners, and formulation of a blueprint for protecting the interests of the country.

Issues of social harmony, human rights, social inequities, social violence and terrorism may be at the core of the third aspect of public debates. Dialogues on poverty, deprivation and issues of marginalisation may represent the major part of the social inequities. There should be an open and honest discussion on communal harmony, issues of minority insecurities, and the responsibilities of the majority.

While short-term reforms are required in various areas, they must align with the future medium-term reforms. One critical reform in the short-term should be in police administration so that even in the short-term, an apolitical, people-friendly, public service-oriented police force can be constituted. The other necessary short-term institutional reform is required in such entities as the election commission. The independence and neutrality of the commission must be enhanced to the highest level so that it can duly perform the mandates bestowed on it. Three, in the financial sector, short-term reformatory measures may be undertaken to combat money laundering and wealth exodus, which would increase the country's resource-base.

Because of the changed realities, there may be a need for reconstructing the collaborative and trusting relationship with various countries and international organisations. The interim government will have to perform these tasks in the short-term.

The most important task in the short-term will be to organise, on the basis of public debates and dialogues mentioned earlier, a free, fair, neutral and participatory election. In fact, this would be the prime responsibility of the interim government, which should delegate the reformed election commission this responsibility and oversee the election process.

In the medium-term, Bangladesh would need multidimensional reforms. It is well known that the political and economic institutions of the country have been increasingly suffering from fundamental institutional weaknesses due to years of neglect and politicisation of the system, making these institutions less and less effective. An important mandate of the post-election representative government will be institutional reforms in the country.

The scope of the reforms will have to be widespread. On one hand, such reforms would encompass the independence of the judiciary, the rule of law, and various aspects of public administration, e.g. law and order enforcing institutions, the Public Service Commission, the Anti-Corruption Commission. On the other hand, they would also be in different economic and social areas. The economic sector would include the banking system, monetary and fiscal policies, the tax structure etc. Reforms are also necessary in economic institutions such as the Bangladesh Bank and the Planning Commission. Ensuring a structure and a culture of transparency and accountability should be at the core of the reform so the evils of nepotism and corruption can be combatted. In the social sector, reforms have to happen in the education and health sectors.

One critical aspect of the mass movement is the focus on a disparity-free Bangladesh. In our society, disparities have many faces and exist not only in outcomes among various socioeconomic groups and regions but are present in opportunities, in education, health and in employment. In fact, disparities in employment were one of the major complaints of young people. In the medium-term, different reformatory measures are essential to reduce the multidimensional disparities in Bangladesh.

One of the most important tasks in the medium-term would be formulating a long-term vision for Bangladesh, which would identify the path for tomorrow's Bangladesh. Today's youth would be the main architect of that vision, which would motivate and guide the future of Bangladesh. Today's young people would no longer remain the "future of the country," rather they would be the "present of the country."

Let us conclude with three observations. First, an interim government cannot be an alternative to an elected government. In that context, the tenure, mandate and scope of the work of an interim government must be limited and must be duly defined. A large part of the citizens of Bangladesh feel that the tenure of an effective interim government should not be more than two years.

Two, whether election first and reform second or whether it should be the other way round is an unproductive question. Since the fundamental reforms are to be undertaken by the elected representatives of the people, election should precede fundamental reforms. This is because, without the approval of an elected government, fundamental reforms would not receive the required political legitimacy.

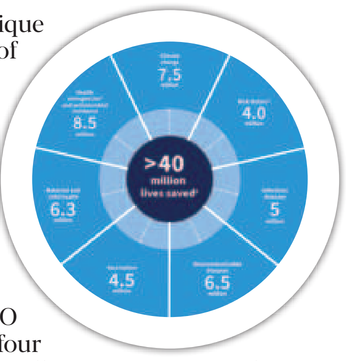
Finally, there are some interim proposals for reforms and actions as Bangladesh moves forward. There should be more dialogues, debates and discussions on such proposals. The intention of this article is to initiate that process.

A lifeline for global health

The World Health Organisation (WHO) is taking bold steps to tackle global health challenges with the launch of its first-ever investment round. This innovative approach aims to secure steady and flexible funding for WHO's core work from 2025 to 2028.

Supported by a coalition of nations, including France, Germany, Norway, Brazil, and South Africa, this initiative highlights the critical need for fully funding WHO's efforts. The investment round is not just about raising funds—it is about ensuring that these resources are used efficiently to make a tangible impact on global health.

Through the strategy for the next four years (2025-2028), the Fourteenth General Programme of Work (GPW 14), WHO will catalyse action to deliver results in the final push to the health-related SDGs, addressing global health challenges, setting the agenda on access and innovation, accelerating universal health coverage through a primary health approach, and better supporting countries in their differentiated needs based on the world's best standards.



WHO's unique infrastructure of data, country coordination, and priority-setting provides the conditions for global and regional health partnerships to set and drive investment and progress. WHO will, over the next four years, save at least 40 million lives through concrete actions, including:

- increasing the number of vaccines delivered to priority countries;
- providing access to health services to more than 150 million people in humanitarian settings in 30 countries;
- bringing solar electrification to 10,000 health facilities;
- supporting 55 countries in educating and employing 3.2 million health workers;
- helping 84 countries reach targets for eliminating malaria, mother-to-child HIV transmission, and other diseases;
- strengthening access to timely and reliable health data; and
- prequalifying 400 health products per year

With a fully and sustainably funded WHO, decisive steps can be taken in the next 4 years to tackle emergencies and outbreaks that threaten lives and jeopardise global health security, to reduce disease, and to continue working to improve well-being for everyone, especially for the most vulnerable.

Global health emergency declared for Mpox

STAR HEALTH DESK

The World Health Organisation (WHO) Director-General Dr Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus has determined that the upsurge of mpox in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and a growing number of countries in Africa constitutes a public health emergency of international concern (PHEIC) under the International Health Regulations (2005) (IHR).

Dr Tedros's declaration came on the advice of an IHR Emergency Committee of independent experts who met earlier in the day to review data presented by experts from WHO and affected countries. The Committee informed the Director-General that it considers the upsurge of mpox to be a PHEIC, with potential to spread further across countries in Africa and possibly outside the continent.

In declaring the PHEIC, Dr Tedros said, "The emergence of a new clade of mpox, its rapid spread in the eastern DRC, and the reporting of cases in several neighbouring countries are very worrying. On top of outbreaks of other mpox clades in the DRC and other countries in Africa, it is clear that a coordinated international response is needed to stop these outbreaks and save lives."

This PHEIC determination is the second in two years relating to mpox. Caused by an orthopoxvirus, mpox was first detected in humans in 1970, in the DRC. The disease is considered endemic to countries in central and west Africa.

In July 2022, the multi-country outbreak of mpox was declared a PHEIC as it spread rapidly via sexual contact across a range of countries where the virus had not been seen before. That PHEIC was declared over in May 2023 after there had been a sustained decline in global cases.

Mpox has been reported in the DRC for more than a decade, and the number of cases reported each year has increased steadily over that period. Last year, reported cases increased significantly, and already the number of cases reported so far this year has exceeded last year's total, with more than 15,600 cases and 537 deaths.

The emergence last year and rapid spread of a new virus strain in the DRC, clade 1b, which appears to be spreading mainly through sexual networks, and its detection in countries neighbouring the DRC is especially concerning and one of the main reasons for the declaration of the PHEIC.

Several outbreaks of different clades of mpox have occurred in different countries, with different modes of transmission and different levels of risk.

The two vaccines currently in use for mpox are recommended by WHO's Strategic Advisory Group of Experts on Immunisation and are also approved by WHO-listed national regulatory authorities, as well as by individual countries including Nigeria and the DRC.

The Director-General triggered the process for emergency use listing for mpox vaccines, which will accelerate vaccine access for lower-income countries that have not yet issued their own national regulatory approval. Emergency Use Listing also enables partners, including Gavi and UNICEF, to procure vaccines for distribution.

WHO is working with countries and vaccine manufacturers on potential vaccine donations and coordinating with partners through the interim Medical Countermeasures Network to facilitate equitable access to vaccines, therapeutics, diagnostics, and other tools.

To allow for an immediate scale-up, WHO has released US$ 1.45 million from the WHO Contingency Fund for Emergencies and may need to release more in the coming days. The organisation appeals to donors to fund the full extent of the needs of the MPOX response.

New HIV prevention breakthrough

Globally, women account for nearly half of all HIV infections, yet they remain under-represented among those using pre-exposure prophylaxis (PrEP). A recent study published in The New England Journal of Medicine, PURPOSE-1, sheds light on a promising new approach to HIV prevention: twice-yearly lenacapavir.

In this manufacturer-sponsored study, nearly 5,340 sexually active cisgender women in sub-Saharan Africa were divided into three groups: one received lenacapavir injections every six months, while the others took daily oral PrEP medications—FTC-tenofovir alafenamide (FTC/TAF) or FTC-tenofovir disoproxil fumarate (FTC/TDF).

The results are striking. The incidence of HIV among those receiving lenacapavir was zero, in stark contrast to the background rate of 2.41 per 100 person-years and the rates in the FTC/TAF (2.0) and FTC/TDF (1.7) groups. Adherence to oral PrEP was notably low, as many who contracted HIV were not using these daily medications.

Individuals who acquire HIV while on long-acting cabotegravir may exhibit a delayed immune response and low viral loads—a phenomenon known as long-acting early viral inhibition (LEVI). Some of these individuals develop resistance to cabotegravir.

The impressive results of lenacapavir could signal a new era in HIV prevention. If it proves effective in other populations, it may soon be approved by the U.S. FDA for PrEP. With broad and affordable access, this breakthrough could be pivotal in ending the HIV epidemic.

Stroke rehabilitation by occupational therapy

RABEYA FERDOUS

Stroke is the second leading cause of death in the world. After stroke, patients face different challenges to cope with the new situation. Stroke rehabilitation is the crucial part of treating the patient appropriately.

A group of healthcare professionals like neurologist, occupational therapist, physiotherapist, speech and language therapists, social workers, acupressure specialist, and nurses work for it.

Occupational therapy is a client-centred health profession that involves ongoing assessments to understand what activities you can do (and those you want to do), including any current limitations, your goals/motivations, and also to offer advice/techniques about how to do something more easily and safely.

Stroke is nearly linked with proper care and supervision. According to a study, about 43% of adults with strokes have neurological deficits. Rehabilitation after stroke is very crucial to minimise the disability. Early rehabilitation after stroke improves the limitations in performing activities of daily living (ADLs).

So, rehabilitation is not possible without occupational therapy. The vital aim of an occupational therapist is to prepare the disabled people to work in different ways. According to duration and patient's condition, the occupational therapist provides treatment in the following phase:

1. Acute Phase
- Positioning
- Maintaining joint range of motion
- Pressure care
- Splinting

2. Active phase
- Bed mobility
- Bed sitting
- Lying, sitting
- Transferring practice

3. Rehab phase
- Retraining ADL's
- W/C skills (if needed)
- Functional mobility
- Advance transferring
- Follow up on the role and responsibilities
- Career education and training

When occupational therapy is needed, it depends on the severity of the stroke. The overall goal of this therapy is to relearn everyday activities that have been lost after stroke. Most of the patients receive physiotherapy, but they do not take occupational therapy. That is why their improvement in daily activities may hamper. When any patient have difficulty doing daily activities after stroke, then contact a qualified occupational therapist.

The writer is an occupational therapist at the Department of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation at the National Institute of Neurosciences and Hospitals (NINS&H). Email: rabeya1988@gmail.com

Aiming to bridge the global health equity gap

The health equity gap remains a pressing issue, particularly affecting people in lower-income countries. These nations, despite shouldering 70% of the world's disease burden, receive only a fraction of global health investments. The consequences are dire, with reduced access to quality medicines and care leading to over 5 million deaths annually in low- and middle-income countries.

In response to this critical issue, Pfizer has launched the Accord for a Healthier World, an initiative designed to tackle these disparities. Through the accord, Pfizer pledges to provide its entire portfolio of medicines and vaccines on a not-for-profit basis to 45 lower-income countries. This commitment is a significant step towards improving access to essential health resources where they are most needed.

To ensure these resources effectively reach those in need, the accord involves collaboration with governments and stakeholders in eligible countries. The focus is on exploring comprehensive solutions to overcome system-level barriers that hinder patient access. This includes pursuing more efficient regulatory pathways, enhancing supply chain logistics, and advancing health workforce training and development.

The ultimate goal of Pfizer's Accord for a Healthier World is to address the multifaceted challenges that limit access to care and to align with each country's national health priorities. By addressing these barriers, Pfizer aims to significantly improve patient access and contribute to closing the global health equity gap.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

Are schools meeting students' dietary needs?

FARAH DIBA

You are what you eat! The age-old phrase holds the idea that health, happiness, well-being, and a sense of contentment are inseparably interconnected with what we eat.

Modern people lack a strong relationship with food. Children, are now consuming food that is unhealthy and comes with minimal to zero nutrition. In other words, we have made a recipe for disaster for children's health.

The Bangladesh Demographic and Health Survey 2022 found that about 50% of children aged 6–23 months consume unhealthy foods like soft drinks and processed foods high in salt and sugar. This means over 2.3 million children in this age group eat unhealthy foods.

When these children transition to schools, they are further bombarded with unhealthy foods, as most schools offer third-party-sourced food items that lack the right nutrition blend for students. The shift towards more processed and fast foods over traditional healthy options indicates that school canteens are failing to meet the nutritional needs of students as well as potentially hindering their educational outcomes and long-term health. What children consume affects their physical health, mental development, mood, and learning capabilities. Eating habits that are built at a young age become a lifestyle well into adulthood.

The ideal calorie intake of students aged 2-16 is around 1,400-1,600 (age 2-4), 1,500-1,700 (age 5-10), and 1,400-2,400 overall (age 2-16). Calorie need varies based on a child's age, sex, and activity level. To meet the calorie and nutrient requirements, children need to eat a range of foods daily in the recommended amounts from each of the five food groups: vegetables, fruit, cereals, poultry, and dairy products. School meals are a major source of daily calorie and nutrient intake for students, and that is why schools must monitor the nutritional quality of these meals to ensure students receive the necessary vitamins, minerals, and macronutrients.

In addition to teaching about the value of nutrition in the classroom, schools are responsible for providing nutritious food in the canteen.

Schools need to emphasise providing an energy-focused breakfast to fuel students for the day ahead and a protein, vitamin, and mineral-rich lunch for brain, concentration, and memory development. Most importantly, as one of the biggest contributors to a child's growth, schools should be mindful of students' allergies, removing mushrooms, beef, brinjal, nuts, shrimp, etc., which are known to be common allergens.

The government of Bangladesh is planning to reintroduce midday meals at primary schools in 150 upazilas after a gap of 2 years, aimed at supporting the physical and cognitive development of underprivileged students. The commendable initiative will provide nutritious meals, guaranteeing these children receive the essential nutrients they need to thrive.

Taking inspiration from the government, private schools can also partner with nutritionists who will give guidance on meal choices and nutritional values, helping to create a comprehensive nutrition policy for each school. This policy should be strictly followed to ensure that students receive well-balanced, nutrient-rich meals. After all, a clean and nutrient-rich diet comprising whole foods helps students build cells that work, learn, and live better. For students to feel healthy, they must eat healthy.

Unveiling hidden risks: Maternal obesity and sudden infant death

In the quest to safeguard infant health, uncovering hidden risks is paramount. One significant concern that has emerged is the impact of maternal obesity on infant outcomes. As obesity rates among expectant mothers rise, understanding its implications for infant health becomes increasingly important.

A recent nationwide study in the US sheds light on this critical issue. Utilising data from the CDC's National Centre for Health Statistics, researchers explored the connection between maternal obesity and sudden unexpected infant death (SUID). The study, published in JAMA Paediatrics, covering birth cohorts from 2015 to 2019, provides compelling insights into how varying degrees of maternal obesity can affect infant risk.

The findings reveal that infants born to mothers with higher levels of obesity face a greater risk of SUID. This risk escalates with more severe obesity.

These findings underscore the importance of addressing maternal obesity as a critical factor in preventing SUID. The research highlights a need for targeted interventions and support for expectant mothers.

Mushfiqur prepares for a new experience in Tests

SPORTS REPORTER

In a Test career spanning over 19 years, Mushfiqur Rahim has accomplished more in the red-ball format than most Bangladeshis.

In his long career, which began in May of 2005 at the age of 18, the wicketkeeper-batter has emerged as the country's greatest accumulator of runs in Tests (5676 runs), has featured in the highest number of Test matches (88) and has Test centuries in five countries, most by a Bangladeshi.

At 37, well into the twilight stage of his career, Mushfiqur's chances of experiencing new challenges in Test cricket are slimmer compared to younger players like Zakir Hasan or Shadman Islam.

But in one sense, the veteran batter and the two youngsters mentioned above are on equal terms. Just like Zakir and Shadman, Mushfiqur is right now in Pakistan for the first time as part of the Bangladesh squad for the two-Test series, beginning with the first Test in Rawalpindi on August 21.

"This is my first time in Islamabad. It is beautiful. The facilities are also quite great," Mushfiqur said in a clip sent by the Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) yesterday.

Mushfiqur has played Tests in eight countries including Bangladesh. The two notable omissions in his resume are Australia and Pakistan.

Not having played a Test in Australia is a common feature in the careers of all active Bangladeshi cricketers barring Mashrafe Bin Mortaza, as the Tigers have not toured Down Under for a Test series since 2003.

Mushfiqur did have an opportunity to play Tests in Pakistan in 2020 when the Tigers last toured the country.

However, at that time the wicketkeeper-batter had opted out of the series, citing concerns over safety. He was the only Bangladeshi player who refused that tour.

Mushfiqur, however, has played white-ball matches for Bangladesh in Pakistan before, having taken part in the 2008 and 2023 editions of the Asia Cup, playing a total of seven ODIs.

Mushfiqur was amongst the five players of the 16-member Test squad that went to Pakistan ahead of time to take part in Bangladesh 'A' team's first four-day match against Pakistan Shaheens in Islamabad, which ended in a draw on Friday, as part of preparation for the upcoming series.

However, those plans got dented a bit owing to poor weather during the four-day game and to make matters worse, the right-hander also copped a blow on his finger in a net session, which kept him from batting in the second innings.

Limited involvement in the build-up to the series seems to have only made Mushfiqur more eager to make his first Test experience in Pakistan more memorable.

"We wanted to come here and have some sessions before the rest of the Test side comes... The training was interrupted due to a couple of rainy days. So, we couldn't properly practise. In the first couple of days, we only had one net session and it was also not a proper one.

"I tried my level best [in the match], but the first innings it didn't go our way. I hurt my fingers in the nets so I didn't bat in the second innings. Hopefully, I will recover very soon and will play the first Test," he added.

Rabby guides HP into semis

SPORTS REPORTER

Mahfuzur Rahman Rabby's unbeaten 13-ball 32 blitz powered Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) High Performance to a three-wicket win over Perth Scorchers and sealed them a place in the semifinal of the nine-team Top End T20 series in Darwin, Australia yesterday.

Rabby's knock, which included a couple of fours and sixes each, was supported by skipper Akbar Ali's 35 off 33 balls and opener Jishan Alam's run-a-ball 26, which helped their side reach 130-7 in 19.3 overs.

Perth pacer Matthew Kelly had rocked HP with early strikes and finished with figures of three for eight from his four overs, however, he could not eke out a victory for his side.

Earlier, fielding first, the HP restricted Perth to 129-5 with Ripon Mondol and Rakibul Hasan claiming two wickets each.

Perth opener Teague Wyllie hit the lone half-century of the match, making a run-a-ball 56.

Chasing 130, the HP were reduced to 15-3 in 5.4 overs after Kelly removed Tanzid Tamim (one), Parvez Hossain Emon (0) and Ariful Islam (two) in quick successions.

HP were staring at defeat when Rabby came to the middle as the eighth batter of the innings, with his side needing 41 runs off 23 balls. He smacked 20 runs in the 18th over and hit a four in the next to guide his side home.

HP will face Northern Territory in the first semifinal today.

Travel warning puts WC hosting in jeopardy

SPORTS REPORTER

The chance for Bangladesh to host the Women's T20 World Cup in October this year hinges on the withdrawal of travel advisories from four participating teams: India, Australia, England, and New Zealand.

"Being the host nation, we are regularly communicating with the ICC [International Cricket Council] regarding this issue, and even in our last communication yesterday [Friday], they expressed concern over the travel advisories from four participating nations," said a BCB official, who is maintaining the communication, on condition of anonymity.

These four countries issued travel advisories following a massive student-led movement, which ultimately resulted in the resignation of former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina.

"See, if these countries don't withdraw their travel advisories, there is no chance for us to host this event. While Australia initially advised reconsidering travel plans to Bangladesh, it now suggests 'do not travel to Bangladesh.' So, you can understand the situation," he said.

"Time is running out, and the ICC will not wait long because there is a huge risk of financial setbacks if we ultimately fail to host the tournament due to security reasons."

A final decision is expected to be made by the ICC board on August 20.

According to the cricket website ESPNcricinfo, Zimbabwe has emerged as one of two options being considered to host the event, which is due to start on October 3. The UAE is the other option being considered, after India ruled itself out.

"Actually, the ICC always selects an alternative host nation for any global event, but unfortunately, that's not the case for this tournament, and that's the reason they are now searching for a host country," informed a BCB director.

Footballers demand BPL with all clubs

SPORTS REPORTER

A significant number of footballers from various clubs, including those at risk of missing the upcoming season, urged the Bangladesh Football Federation (BFF) yesterday to convince clubs to form squads.

Nearly 50 players from top-tier clubs, under the banner of "Professional Football Players," held a press briefing at the BFF House and presented a seven-point demand list to general secretary Emran Hossain Tushar.

Their demands include deferring the transfer window, holding the Bangladesh Premier League (BPL) with all clubs participating and without foreign players, and arranging a meeting with the sports adviser of the interim government as soon as possible.

While none of the 12 clubs slated to join the BPL have officially notified the BFF of their intent to withdraw, insiders from at least two clubs remain pessimistic about participation. Several clubs had requested the BFF to defer the August 19 cut-off date for pre-season transfers, citing difficulties in securing funds due to a lack of sponsors following the ouster of the Awami League-led government on August 5.

After repeated requests, the world football governing body, FIFA, agreed to extend the cut-off date to August 22.

However, with only four days left until the extended deadline and with most clubs far from securing their squads, it is highly unlikely that the BPL will feature all 12 teams in the upcoming season. That is why the players have urged authorities to ensure that all the clubs participate.

Former national team goalkeeper Ashraful Islam Rana, who played for Chittagong Abahani last season, said they are "willing to play even with a cut in wages" while urging sponsors not to back out.

Raihan Hasan asked what will happen to "100-120 players as three or four clubs don't want to form teams."

When contacted, Chittagong Abahani manager Arman Aziz told The Daily Star that he had called the club president, Shamsul Alam Chowdhury, yesterday, but the call was not picked up. The former national team footballer also said that he heard the club president had picked up a call from the BFF in the afternoon, saying they were still willing to participate in the league. Shamsul, however, could not be reached by The Daily Star for a comment on the issue.

While there is still hope for Chittagong Abahani, the fate of Sheikh Jamal and Sheikh Russel, and the players who were in the process of going to these clubs, hangs in the balance.

A source inside Sheikh Russel said that despite the withdrawal of their chief sponsors, they were intent on forming a squad, but the main roadblock is political. He added that it is highly unlikely the club could participate in the league under its current name, the change of which would be a long and arduous process.

BFF general secretary Emran gave the footballers some assurance, saying he would forward the letter to the professional league committee to decide on a course of action. He also said they would try to arrange a meeting by today with Asif Mahmud, the sports adviser to the interim government, where representatives of the players would be present.

Need to help Mbappe adapt: Ancelotti

AFP, Madrid

With Kylian Mbappe set to make his La Liga debut for Real Madrid on Sunday against Real Mallorca, coach Carlo Ancelotti said the superstar needs to adapt to his new club.

The France captain scored on his long-awaited first Madrid appearance as Los Blancos beat Atalanta to win the UEFA Super Cup on Wednesday.

The 25-year-old striker, who arrived at the end of his PSG contract, was not at his best but finished lethally after Fede Valverde sent the reigning Spanish and European champions ahead.

"Mbappe is an extraordinary talent, we have to help him adapt as quickly as possible," Ancelotti told a news conference Saturday ahead of the team's opening La Liga clash.

"He has started well in the dressing room, very focussed, with humility."

Mbappe was asked if he was planning to score 50 goals this season after the Super Cup triumph and the forward said there was "no limit" to what he might achieve.

Ancelotti said he was avoiding setting a target for the former PSG hitman, whose arrival at his dream club Madrid was years in the making.

"I will never tell a player how many goals he has to score, what I ask of them is to give everything they have for the team, nothing more," added the Italian coach. "Everybody has their qualities, whether they are technical, tactical or motivational, and have to harness them for the team."

City's unprecedented quest begins at chaotic Chelsea

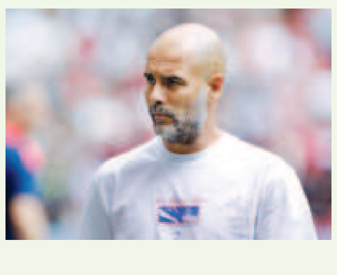
AGENCIES

As it has been the case for a number of years in recent history, Manchester City remain the team to beat as Pep Guardiola's men begin their quest for an unprecedented fifth straight Premier League title on Sunday afternoon when they travel to Stamford Bridge to face Chelsea in their opening fixture of the season.

It will definitely be a tough task for the reigning Premier League champions, but more so because of the unpredictability that surrounds a Chelsea squad that have more than 40 players at their disposal – something that will also be a headache for Chelsea's new coach Enzo Maresca.

As Maresca attempts to solve the jigsaw puzzle of whom to stick with for the starting eleven, some clues might be on offer today when Chelsea players emerge from the tunnel with their first competitive line-up after yet another summer of mind-boggling spending.

Around 160 million pounds ($205.10 million) has been splashed out on players such as winger Pedro Neto from Wolverhampton Wanderers, midfielder Kiernan Dewsbury-Hall from Leicester City and goalkeeper Filip Jorgenson from Villarreal.



Directing a huge squad proved beyond Mauricio Pochettino for the majority of last season before an impressive end to the campaign hinted at the identity he had been seeking to forge.

But then Pochettino was replaced by Italian Maresca and Chelsea fans will hope that things fall into place quicker this time.

"At the moment if I start to think I have 43 players it is not a good thing," Maresca said on Friday.

Sunday's game is quite the baptism of fire for Maresca, a former Man City assistant under Guardiola who takes charge of a Chelsea side seeking to end a six-game winless run against the Citizens. The Blues have, however, picked up more points (67) than any other Premier League club from their opening matches of a new season.

Tasked with managing such a huge squad in his very first season, Maresca could be calmed by the words of his former boss.

"All the managers need time," said Guardiola on Friday.

"I don't know if Chelsea is the place to do this but give him time and it will work."

Meanwhile, Guardiola also has headaches of his own ahead of the crucial fixture as key midfielder Rodri and Norwegian forward Oscar Bobb, who set up the only goal in City's tiebreaker win over Manchester United in the Community Shield, will be sitting out due to injuries.

Bobb could miss up to four months after breaking his leg in training while Rodri is still recovering from an injury sustained at Euro 2024.

Liverpool's Mohamed Salah (c) celebrates scoring their second goal with Luis Díaz and Diogo Jota, who netted the opener, during their 2-0 win over newly promoted Ipswich Town in a Premier League fixture at Portman Road yesterday, marking a strong start to their season in the post-Juergen Klopp era under the leadership of Arne Slot.

Public univs 'reopen' today

20 VC, 10 pro-VC posts remain vacant

MOHIUDDIN ALAMGIR and ARAFAT RAHAMAN

Public universities are set to reopen today amid a vacuum in the administrations after the resignation of at least 20 vice-chancellors, 10 pro-vice-chancellors, and many other officials.

Classes and other academic activities have been disrupted for more than one and a half months. When the universities reopen, academic activities may not be at full swing due to the vacancies at key posts.

The wave of resignations in different institutions in the wake of the fall of Hasina-led government has put the interim government in a challenging situation.

"I hope academic activities will fully resume later this week or early next week," said Prof Muhammed Alamgir, acting chairman of the University Grants Commission, adding that discussions with students will be needed to fully resume the academic activities.

5 secretaries appointed on contract

They were earlier forced into retirement; existing contracts of many scrapped

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Five additional secretaries, who were forced to resign during the Awami League government, were appointed as secretaries yesterday on a contractual basis.

The new administration, which took charge after the student-led uprising earlier this month, also terminated several top officials who had been appointed contractually by the ousted Sheikh Hasina administration.

All the newly-appointed secretaries are from the 1982 batch (regular) of the admin cadre, said sources in the public administration.

The Ministry of Public Administration issued circulars on these appointments.

Dr Mohammad Abdul Momen has been appointed secretary to the Public Security Division under the home ministry.

Md Mokabbir Hossain, who was appointed as the senior secretary to the division just three days ago, was transferred to the science and technology ministry.

Dr Momen had reportedly been sent on compulsory retirement on June 6, 2013, after he completed 25 years in

DGHS issues guidelines for mpox

Asks people with symptoms to contact 16263 or 10655

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Three days after the World Health Organisation (WHO) declared the mpox outbreak a global public health emergency, the Directorate General of Health Services (DGHS) yesterday issued a guideline to control the disease.

It detailed the dos and don'ts of preventing mpox. It also described the symptoms and treatment of the disease.

The DGHS also advised people to contact 16263 or 10655 immediately, if any symptoms of mpox appear. However, no mpox patient has been found in Bangladesh so far.

Meanwhile, Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport (HSIA) yesterday started screening the temperature of the passengers who arrived from abroad.

Mpox was first identified in monkeys in Denmark in 1958. WHO said that the disease has already spread to Burundi, Uganda, Rwanda, Sweden and Kenya. Mpox was also detected in Pakistan for the first time on Thursday.

WHO declared a state of emergency for the disease twice in the last two years. Last Wednesday, it declared mpox a global public health emergency over the upsurge of the disease in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and a growing number of countries in Africa.

Regarding the spread of the animal-borne disease, DGHS said that mpox virus was initially transmitted from animals to humans. But now it is being transmitted from person to person. Mpox belongs to the same class of viruses responsible for smallpox, but it is much less harmful than smallpox.

Mpox's typical symptoms include fever, headache,

Gaza truce an 'illusion'

Says Hamas as US president says deal closer than ever; death toll in Palestinian territory crosses 40,000 mark

AGENCIES

A senior Hamas official yesterday dismissed optimistic talk by US President Joe Biden that a Gaza truce is nearer after negotiations in the Gulf emirate of Qatar.

"To say that we are getting close to a deal is an illusion," Hamas political bureau member Sami Abu Zuhri told AFP. "We are not facing a deal or real negotiations, but rather the imposing of American diktats."

He was responding to Biden's comment on Friday that, "We are closer than we have ever been."

Biden spoke after two days of talks in Qatar where Washington tried to bridge differences between Israel and Palestinian Hamas militants. The two sides have been at war for more than 10 months in the Gaza Strip.

Previous optimism during months of on-off truce talks has so far proven futile.

But the stakes have significantly risen since the killings in quick succession in late July of Fuad Shukr, a top operations chief of Lebanon's Iran-backed Hezbollah movement, and Hamas political chief Ismail Haniyeh.

Their deaths led to vows of vengeance from Hezbollah, Iran and other Tehran-backed groups in the region which blamed Israel.

Western and Arab diplomats have been shuttling around the Middle East to push for a Gaza deal which they say could help avert a wider regional conflagration.

Biden's secretary of state, Antony Blinken, was scheduled to head to Israel yesterday in a bid to finalise an agreement.

As efforts towards a truce continued, so did the killing on Saturday in Gaza and Lebanon.

Lebanon's health ministry said an Israeli air strike in southern Lebanon killed 10 people including a Syrian woman and her two children.

The strike was among the deadliest in southern Lebanon since the onset of near-daily exchanges of fire between Israel and Hezbollah following the start of the Gaza war in October.

- Hamas rejects 'new' Gaza truce conditions
- Israeli strike in south Lebanon kills 10
- Gaza rescuers say Israeli strike kills 15 from same family
- First polio case recorded in Gaza in 25 years

Israel's military said it struck a Hezbollah weapons storage facility.

In Hamas-run Gaza, civil defence rescuers said an Israeli air strike killed 15 people from a single Palestinian family. The fatalities in Al-Zawaida helped push the Gaza health ministry's war death toll to 40,074.

"We are in the morgue seeing indescribable scenes of limbs and severed heads and children who are dismembered," said Omar al-Dreemli, a relative.

The Gaza war has displaced most of the territory's population, destroyed much of the housing and other infrastructure, and left diseases spreading.

The United Nations on Friday appealed for seven-day pauses in the fighting so it could vaccinate children against polio, after the Palestinian health ministry reported Gaza's first polio case in 25 years.

Israel claimed the killing of Shukr, in a strike in south Beirut, but has not commented directly on the killing of Haniyeh while he visited Tehran.

On Friday Hezbollah released a polished video appearing to show its fighters trucking large missiles through tunnels at an underground facility.

On his visit to Israel, Blinken will seek to "conclude the agreement for a ceasefire and release of hostages and detainees", the State Department said.

Egyptian, Qatari and US mediators are working to finalise details of a framework agreement initially outlined by Biden in May. He said Israel had proposed it.

In a joint statement after two days of talks in Qatar, the mediators said they presented both sides with a proposal that "bridges remaining gaps".

Talks aiming to secure a deal are to resume in Cairo "before the end of next week", they said.

Hamas did not attend the Doha talks. An official of the Islamist movement, Osama Hamdan, had told AFP the group would join if the meeting set a timetable for implementing what Hamas had already agreed to.

Victims' families demand, call for independent probe

The families of the victims of the 2009 Pilkhana carnage demanded that all investigation reports related to the tragedy be made public and that an inquiry commission be formed to uncover the truth behind the brutal killings.

At a press conference held yesterday at Skyline Restaurant in Dhaka's Mohakhali, the families of those killed presented a series of demands, seeking justice and transparency, urging the interim government to take decisive action to this effect.

They claimed that a neighbouring state was involved in the massacre. They also said that the narrative of a dispute over "Operation Dal-Bhat" led to the killings is false, adding that it was spread with the intention of diverting attention away from the actual motives behind the massacre.

Rakin Ahmed Bhuiyan, son of Maj Gen Shakil Ahmed and Naznin Ahmed, both of whom were murdered during the carnage, made accusations against prominent political figures of the Awami League, including the former prime minister Sheikh Hasina.

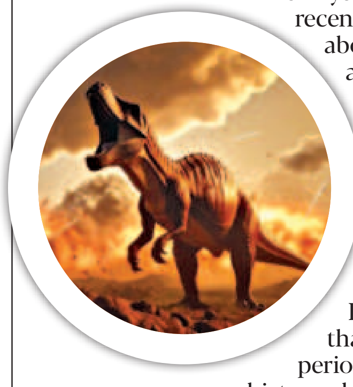
Scientists find origin of asteroid that wiped out dinosaurs

INDEPENDENT.CO.UK

Scientists may have finally found where the object that wiped out the dinosaurs came from.



The mass extinction event that occurred 66 million years ago – the most recent on Earth – came about when a rare kind of asteroid collided with Earth, researchers say.

In that incident, about 60 per cent of the Earth's species including all of its non-avian dinosaurs were wiped out. Researchers believe that it led to a horrific period in the planet's history, during which its planets were lit on fire, the Earth was covered in ash and the climate would have turned deadly.

And it all began in the distant outer solar system, beyond Jupiter. There, a C-type asteroid formed that would give rise to what scientists call the Chicxulub impactor, which crashed into Earth and left the vast crater after which it is named.

Scientists say the discovery should help solve long arguments about the history of the Earth, as well as the objects that have collided with it from elsewhere in space.

COLLEAGUE'S RAPE, MURDER

Indian doctors go on strike

AFP, New Delhi

Indian doctors held a nationwide strike yesterday, escalating protests after the "barbaric" rape and murder of their colleague that has channelled outrage at the chronic issue of violence against women.

The discovery of the 31-year-old doctor's bloodied body at a state-run hospital in the eastern city of Kolkata on August 9 sparked furious protests in several cities across the country.

Many have been led by doctors and other healthcare workers but also joined by tens of thousands of ordinary Indians demanding action.

In Kolkata, thousands held a candle-lit vigil into the early hours of Saturday morning.

"Hands that heal shouldn't bleed," read one sign held by a protester in the eastern city.

"Enough is enough," read another at a rally by doctors in the capital New Delhi.

"Hang the rapist," another said.

The murdered doctor was found in the teaching hospital's seminar hall, suggesting she had gone there for a rest during a 36-hour shift.

An autopsy confirmed sexual assault and, in a petition to the court, the victim's parents said they suspected

Election after vital reforms

Chief adviser tells foreign diplomats; 'I must succeed as there's no other option'

- Previous regime destroyed the institutions
- Armed forces to assist civil administration as long as needed
- Interim govt to uphold international legal obligations
- To promote national reconciliation

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

The interim government will conduct a free, fair and participatory election after reforming the democratic institutions that had been destroyed by the previous regime, Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus told the international community yesterday.

It is the interim government's mandate to make vital reforms in the Election Commission, judiciary, civil administration, security forces, and mass media, he said.

"We will also make sincere efforts to promote national reconciliation," he said.

Prof Yunus' first "meet and greet" event with more than 60 foreign diplomats and representatives of international organisations was held at the InterContinental Dhaka.

Press Secretary Shafiqul Alam briefed the media after the event.

The event scheduled to begin at 11:00am was delayed by nearly two hours. Prof Yunus said he was stuck in his office because some unruly government officials wanted their demand for permanent jobs fulfilled immediately.

CPD suggests 3 steps to fix energy sector

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Centre for Policy Dialogue yesterday proposed a three-step pathway for energy transition under the interim government that would holistically reform Bangladesh's energy sector.

The think-tank proposed an initial 100-day plan where the interim government would announce key priorities, followed by significant reforms over the next six months.

The reforms would include abolishing certain acts, implementing new policies such as energy audits, renewable energy laboratory and centralising databases on pricing and investment.

The CPD identified four critical acts and policies that need to be revised immediately to ensure competition, efficiency, transparency and accountability in the power and energy sector.

These are the Quick Enhancement of Electricity and Energy Supply Act, the Bangladesh Energy Regulatory Commission Act, the Renewable Energy Policy and the Integrated Energy and Power Master Plan (IEPMP).

"These acts and policies were initiated to benefit vested interest groups in the sector," said Khondaker Golam Moazzem, research director of CPD, while presenting the keynote paper at a media briefing titled "Power and Energy Sector Reform Agenda for the Interim Government".

Under the Quick Enhancement Act, the government awarded public works to conglomerates without issuing any tender notices.

Power sector's indemnity act suspended

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

All the activities under the much-criticised Quick Enhancement of Electricity and Energy Supply Act 2010, commonly known as the Indemnity Act, in the power and energy sector will remain suspended, said the newly-appointed energy adviser to the interim government.

Initiated in 2010 when the power sector was struggling to meet the country's demand, the act stipulates there is no need to float any tender to award any power plant construction activities.

Procurement under this act does not need to go through the standard Public Procurement Rules that are followed by other ministries.

Though the process was meant to be for a short time, the Awami League government never abolished it. In 2021, it was

Ex-ministers Lotus Kamal, Javed Chy face ACC probe

Former top cops Asaduzzaman, Harun also under investigation

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Anti-Corruption Commission yesterday launched probes into the alleged corruption by former ministers Saifuzzaman Chowdhury Javed, AHM Mustafa Kamal, and three ex-MPs.

It also initiated investigations into former DMP commissioner Asaduzzaman Mia, and former Detective Branch (DB) chief Harun Or Rashid's alleged corruption.

A highly placed source in the ACC told The Daily Star that the graft watchdog would probe former land minister Javed in connection with amassing illegal wealth and money laundering.

He is alleged to have laundered thousands of crores of taka to the UK.

On August 12, Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit froze the bank accounts of Javed, his wife Rukhmila Zaman Chowdhury, their children, and the institutions under their names. Their credit cards were Six banks including four Shariah-based ones are still facing a deficit in their current accounts with the central bank despite special liquidity support.

The banks are National Bank, First Security Islami Bank (FSIBL), Social Islami Bank, Union Bank, Global Islami Bank and Bangladesh Commerce Bank. Chattogram-based business giant S Alam Group has controlling stakes in all banks save for National Bank.

As of August 7, the six lender's current account deficit with the Bangladesh Bank stood at Tk 14,621 crore. If their cash reserve ratio deficit is considered, their total shortfall is Tk 20,774 crore, according to data from the central bank.

The shortfall in the lenders' current accounts with the BB means they are in deep crisis, said a senior official of Life without metro

ASHIF AHMED RUDRO

Dhaka residents have a bitter relationship with traffic jam where one can't go one day without falling into one. The congestion on the roads is usually much worse during peak office hours. In the midst of this perpetual torment, there was a small respite in the form of metro rail.

While the metro service is new to Bangladesh and the people of Dhaka has only been introduced to it for a little over a year, a large number of the population has already gotten used to it.

The residents of Uttara and Mirpur are probably the more enthusiastic ones. However, since its halt on 18 July, life without metro has been difficult for a lot of people.

Not surprisingly, Dhaka roads were noticeably congested over the last week. Regular metro rail commuters had to resort to other means for transportation, and it's been anything but pleasant.

"I used to leave home only 30 minutes prior to my work. Metro rail would take me about 10 minutes to reach Farmgate, where I work. Now I leave an hour early and it's still not enough", said one Ashraful Islam, who lives in Mirpur 10, within walking distance of the metro rail station. "It's been an exhausting week," he added.

The view isn't very different from the driver's seat either. Driving on the streets of Dhaka is no easy task. Whether you ride a motorbike, or drive something with four wheels, it's challenging all the same. With its dust, noise pollution, and the unavoidable traffic signal of Bijoy Sarani that spares no one, Dhaka is unforgiving on the streets, unless you can fly overhead on the metro.

"I have to take a U-turn at Panthapath to be on route to my home at Pallabi. Sometimes, it takes me 45 minutes to one hour just to get through the U-turn. Which is why I used to leave my car at home and took the metro instead. I could be home by the time I finished taking the U-turn. Now, once again, I sit at the driver's seat and count the taillights," joked Iqbal Hossain, who works at a private bank.

"Everyone who used the metro has now turned to bus, so as you can imagine getting a place on a bus isn't exactly easy these days either, and if you are driving, you better buckle up for the same old Dhaka jam," Iqbal added.

With high pressure of commuters over the last few days, reminiscing about the metro days has become a topic of conversation at workplaces. While many complained about the metro fare for shorter distances, now it seems like a small price to pay considering the time it saved. And there's no hassle of sitting in the traffic jam, wondering when the vehicles might move just a little so you don't lose all hope.

Authorities have announced that metro rail will resume operations as soon as possible. Residents will surely exhale a sight of relief and count the days when the metro is once again a daily part of the experience that we call Dhaka.

12-yr-old girl knocked unconscious, raped

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Moulvibazar

Two men have been accused of raping a 12-year-old girl after giving her and her family sweets laced with sedatives in Habiganj's Chunarughat upazila.

They are Billal Miah and Farhad Miah are from the same village, said police.

On Saturday evening, the victim's father filed the case, accusing the duo, said Hillol Roy, officer-in-charge (OC) of Chunarughat Police Station.

Police are trying to arrest the accused, who are on the run, Hillol Roy told The Daily Star yesterday.

According to the case statement, the accused were acquainted with the family members of the 12-year-old victim.

On August 12, Billal and Farhad visited the victim's home and brought them sweets laced with sedatives. They gave the sweets to the family around 10:00pm, and the entire family fell unconscious shortly after.

Then, Billal and Farhad raped the girl while she was unconscious, said the case added.

The next morning, the family woke up and found their home in disarray and their daughter in distress. Realising something was wrong, they rushed her to the Upazila Health Complex for medical attention.

Billal is reportedly involved in criminal activities in the area, which further heightened the family's fear of speaking out. However, with community support, they could file the case.

Abu Sayed was killed in police firing in front of his university campus in Rangpur on July 16 when students clashed with police, activists of BCL and Jubo League.

The victim, a student of the 12th batch of the English department of Begum Rokeya University, was a resident of Babanpur Zafarpara village in Pirganj upazila. He was a key coordinator of the quota reform protests.

The image of Abu Sayed standing with arms outstretched in the face of police firing just before he was shot went viral and strengthened the protests that eventually led to the ouster of Hasina-led government on August 5.

Police had previously lodged a case alleging that Abu Sayed's death was caused by stones thrown by protesters.

also suspended for 30 days, said the BFIU notice to banks.

The ACC also initiated probe into allegations that former finance minister Mustafa Kamal, AKA Lotus Kamal, and three ex-MPs were involved in a racket linked to the Malaysian labour market.

Kamal and ex-MPs Nizam Uddin Hazari, Lt Gen (retd) Masud Uddin Chowdhury, and Benjir Ahmed, allegedly overcharged jobseekers and made over Tk 20,000 crores over a year and a half by sending 4.5 lakh people to the southeast Asian country.

The ACC will also probe the roles of Kamal's wife Kashmiri Kamal and daughter Nafisa Kamal.

A three-member committee led by Deputy Director Mohammad Nurul Huda will investigate the allegations, according to ACC sources.

They said the ACC has prepared a summary of the allegations against them.

The ACC also decided to probe allegations of amassing illegal wealth against Harunor Rashid, who is now the additional police commissioner (crime and operations) of the DMP.

The bank accounts of Harun and his wife Shirin Akhter were also frozen by the BFIU yesterday.

The financial intelligence unit's letter to banks stated that any accounts held by Harun, his wife, and their privately-owned businesses must be frozen.

The BFIU also asked for all types of their account-related information and documents, and other relevant information within three working days.

The graft watchdog, following recommendations made in an intelligence report, launched a probe against former DMP commissioner Asaduzzaman Mia.

A complaint filed with the ACC stated that Asaduzzaman, along with his wife and three children, amassed illegal assets at home and abroad.

Meanwhile, the BFIU also instructed all banks to freeze accounts belonging to Amir Hossain Amu, a former Awami League lawmaker and industries minister, and his daughter Sumaiya Hossain.

The order was issued based on reports of suspicious transactions in their names, according to the letter issued by the BFIU.

On Thursday, the ACC decided to investigate allegations of bribery against former home minister Asaduzzaman Khan and Chowdhury Nafeez Sarafat in connection with bank takeovers and embezzlement of funds from the stock market.

Election after vital reforms

He paid deep respect to the people who sacrificed their lives in the "Second Revolution" that led to the fall of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina on August 5.

Students of no other countryin recent memory had to pay so much for expressing their democratic aspirations and dreaming of a discrimination-free, equitable and environment friendly country where human rights are protected, he added.

"I took over a country which was in many ways a complete mess. In their efforts to stay in power, the Sheikh Hasina dictatorship destroyed every institution of the country.

"The judiciary was broken. Democratic rights were suppressed through a brutal one-and-a-half decade long crackdown. Elections were rigged blatantly. Generations of young people grew up without exercising their voting rights. Banks were robbed with full political patronisation. And the state coffer was plundered by abusing power."

In the new era that has dawned, he said, people, regardless of their political, religious or ethnic identity, will be able to fulfil their aspirations as the interim government will uphold democracy, justice, human rights, and freedom of speech.

The top priority now is to establish law and order at the earliest. The armed forces will continue to assist law enforcers as long as the situation warrants, he said.

Ensuring justice and accountability for all the killings during the mass upsurge is another priority, said the Nobel laureate.

"The revolutionary students want us to carry out meaningful and deep reforms, that will turn the country into a real and thriving democracy. The task is huge, but doable with the support of all people and the international community.

"I must succeed. We don't have any other option."

Robust and far-reaching economic reforms will restore macroeconomic stability and sustained growth, with priority attached to establishing good governance and combating corruption, he said.

He promised upholding the international humanitarian and human rights law and adhering to the international, regional and bilateral instruments.

Bangladesh will continue to be a proponent of multilateralism, with the UN at the core, and look forward to maintaining and enhancing Bangladesh's contributions to the UN peacekeeping, he said.

The interim government will continue to support the Rohingya people in Bangladesh, he said, seeking sustained support from the international community for humanitarian operations and eventual repatriation to Myanmar.

Urging the trade and investment partners to keep their trust in Bangladesh, he said, "For our part, we won't tolerate any attempt to disrupt the global clothing supply chain in which we are a key player."

He then promised to nurture friendly relations with all countries.

"Bangladesh stands at the crossroads of a new beginning. Our valiant students and people deserve a lasting transformation of our nation. It is a difficult journey and we need your help along the way. We need to fulfil their aspirations. The sooner the better.

"We have to create opportunities to build a poverty-free and prosperous new Bangladesh."

Press Secretary Shafiqul said there was no question-answer session at the event, but Prof Yunus greeted and interacted with the diplomats after the speech.

CPD suggests 3 steps to fix energy sector

"No public procurement rules were followed under this act. The faulty procurement and bidding process of the major power projects such as the Adani deal, Payra and Rampal power plants cost us an additional Tk 35,000 crore."

Moazzem also called for an international audit of all companies under the ministry of power, energy, and mineral resources to uncover anomalies and corruption from the past government.

"There was no transparency in the information available in this sector. Companies provided different information to different authorities, and all details were kept top secret during the Awami League-led government. All deal documents should be made public."

The data on power generation cost, power purchase tariff, efficiency level, plant factor, fuel cost, capacity payment, date of contract expiration, and oil and LNG import costs must be updated regularly on the respective websites.

CPD emphasised the need for all government activities to be conducted under the Public Procurement Act 2006 and Public Procurement Rules 2008.

They urged the government to review all procurement and bidding processes of power plants, phase out inefficient and quick rental power plants and prioritise the identification and assessment of renewable energy resources.

Additionally, CPD recommended forming a probe body to identify anomalies in pre-paid meters and restructuring the power, energy and mineral resources ministry to empower the Sustainable and Renewable Energy Development Authority (SREDA) as the sole authority for implementing upcoming energy transition issues.

In the final phase, spanning 12 to 36 months, CPD suggested the government prioritise investment in advanced grid technologies, modernise grid infrastructure and shift focus from LNG imports to domestic gas exploration.

"The past government has made Bangladesh Energy Regulatory Commission a toothless authority," Moazzem said.

The laws were amended to adjust gas and electricity prices without holding a public hearing multiple times a year.

Without the process, there are two types of problems: it creates a non-transparent market and frequent tariff changes discourage investors.

In the IEPMP, the government had projected faulty energy and power demand, the keynote paper said.

Besides, the policy paper incorporated hydrogen and ammonia co-firing with carbon capture and storage systems, which is a 'false solution' of energy transition.

CPD demanded the review of the market-based pricing formula saying the formula has anomalies. "We need to get rid of subsidy-based power and energy but under a transparent process."

CPD'S PLANS FOR ENERGY SECTOR

Phase 2 (between 6-12 months): Research, Development and Demonstration

- Overhaul SREDA as the lead authority for renewable energy
- Bring SREDA under Prime Minister/Chief Advisor's Office
- Pilot projects and feasibility studies in selected regions to test

Phase 3 (between 12-36 months): Infrastructure Development

- Upgrade existing grid to Smart Grid by 2041
- Shift priority to domestic gas exploration
- More gas well workover projects should be undertaken
- Revise tax and incentive structure

Six banks still in shortfall

the central bank on the condition of anonymity.

Generally, banks have to maintain a current account with the central bank for different clearing payment systems and they have to maintain a hefty balance in the account.

In theory, the central bank can restrict those banks from the clearing platforms due to their current account deficit, said the BB official.

"The shortfall means the lenders are in deep crisis," said another senior official of the central bank seeking anonymity.

The shortfall came despite the BB providing special liquidity support to the banks for more than a year, the official added.

The BB's special liquidity support was equivalent to the deficits in the lenders' current account.

As of August 7, the outstanding liquidity support to six lenders stood at Tk 14,621 crore.

Of the six banks, the highest current account deficit is of FSIBL, whose chairman is S Alam Group's chairman Mohammad Saiful Alam. The Shariah-based bank's deficit is Tk 6,693 crore, according to BB documents.

Alam's wife Farzana Parveen and four other relatives are on the board of FSIBL.

Social Islami Bank, whose chairman is Alam's son-in-law Belal Ahmed, has the next highest current account deficit: Tk 2,877 crore.

National Bank -- where Ratna Dutta, wife of S Alam Group executive director Subrata Kumar Bhowmick, is a board member -- came in at third spot with a deficit of Tk 2,586 crore, followed by Union Bank (Tk 2,097 crore).

Alam's siblings Halima Begum, Osman Goni and Md Rashedul Alam along with his wife Marzina Sharmin and nephew Mohammad Mostan Billah Adil are on the board of Union Bank.

Bangladesh Commerce Bank, which has had weak financial indicators for years, faces a deficit of Tk 336 crore in its current account, while Global Islami Bank's deficit stood at Tk 32 crore.

"A lender should never have a deficit balance in its current account," said Mohammed Nurul Amin, former chairman of the Association of Bankers Bangladesh, a platform of banks' chief executives and managing directors.

The central bank should penalise the bank if it ends up with a current account deficit.

"When that does not happen, and the central bank instead provides liquidity support, we can guess in which direction our banking sector is heading," said Amin, also the former managing director of Meghna Bank.

When a commercial bank's current account with the central bank turns negative, the BB can provide loans to the bank against "promissory note" for a short period of time, said three BB officials involved with the proceedings.

A promissory note, sometimes referred to as a note payable, is a legal instrument, in which one party promises in writing to pay a determinate sum of money to the other, either at a fixed or determinable future time or on demand of the payee, under specific terms and conditions.

However, the BB was providing special liquidity support to the banks without any securities on the instruction of former BB governor Abdur Rouf Talukder.

A few months ago, when asked why liquidity support was continually provided to the banks, Talukder told journalists that it was done at the governor's discretion.

"The support was provided in the interest of the country's banking sector," BB spokesman Md Mezbaul Haque told The Daily Star recently.

extended for another five years.

Thanks to this act, hefty amounts were paid as capacity charges to the power plants.

All previous activities under this act will be reviewed by the interim government, said M Fouzul Kabir Khan, the adviser to the ministry of power, energy and mineral resources, at a media briefing in the secretariat yesterday.

"It will be decided by the advisory council whether the act will be abolished or not. But from now on, the pending works under this act will remain suspended," Khan added.

Different media outlets published articles about the anomalies of the sector, especially under this act, which may raise questions among people, said a press release from the ministry.

Under this circumstance, all the negotiations, projects and purchase activities will remain temporarily closed.

However, the contracts that were done under this act will continue.

The interim government will not take any decision regarding hiking the power or energy tariffs by bypassing the Bangladesh Energy Regulatory Commission (BERC).

Last year, the Awami League government amended the BERC Act and incorporated a clause to set the energy prices by themselves without any public hearing.

They have increased the power price several times since this clause was rolled out.

Commuters in Dhaka city faced severe traffic congestion yesterday as various protests across multiple locations caused widespread gridlock.

Key roads including Dhanmondi, Mirpur Road, Khamarbari Road, Kazi Nazrul Islam Avenue, Uttara, Press Club, and Science Lab were heavily affected, leaving many stranded for hours.

The traffic chaos was primarily attributed to demonstrations by students, various organisations, and service holders, coupled with the reopening of educational institutions after a prolonged closure.

Anisur Rahman, a private job holder from Farmgate, said his usual 15-minute commute from Dhanmondi to his office took 45 minutes by motorcycle due to the congestion.

Abdullah, a trader from Karwan Bazar, struggled to find transportation and was unable to secure a ride sharing service, as drivers informed him it would take over an hour to reach him.

Protests at multiple locations added to the turmoil. Students blocked the Science Lab intersection and Uttara BNS centre, demanding the cancellation of the HSC examination.

Simultaneously, students of Home Economics College obstructed Mirpur Road near New Market, protesting for dormitory accommodations.

Among the neatly arranged benches, one seat remained empty.

In place of a student, there was a bouquet of flowers and a white paper bearing the name, "Shafiq Uddin Ahmed Ahnaf".

Just a little over a month ago, Ahnaf, a student of BAF Shaheen College, gave exams in this very seat.

Shortly after, the government ordered closure of educational institutions as protests against attacks on quota reform protesters intensified.

Yesterday, the college finally reopened its doors, and Ahnaf's friends resumed their first-year final examination. But Ahnaf did not return. He won't ever, just like many other students killed by law enforcers' bullets.

The 17-year-old was shot dead when police opened fire on anti-government protesters in the capital's Mirpur-10 area on August 4.

He had already completed three of his exams when the violence erupted and led to the suspension of the remaining tests.

Yesterday, as his friends returned to take their final exam in accounting, Ahnaf's absence was felt deeply.

The sight of his empty seat, adorned with flowers, was a form of tribute from his friends and teachers, and was also a reminder of the human costs that contributed to Sheikh Hasina's fall.

Iron cages being removed from all courtrooms

EMRUL HASAN BAPPI and CHAITANYA CHANDRA HALDER

The Public Works Department (PWD) has initiated the removal of iron cages from courtrooms nationwide, following directives from higher authorities.

As of Friday, at least five iron cages have been dismantled, according to PWD officials.

An executive engineer of PWD, confirmed that they received verbal instructions on Thursday to start removing the iron cages from courtrooms.

ASM Sanaullah, executive engineer of PWD's Dhaka division-2, said, "Five iron cages have been removed from courtrooms in Dhaka since Friday."

The decision to remove the cages was made on Wednesday, according to Md Baki Ullah, another executive engineer of PWD.

The move follows widespread criticism after images of former law minister Anisul Huq and PM's private industry affairs adviser Salman F Rahman, both arrested in a murder case, went viral on social media, showing them in an iron cage at the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's Court in Dhaka.

On Thursday, former deputy speaker Shamsul Haque Tuku, state minister Zunaid Ahmed Palak, and Chhatra League General Secretary Tanbir Hasan Shaikat, also arrested in a murder case, were produced before the CMM Court.

They were not confined to an iron cage.

By Friday, two iron cages had already been removed from courtrooms at the CMM Court.

On the same day, former army officer Maj Gen Ziaul Ahsan, arrested in a murder case, was produced in a courtroom where the iron cage had already been removed.

"There are still 26 iron cages in courtrooms under the CMM Court," said Md Rejowan Khondoker, nazir of the CMM

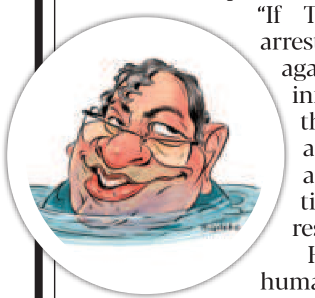
Dhaka residents demand arrest of Taqsem

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Some residents of Dhaka yesterday demanded that the authorities concerned immediately arrest Taqsem A Khan, former managing director of Dhaka Water Supply and Sewerage Authority, and ensure his punishment.



"If Taqsem is not immediately arrested and a case is not filed against him, he will use his influence and power to destroy the evidence of his corruption and misdeeds over the years, and may flee abroad at any time," said Mizanur Rahman, a resident of Dhaka's Jurain area.

He made the demand at a human chain in front of Wasa Bhaban in Karwan Bazar.

Mizanur was among several hundred residents from Jurain, Shyampur, Madhya Badda, Rampura and Tejgaon areas who earlier demonstrated in front of the Wasa Bhaban on April 23, 2019 demanding Taqsem's resignation.

Demands Sanatan Adhikar Parishad at meeting with Yunus

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Sanatan Adhikar Parishad has demanded a minority commission to investigate the attacks on the homes and places of worship of the Hindu community across the country.

Yesterday, a six-member delegation met Chief Adviser to the interim government Prof Muhammad Yunus to present an eight-point demand, including the prosecution of attacks on the properties of the minority community and ensuring their security.

Yunus assured them that his government is committed to protecting the human rights of every citizen, including members of religious minorities.

"We have already taken several measures to provide protection against any attacks and violence targeting minorities...," he said.

Information Adviser Nahid Islam, and Youth and Sports Adviser Asif Mahmud were present at the meeting.

Emon's battle for life ends after 14 days

Shot at a protest rally on August 4, 21-year-old college student dies in DMCH

MIRZA SHAKIL, Tangail

Emon, 21, who was shot while participating in a student protest in Tangail on August 4, succumbed to his injuries yesterday at Dhaka Medical College Hospital.

Hailing from Tangail's Gopalpur upazila, Emon, a college student, was a beacon of hope for his poor family. After his father Julhas Sheikh, a rickshaw-puller, passed away when he was a sixth grader, Emon had been working alongside his studies to support his family.

His mother Rina Begum works as a house help.

After completing his HSC from Moniruzzaman Khan BM College, Emon got admitted to Hemnagar Degree College, and began doing tuitions to support educational expenses for himself as well as his three younger siblings.

"On August 4, Emon was shot by police in his stomach during a protest in the Gorai area of Tangail's Mirzapur upazila. He was first taken to Kumudini Hospital and later shifted to Lake View Hospital in Dhaka's Uttara. He was admitted to DMCH on August 6 as his condition deteriorated. He had been under treatment at the ICU there for 12 days," said his uncle Nawab Ali.

Emon's family had to borrow Tk 1 lakh to spend for his treatment, and with his untimely demise, they now find themselves in dire straits, Nawab added.

"We suffered a lot due to financial strains all these years, yet we had hopes as Emon had been working hard to help the family after his father's death. He was doing tuitions beside his studies to bear the educational costs for his three younger siblings. With his demise, all our hopes are lost," said Rina Begum.

Emon's first namaj-e janaja was held at the Central Shaheed Minar in Dhaka yesterday noon before his body was taken to his village home and buried at a local graveyard.

It was a gesture of respect, of mourning, and of the unspoken words that lingered in the minds of everyone present.

In the exam hall, the usual tension of an exam was replaced by a heavy silence. Occasionally, the cries of Ahnaf's friends broke through the silence as they broke into tears.

The invigilator's voice seemed softer, and the students' focus was often broken by the sight of that solitary bouquet.

As they filled out their answer sheets, Ahnaf's classmates knew that Ahnaf's murder would haunt them for a very long time.

"Ahnaf attended the last three exams, but today [yesterday] he wasn't here," said one student.

"It was hard to focus; three students cried in the room," another added.

Borhan Uddin, a teacher at BAF Shaheen College, who was invigilator of the exam hall, said, "We did not want Ahnaf's seat to remain empty. He sacrificed his life for the country. We decided to honour him with this gesture of placing flowers on his seat. Both teachers and students came together to lay floral tributes on his desk. Everyone was in tears during this time."

Vice Principal Shakila Nargis said, "His seat is empty, and it's painful for us all. We wanted to show that we haven't forgotten him."

The college plans to offer prayers on August 20 to honour Ahnaf's memory.

His father, Nasir Uddin Ahmed, said, "My boy is gone, but he has left many memories... There was no fear in him. I could not stop my son [from joining protests]."

Universities struggle

Mohema Islam, a student at Comilla University, said, "We have already suffered a lot since academic activities have been at a standstill at our university for months. We don't want this to continue. We demand that the government take immediate action to fill the gaps."

DU Pro-VC (Academic) Prof Sitesh Chandra said, "Many teachers have returned to their departments, but there was a noticeable absence of students. So, we were unable to hold any classes or examinations today (yesterday)."

The absence of a VC and other administrative officials is causing significant challenges. These positions need to be filled urgently, he added.

Prof Tarikul Islam, acting registrar at Rajshahi University, said, "The government's order to reopen educational institutions was issued to vice chancellors. But we currently have no VC or even a pro-VC. So we couldn't decide on resuming academic activities. We can only proceed once these positions are filled."

Education Ministry Adviser Wahiduddin Mahmud acknowledged the crisis in public universities.

"We must address this situation swiftly. However, this is also an opportunity to appoint genuinely passionate and qualified individuals to lead these institutions," he said.

They must have both academic and administrative expertise, which has unfortunately been undervalued for a long time, he added.

Regarding the appointment of new VCs, he said, "It is extremely challenging to suddenly appoint new leadership in over 40 universities. Nevertheless, we will make every effort to quickly fill these positions, especially at major universities."

Following the government's directive, secondary schools, colleges, and madrasas across the country also reopened yesterday after a nearly month-long closure, while primary schools had resumed on August 14.

Tough to implement

Wahiduddin said the whole job will be done in phases.

He made the remarks at a time when many educationists criticised the new curriculum for a sketchy evaluation system.

Besides, due to a lack of sufficient training, many teachers were still confused about how to give classroom instructions, distribute group work for students, and evaluate the students' performances based on the new curriculum.

The last Awami League government chalked out the new curriculum, saying it would reduce emphasis on memorisation and prioritise experimentation and activity-based learning.

Phase-wise implementation of the curriculum started on January 1, 2023. Currently, the curriculum is followed in classes one, two, three, six, seven, eight, and nine, while classes four, five, and 10 are supposed to follow it from January 2025.

Under the new curriculum, there will be no public exam before class 10 and no exams for students up to class 3. Science, humanities, and business studies will be introduced in class 11 instead of class 9.

water as a sarcastic gift of "sherbet" to Taqsem still remains fresh in the memory of Dhaka dwellers.

Wasa recently terminated Taqsem after he remained as its managing director for over 15 years even as news over allegations of widespread irregularities, corruption and looting against him got regularly published in newspapers.

He was replaced by AKM Shahid Uddin.

Notably, complaints were filed with the Anti-Corruption Commission regarding Taqsem's amassing of huge wealth illegally and embezzlement of Tk 132 crore from the funds of Wasa Employees' Multipurpose Cooperative Society Limited.

Even after so many allegations against him, no case has been filed against him and he has not been arrested, said Mizanur.

"Under Taqsem as managing director, Dhaka Wasa was run in a tyrannical manner, turning it into his playground for committing irregularities, misuse of power, and widespread corruption, among other charges," he also said.

Addressing the human chain, Mizanur also demanded replacing the newly appointed Wasa managing director AKM Shahid Uddin.

"AKM Shahid Uddin has long been an accomplice of Taqsem's corruption," Mizanur alleged, citing news reports.

said on August 13, Khairul resigned from the position of chairman of the Law Commission.

After retiring from the position of chief justice, he was appointed the Law Commission chairman for three years on July 23 last year. His tenure was subsequently extended three times as the chairman of the commission.

Khairul was elevated to the Appellate Division in July 2009.

A week before his retirement, he gave the verdict declaring the nonpartisan election-time government "illegal", ignoring strong pleas by eminent jurists such as Dr Kamal Hossain, Barrister Rafique-ul Huq, Barrister M Amir-ul Islam, former attorney general Mahmudul Islam, all of whom strongly argued for retaining the interim government system for the sake democracy.

His verdict gave Hasina the biggest political weapon to cling to power. The end of the caretaker system meant an end to the mechanism of checks and balances which ensured free and fair elections in 1991, 1996, 2001 and 2008, said the complainant.

Court. The removal process is ongoing, he added.

Till yesterday noon, there are iron cages in most courtrooms under the Metropolitan Sessions Judge's Court of Dhaka, while the iron cages are set-up in nine special judge's courts, four speedy trial tribunals, nine women and children repression prevention tribunals, Anti-Human Trafficking Prevention Tribunal and Anti-Terrorism Special Tribunal, said court staffers.

Legal experts have criticised the use of iron cages, arguing that it violates Article 35(5) of the Constitution, which prohibits torture or cruel, inhuman, or degrading punishment or treatment.

Supreme Court lawyer Zahirul Islam Khan Panna, chairperson of Ain o Salish Kendra, said, "There cannot be an iron cage in the courtrooms of a civilised state. Iron cages should be removed from all courts immediately."

The debate over the use of iron cages first came to fore on June 12 when Nobel laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus condemned the practice after attending a hearing in a graft case.

"It is very humiliating that an innocent person has to stand in an iron cage during a hearing. It's very condemnable ... it shouldn't be applied to anybody," Yunus said back then.

Apa" project formed a human chain, further exacerbating traffic woes.

Other demonstrations included HSC candidates and various organisations staging protests at Doyel Chattar, Uttara, Shahbagh, Mirpur Road, Science Lab, and Press Club, voicing issues ranging from job regularisation to institutional reforms.

Hundreds gathered near Shikkha Bhaban and the Press Club to demand job permanency, salary reforms, and the nationalisation of services. Dismissed BDR members also protested in front of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, while village police gathered at the press club to oppose salary inequality.

Students of the Medical Assistant Training School (MATS) formed a human chain against corruption and discrimination, and the Bangladesh Family Planning Voluntary (Women) Demand Implementation Council called for job regularisation.

Further adding to the disruptions, the Bangladesh Independent Ebtedayee Madrasa Teachers Association protested against perceived discrimination by the Madrasa Board, while the Trinamool Nagorik Andolan held a rally demanding accountability from Sheikh Hasina and her government officials.

At Banglamotor, a group demonstrated in front of the Bangladesh Inland Water Transport Authority, while in Karwan Bazar, another group protested in front of the Directorate of Family Planning.

the World's Indigenous Peoples 2024.

Hossain also protested against the security forces for obstructing efforts to paint graffiti on the abduction of Kalpana Chakma in different locations of Chattogram Hill Tracts region.

Speaking on reforms, she said, "We need reform in the judiciary, but we must ensure that we do not destroy everything in the name of reform."

The primary task of the interim government is to ensure the safety of those who are still insecure, she opined.

Addressing the event, Iftekharuzzaman, executive director of Transparency International, Bangladesh, said the country needs to develop a framework based on the mass aspirations of a "new Bangladesh, new state structure, and new political understanding" that emerged following the recent mass uprising.

"We do not want any discrimination against indigenous people after the mass uprising. We do not want another authoritarian government," he said, calling for action over the attacks and violence on indigenous and minority communities recently and in previous years.

He also called for separate UN investigations into each rights violation against indigenous people in previous years and sought constitutional recognition of indigenous people.

Iftekharuzzaman also recommended overhauling the CHT Affairs Ministry and renaming it as "Indigenous Rights Affairs Ministry," saying that the ministry was created to facilitate militarisation in the CHT region.

Shamsul Huda, executive director at the Association for Land Reform and Development, noted that attacks on indigenous, marginalised communities, and women are a regular political phenomenon in the country.

He demanded the state to recognise the International Day of the World's Indigenous Peoples, eliminate all discrimination against indigenous communities, ratify the ILO Convention 169, and formulate relevant laws accordingly.

Prof Robaet Ferdous of Dhaka University expressed concern that Bangalee people would outnumber indigenous populations in the CHT within 10 years at the current rate.

The abuses against indigenous people across the country hinder efforts to create a diverse, gender and language-neutral country, he noted, adding that the country's people's emancipation will remain incomplete without emancipation of indigenous peoples.

Khushi Kabir, coordinator of Nijera Kori, conducted the seminar.

location and release of missing Jumma activists, including Mayadhan Chakma, and the release of those detained on politically motivated charges.

Additionally, the commission demanded justice for Kalpana Chakma, pressing for action on the unresolved 1996 abduction case of the indigenous activist.

The CHTC further advocated for the retention of the CHT Regulation 1900, which is currently under legal scrutiny.

It also called for unrestricted access for national and international organisations to the region to ensure accountability and transparency.

The statement was signed by Sultana Kamal, Elsa Stamatopoulou, and Myrna Cunningham Kain, co-chairs of the CHT Commission.

‘Will inform UN team on abuses against indigenous people’

Speakers tell seminar

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Speakers at a programme yesterday said they would inform a visiting team of the United Nations about the human rights violations suffered by indigenous people in Bangladesh in recent years.

The UN team will be visiting Dhaka to investigate crimes against humanity committed by the Sheikh Hasina-led government.

“We know that a UN team will visit Bangladesh to investigate the allegations brought against the previous regime. We can raise the issue of the human rights violations, torture and other abuses faced by indigenous people over the years,” said Barrister Sara Hossain, honorary executive director of Bangladesh Legal Aid and Services Trust.

She made the remarks as a panel speaker at a seminar titled “The Responsibility of the State and the Broader Population on Overall Security, Including Land, Basic, and Human Rights of the Indigenous People,” held at the capital’s CIRDAP auditorium.

The seminar was organised by 14 indigenous organisations, including the Bangladesh Adivasi Forum, in observance of the International Day of

CHTC calls for six key reforms

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Chittagong Hill Tracts Commission yesterday called on the interim government to urgently prioritise six critical reforms in the CHT.

In a press statement, the CHTC emphasised the need for full implementation of the CHT Accord, highlighting key provisions such as recognising the CHT as an Indigenous-inhabited region, establishing mechanisms for resolving land disputes, rehabilitating returnee refugees and internally displaced persons, and demilitarising the area.

The commission urged the government to withdraw “Operation Uttoron” and recommended that all temporary military camps be dismantled without delay, except for the six permanent cantonments and installations of border security forces as outlined in the CHT Accord of 1997.

The CHTC also called for the immediate

ADMINISTRATIVE VACUUM

Universities struggle to restart classes

ARAFAT RAHAMAN

Despite government directives to resume academic activities across all educational institutions, most public universities struggled to restart classes yesterday due to a significant administrative vacuum.

This crisis emerged after the resignations of at least 21 vice chancellors, 10 pro-vice chancellors, and numerous other key officials following the fall of Sheikh Hasina.

These vacancies have left universities unable to hold meetings or officially announce the resumption of academic activities, except for basic administrative tasks.

However, teachers at some departments took the initiative to hold classes independently, but a full-scale return to academic operations has yet to be possible.

Only a few departments across the universities, including Law department at Rajshahi University, held classes.

Similarly, limited classes were held at Mawlana Bhasani University, Jatiya Kabi Kazi Nazrul Islam University, and Barishal University, while student attendance was low at SUST, CU, Comilla University, and Begum Rokeya University.

At Jahangirnagar University, some 20 departments -- including Archaeology, History, Marketing, and Zoology -- held classes.

Meanwhile, classes were held in almost all 38 departments and two institutions of Jagannath University. However, student turnout was low there as well, said university Treasurer Humayun Kabir.

Different colleges affiliated with the National University also started holding classes, but with low student attendance.

Amid the situation, there has been a growing frustration among the students.

Jubayer Hossain, a student at JU, said, “We have already achieved our demands through the movement. Now it’s time to return to our classes. Otherwise, we will fall behind.”

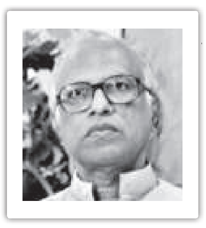
Tough to implement new curriculum

Says education adviser, hints going back to the old one

STAFF CORRESPONDENT



Education Adviser Prof Wahiduddin Mahmud yesterday said the new curriculum, especially the evaluation method, does not seem to be implementable.

“Implementation of the new curriculum with existing teachers is tough... In many cases, this new curriculum is not suitable for our country,” Wahiduddin said while talking to reporters at his secretariat office.

“We will return to the previous curriculum as much as possible. But it will be done in such a way that students don’t feel any discomfort and no discontinuity is created,” he added.

Wahiduddin, an economist and Dhaka University professor, yesterday went to the education ministry for the first time after taking the oath of office on Friday.

He said the transition from the new curriculum to the old one would be a complex job, as many students already had books of the new curriculum.

“If we go back to the old curriculum, we will keep links to the new one,” he said.

Metro to resume within 7 days

Says Adviser Fauzul Kabir

UNB, Dhaka

Interim Government’s Road Transport and Bridges Adviser Muhammad Fauzul Kabir Khan yesterday said Dhaka metro rail services will resume within seven days.

He came up with the announcement during an introductory meeting with officials at the secretariat.

The adviser emphasised that there would be a renewed focus on development projects, ensuring that progress is not limited to Dhaka alone but also extends to neglected areas.

He stressed the importance of cost-efficiency in every project, noting that instructions have been given to adhere to budget constraints.

He also addressed the issue of inadequate parking spaces on major roads in Dhaka, adding that measures will be taken to address this.

BARISHAL CITY CORPORATION

Services disrupted as mayor, councillors flee

SUSHANTA GHOSH, Barishal

Services of Barishal City Corporation have been severely disrupted as the city mayor and most ward councillors have been absent following the ouster of the Awami League-led government on August 5.

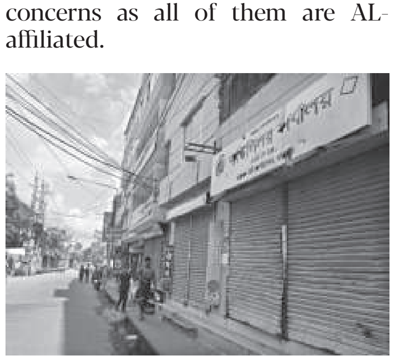
Of the 40 ward councillors under BCC, only eight have remained connected to their respective ward offices. All eight of them are BNP-backed.

Almost all services of the city corporation and ward councillors’ offices, including issuance of different certificates and other important documents, are on hold, causing much sufferings to the residents.

BCC sources said the situation deteriorated after miscreants looted goods and equipment from BCC’s annex building and set it on fire on August 5.

Gazi Naimul Hossain Litu, councillor of ward 19 and former panel mayor, was burnt to death by miscreants on the same day.

Since then, BCC mayor Abul Khair Abdullah, and 31 ward councillors, have been on the run over security concerns as all of them are AL-affiliated.



Visiting different wards across the city, this correspondent observed that several ward councillors’ offices were vandalised and looted since August 5, including those of wards 20 and 22. The residence of Munna Howladar, councillor of ward 2, was also attacked and looted.

“I went to the councillor’s office every day for the past one week to collect a birth certificate but to no avail. The office remains closed as pro-AL councillor Munna fled since August 5,” said Suvankar Chakraborty, a resident of ward 2.

A resident of ward 20 shared a similar plight.

Israel Hossain, chief executive officer of BCC, said they are trying to come up with alternative methods to resolve the issue.

Meanwhile, on August 14, the interim government decided to give CEOs full administrative and financial authority to run city corporations where mayors and panel mayors are absent.

The decision was yet to be implemented in Barishal.

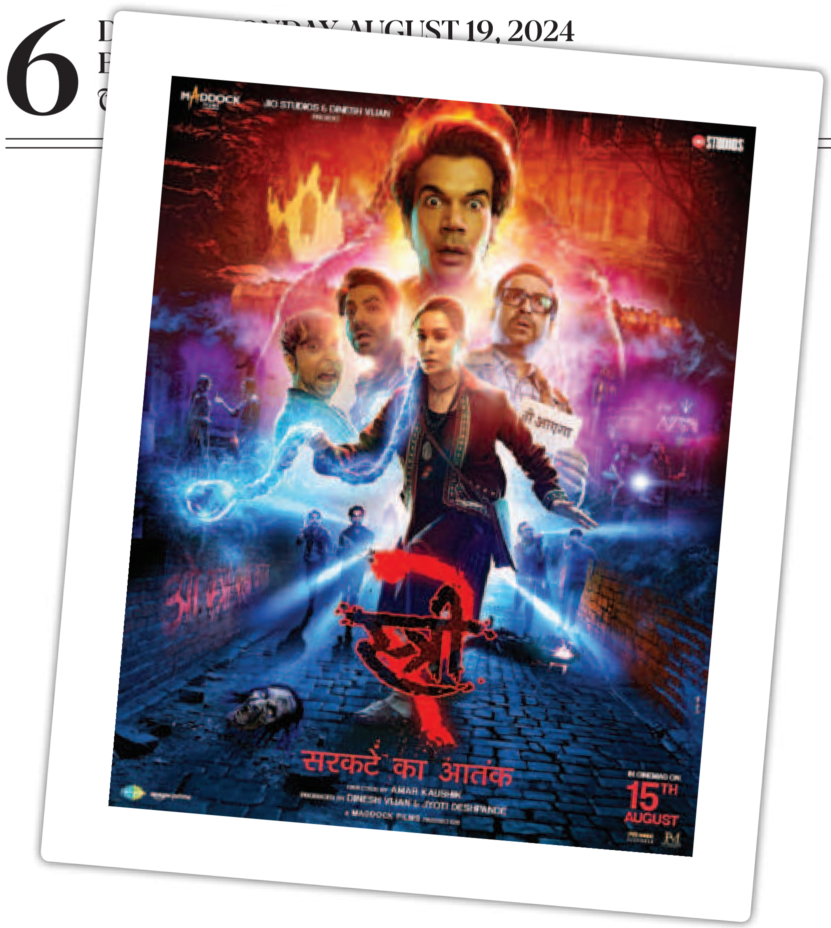
STREE 2

A fantastic fable propagating equal rights



The overall harmonisation of myth and reality—conjoining the famous Uttarakhand-based folklore of Sarkata with the modern chauvinists—was such a beautifully crafted awakening call.

ASHLEY SHOPTORSHI SAMADDAR

While I have always been a fan of the Maddock Supernatural Universe, I cannot help but commend Amar Kaushik's brilliant take on voicing his thoughts in favour of equal rights for women through Stree 2, his latest release.

While the film's first instalment, released in 2018, was a delight for awakened souls juggling to find a firm stance in a gender-imbalanced social structure, the second one, released on August 15, reinforced the need for equal status for females with much more finesse and grandeur.

Packed with witty, naughty dialogues penned by Niren Bhatt, the horror comedy ensures laughter in every scene. Rajkukar Rao's effortless projection of innocence, paired with Pankaj Tripathi's and Aparshakti Khurana's impeccable comic timing, adds splendor to the experience.

However, the spotlight of this unique production was Abhishek Banerjee, playing the infamous role of Vicky's friend Jana—anxious, confused, and hilarious— all at the same time.

Shraddha Kapoor's portrayal of 'Vicky's nameless girlfriend', perhaps the only serious character in the production, is praiseworthy, especially in sequences involving action.

I, however, enjoyed Tamannaah Bhatia's (as Shama) presence more—her poise, grace, and a mismatched yet symphonic chemistry with Tripathi. Her elegance in the song Aaj Ki Raat, trending on social media, requires no further validation.

The other, and most exquisite part of this Sachin–Jigar song, would be how an "item number" could be such a delightful watch for women. The composition of the number and its visualisation have been one of a kind, which I thoroughly enjoyed after Samantha's O Antava.

I cannot help but admit how most cameos I come across seem enforced, out of place, and just the result of a good personal relationship between the actor and the director or producer. However, Kaushik's incorporation of the character Bhaskar (played by Varun Dhawan in Bhediya) was smart and synchronised.

Coming to cameos, while most viewers were appalled by Akshay Kumar's special appearance, most failed to notice how well he essayed the antagonistic role of Sarkata's descendent. His pairing with Banerjee was simply brilliant, and hopefully casting directors will note their chemistry.

The overall harmonisation of myth and reality—conjoining the famous Uttarakhand-based folklore of Sarkata with the modern chauvinists—was such a beautifully crafted awakening call.

Made on a mere budget of Tk50 crore, the film earned almost Tk150 crore in the first two days of screening.

The collection came to me as no surprise, as the film—staying true to its commitment of uncompromised entertainment—has been one to remember this year and relish in years to come.

'Meyera Raat Dokhol Kor': Shayan lends voice to Kolkata protests

Musician Farzana Wahid Shayan, a dedicated advocate against injustice, returns with a powerful new song.

In response to the tragic rape and murder of Dr Moumita Debnath at Kolkata's RG Kar Medical College Hospital, Shayan has released a powerful protest anthem.

Titled Meyera Raat Dokhol Kor, the song has been shared on her Facebook and YouTube channels, quickly resonating with listeners and drawing widespread admiration.

Throughout her career, Shayan has remained a vocal critic of social and governmental injustices, using her music as a potent tool for protest.

Most recently, she joined students in their fight for change, continuing her unwavering commitment to speaking truth through her art.

Two Shakib Khan starrers postponed

Since the anti-discrimination student movement, Dhallywood has faced a significant slowdown with film releases and productions coming to a halt. Although the interim government has begun planning new movies, many projects are still delayed.

Two major Shakib Khan films have been affected. Borbaad, directed by Mehedi Hasan Hridoy and starring Indian actress Idhika Paul, was set to begin filming in September but has been postponed.

Another film, Sher, a Bangladesh-India joint venture, was scheduled for filming in December but has also been delayed, with production now expected to begin next year.

Besides, a "mass killing" case was filed against Hasina and 33 others over the firing on a rally of Hefajat-e Islam at Motijheel's Shapla Chattar on May 5, 2013.

Mohammad Babul Sardar Chakhari, chairman of Bangladesh People's Party, lodged the case with another Dhaka court that ordered inspector (investigation) of Motijheel Police Station to submit a report before it after a probe.

In another development, Hasina, Quader, Asaduzzaman, former law minister Anisul Huq, former foreign minister Hasan Mahmud, and former textiles and jute minister Jahangir Kabir Nanak were sued over the killing of Abdullah Al Tahir, a student at Bangladesh Institute of Glass and Ceramics in Rangpur.

Victim's father Abdur Rahman lodged the case with Rangpur Kotwali Cognisance Court making AL President Hasina the prime accused.

Forty people, including former ministers and members of the units of Rangpur district and city AL, Swechchhasebak League, Jubo League, and Chhatra League were made accused, along with 300 unidentified ones.

In Joypurhat, Hasina and Quader were accused in a case filed over the murder of Najibul Sarker Bishal, a student of class-XII of Panchbibi Business Management Institute, on August 4.

Apart from the two accused, 126 other leaders of AL, Jubo League, and Chhatra League were accused in the case filed by Najibul's father Muzidul Sarker with the Chief Judicial Magistrate's Court in Joypurhat that ordered the OC of Sadar Police Station to record the complaint as a FIR.

Former Jatiya Sangsad whip and AL Organising Secretary Abu Sayeed Al Mahmud Swapan and former AL lawmaker Shamsul Alam Dudu are among the named accused.

Meanwhile, a case was filed against ex-premier Hasina and former AL MP Shafiqul Islam Shimul over the murder of Natore school student Yasin Islam whose charred body was recovered from Shimul's house on August 6.

Yasin's father Fajer Ali also made Natore AL President Sirajul Islam, General Secretary Shariful Islam Romjan, Sadar Upazila Parishad Chairman Uma Chowdhury Joly and 111 unknown others accused in the case lodge with Natore Sadar Police Station.

India SC takes up doctor's

Questions have been raised against the police handling of the case since the beginning -- including the delay in allowing the women's parents to see the body, the postmortem report, and the prompt arrest of a civic volunteer, making it an open and shut case.

On and off the record, doctors have commented that the extent of the woman's injuries indicate the involvement of more than one attacker. There have also been reports that the police cremated the body in a hurry, which the Kolkata Police have denied.

The state's opposition BJP has been alleging that the police is involved in a massive cover-up to protect the guilty.

Their allegation got a boost after a midnight attack on the hospital on August 15, as the statewide women's "Reclaim the Night" demonstration was on. With the attackers wrecking the emergency department, the BJP said it was another attempt at obliterating evidence.

of the press is one of the pillars of democracy. If we want democracy, we have to ensure freedom of the press and freedom of speech."

Asked about enacting the mass media employees act, he said the government would look into it.

The information adviser said they would overhaul the Bangladesh Film Censor Board and take logical steps in response to demands for its abolition.

He said the murder of journalist couple Sagar Sarowar and Meherun Runi was painful and that submission of the probe report had been delayed repeatedly.

He said his ministry would do whatever it can to ensure justice for Sagar, Runi, and other journalists who had been killed.

"We want justice as soon as possible. We do not want to see any farce or dilly-dallying," he added.

Asked about people filing cases just because they have personal enmity with someone, Nahid said those not involved in crimes would not be punished.

"Even if cases are filed, action will be taken based on the probe. The law ministry has issued specific instructions in this regard."

Asked about corruption in the Department of Films and Publication (DFP) and Press Institute Bangladesh (PIB), the adviser said, "We have said that we do not want to see any place for corruption and nepotism. Institutions should be completely neutral."

He asked journalists to work neutrally, instead of being divided along party lines.

Nahid said, "You don't have to call me sir. I come to you as your child, as a representative of the people, with their demands and a vision for a new Bangladesh."

question must mention it in their joining letter.

The notification further states that the authority reserves the right to modify or revoke the order if any contrary or unfavourable information is found against any officer in the future.

Meanwhile, in a major development, the government yesterday promoted 73 police officials to the rank of deputy inspector general (DIG) of police.

Of them, 10 officers got direct promotions, while the remaining 63 got promoted to supernumerary positions (officials who hold the same position and perform the same duties after their elevation).

The Public Security Division of the home ministry issued two separate circulars, signed by Deputy Secretary Mahabub Rahman Sheikh, in this regard.

According to the notification, the order will be effective soon after joining.

For the supernumerary posts, the tenure will be one year. The posts will be dissolved in case the officers get promoted, go on retirement, or are removed from duty, read the second circular.

The circular added that the promotion of officers on education leave or on a mission abroad will take effect as soon as they return to their regular workplace.

According to sources, the majority of the police officials, who got promoted yesterday, are from batches 15 and 17 of the Bangladesh Civil Service (BCS).

Plunged into darkness

Of them, 366 lost vision in one eye, and 17 in both.

Al Amin from Barishal said like the days before, the student of Hatem Ali Boys and Girls High School in the southern city joined his peers and seniors in the protests on Nathullabad Road on July 17, with unforeseeable peril awaiting him that afternoon.

"I had gone to support my seniors and fellows who were being attacked indiscriminately. However, I never expected them [police] to fire bullets and pellets at us," said the 14-year-old.

At least 22 pellets entered different parts of the schoolboy's body that day, including one into his right eye. Following the incident, he was rushed to Sher-e-Bangla Medical College Hospital in the city.

More shocks were waiting for the family there. Doctors asked them to take him home despite multiple pellets still inside his body, including in the eye, as the authorities ordered the removal of all patients injured in the protests by that night, said Al Amin's mother Sharmin Jahan.

With whatever cash she could manage, she left home with her wounded son the next day and visited multiple health facilities for treatment.

"The hospitals were flooded with patients, which caused delays. After several tests and a thorough examination at Grameen GC Eye Hospital, they recommended immediate surgery and referred him [Al Amin] to Ispahani Islamia Eye Hospital in Dhaka," Sharmin said.

Like Al Amin, around 1,300 others were admitted to the hospitals in Dhaka, including the NIOH, Lions Eye Institute, Bangladesh Eye Hospital, and Dhaka Medical College Hospital's eye department, according to Dr Syeed Mehbub Ul Kadir of Bangladesh Eye Hospital.

Of them, 630 underwent surgeries -- more than 90 percent of whom have lost vision in one or both eyes, he added.

Most were admitted with pellet wounds causing retinal haemorrhage that led to loss of vision, said Dr Kadir.

In just 10 days from July 17, as many as 445 patients were rushed to the NIOH's emergency care. At least 305 of them had surgery.

Another 261 patients were brought between August 4 and 10, and 181 of them underwent surgery, the hospital said in a bulletin on August 11.

The patients have either become visually impaired or are at risk of losing sight. Their rehabilitation is important and urgent, added the bulletin.

Similar cases were reported from around the country, although a concrete figure is not available yet.

In Al Amin's case, the pellet had penetrated his retina, said his doctor vitreo-retinal surgeon Dr Farhana Yasmin of Ispahani Islamia Eye Institute and Hospital.

The boy had the surgery on August 13. However, the doctors could not get the pellet out as it was deeply stuck in his optic nerve, making it nearly impossible for surgeons to remove it.

The pellet would not further harm Al Amin's eye, but the incident has led to a loss of vision in the injured eye, Dr Farhana said. "He would require follow-ups, and perhaps, another surgery," she said.

The doctor attended to at least five similar patients in the past two days.

"My friends have returned to school while all I do these days is sit indoors or lie on the bed," said Al Amin, currently at home after being discharged on August 14.

"I don't know how long it will take for me to return to my old life – enjoying chase with my school friends in the playfield."

Restaurant worker Kazi Faruk, however, still lies in his bed at the NIOH, wearing sunglasses.

An unseeable barrier now stands between him and a world he can no longer see after losing vision in both eyes.

Once filled with hope, Faruk's life took a tragic turn on August 5, the day Dhaka's streets erupted in celebration following Sheikh Hasina's fall and departure from the country.

It began as a regular day in his small room at his mess in Merul Badda. The Capital, the restaurant where he had worked for the past four years, was closed due to the unrest and curfew.

When the news of Hasina's exit spread, Faruk, like lakhs of others, joined the jubilant crowds.

As an active protester who had been demonstrating with Brac University students since July 16, he joined them on this day of victory as well.

As the protesters neared Badda Police Station, the celebration turned into horror.

Without any warning, police opened fire, and in the ensuing chaos, Faruk was struck by shotgun pellets, including in his eyes.

He was rushed to the NIOH immediately, but the irreparable damage was already done.

"We're still trying to regain his vision," said the hospital's Director Prof Mostafa.

"It's tragic for me to be shot on the day of celebration after our successful mission. The doctors are trying their best. I would be happy if I could regain vision in at least one eye," Faruk said, his voice tinged with sadness.

While the hospital is providing necessary care, Faruk's worries go beyond his immediate treatment.

"The hospital is giving me the supplies I need, but I have to buy the medicines that aren't available here. People are checking on me now, but I fear that if they stop, I'll be left alone," he added.

Faruk's family is also grappling with the uncertainty hanging over his future. Having lost his parents long ago, Faruk had faced many challenges in life, but nothing as devastating as this.

Serbian police kill armed man in arrest shootout

AFP, Belgrade

A man has been shot dead by Serbian police, the interior minister said yesterday, after being connected with the attacker behind a crossbow shooting at the Israeli embassy in Belgrade in June.

Interior minister Ivica Dacic said the man fired shots toward the police near the southern city of Novi Pazar late Saturday and refused to surrender.

"During the arrest, he resisted, fired three to four shots at the police, and members of the Special Anti-Terrorist Unit neutralised him," Dacic told local media.

He added that the man had previously been convicted and jailed for terrorist offences.

The police operation took place in the village of Hotkovo, near Novi Pazar -- a historical and political centre of Serbia's Bosniak Muslim minority.

Three UN peacekeepers injured

AFP, Beirut

Three United Nations peacekeepers suffered light injuries yesterday, the UN said, after a blast near their vehicle close to Lebanon's southern border, where Hezbollah and Israel have traded near-daily fire.

"Earlier today, three peacekeepers on patrol were lightly injured when an explosion occurred near their clearly marked UN vehicle in the vicinity of Yarine, in south Lebanon," the UN Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) said.

"All peacekeepers in the patrol returned safely to their base. We are looking into the incident," it added.

Earlier yesterday, Lebanon's state-run National News Agency had reported that "Israeli enemy warplanes" struck the village of Dhayra, about one kilometre (0.6 miles) from Yarine, "resulting in injuries".

Harris easier than Biden to beat: Trump

REUTERS, Wilkes-Barre

US Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump said on Saturday he believed Democrat Kamala Harris will be easier to beat than President Joe Biden even as some polls showed her edging ahead in the race for the November 5 presidential election.

Trump, the former president, spoke at a rally in Wilkes-Barre in northeastern Pennsylvania, a state looming large in the campaign. Vice President Harris was due to conduct a bus tour of western Pennsylvania starting in Pittsburgh yesterday, ahead of the kickoff of the Democratic National Convention in Chicago today.

"I believe she will be easier to beat than him," said Trump, referring to her as "radical" and a "lunatic."

Trump has sought to portray Harris as far left on a number of policies. At the rally, he highlighted her previous call for a ban on fracking, an industry important to the state. Harris' campaign has recently indicated she would not support a ban.

He also continued to attack Harris on personal terms, even as some political analysts say such comments could hurt Trump with moderate voters.

"Have you heard her laugh? That is the laugh of a crazy person," Trump said, adding that he was displeased by the illustration of Harris on the cover of the latest issue of Time magazine. "I'm much better looking than her."

Venezuela's opposition vows to fight 'to the end'

AFP, Caracas

Venezuela's opposition, claiming victory in presidential elections they say were stolen by strongman Nicolas Maduro, gathered in the thousands in Caracas and elsewhere on Saturday, vowing to fight "to the end."

People rallied in several cities in Venezuela and as far afield as Spain, Belgium and Australia in response to a call by opposition leader Maria Corina Machado to join a "Protest for the Truth."

Machado herself came out of hiding to lead a rally in the capital, seeking to intensify pressure on Maduro to concede what she and others say was an overwhelming win for opposition candidate Edmundo Gonzalez Urrutia in July 28 polls.

"We won't leave the streets," Machado told thousands of demonstrators, many of whom waved the national flag and copies of election records from their voting stations as proof of an opposition victory.

"Peaceful protest is our right," she said as demonstrators chanted "Liberty! Liberty!" and clamored to get as near as possible to the wildly popular politician.

Ukraine strikes another bridge in Kursk region

Repels Russian missile attack on capital

AFP, Kyiv

Ukrainian forces have struck another bridge in Russia's Kursk region as they seek to disrupt Moscow's combat operations and supply routes, Ukraine's air force said yesterday.

The strike appeared to target a bridge crossing the river Seym near the village of Zvannoye, about 15 kilometres (nine miles) north of the Ukrainian border.

"Minus one more bridge. The Air Force aviation continues to deprive the enemy of logistical capabilities with precision air strikes," Air Force Commander Mykola Oleshchuk said on Telegram.

Ukrainian drones attacked an oil storage facility in Russia's southern Rostov region

He published an aerial video of a blast tearing through the bridge, leaving a large rupture on the road.

It was not clear when the attack took place. Russian military bloggers shared photos of destruction from what appeared to be the same bridge dated Saturday.

Ukraine announced it had destroyed a separate bridge near the town of Glushkovo late on Friday, both of which cross the river Seym.

Ukrainian forces also said they thwarted a Russian missile attack on the capital Kyiv where air raid sirens sounded before dawn yesterday.

"This is the third ballistic missile attack on the capital in August with a clear interval of six days between each attack," the Kyiv City Military Administration posted on Telegram after the early morning barrage.

Simultaneous to the missile attack, drones were spotted heading to Kyiv. "All enemy drones were destroyed far outside the city," it added.

No damage or casualties were reported from the attack, which the administration said had "most likely used North Korean ballistic missiles of the KN-23 type".

The United States and Seoul have accused North Korea of providing ammunition and missiles to Russia for its war in Ukraine.

Early yesterday morning, Ukrainian drones attacked an oil storage facility in Russia's southern Rostov region, sparking a large fuel fire, the local governor said.

Videos published on social media showed thick black smoke and bursts of flames coming from the site of the blaze, which the governor said was in the town of Proletarsk.

"In the south-east of the Rostov region, air defences repelled a drone attack. As a result of falling debris on the territory of industrial storage facilities in Proletarsk, a diesel fuel fire broke out," Governor Vasily Golubev said on Telegram.

"At 05:35 (0235 GMT), firefighting at the industrial facility in Proletarsk was suspended due to a second drone attack," he added in an update to the post.

Paetongtarn endorsed as PM by Thai king

REUTERS, Bangkok

Paetongtarn Shinawatra was endorsed as prime minister by Thailand's king yesterday, two days after parliament elected her, paving the way for her to form a cabinet in the coming weeks.

Paetongtarn, 37, becomes Thailand's youngest prime minister just days after ally Srettha Thavisin was dismissed as premier by the Constitutional Court, a judiciary central to Thailand's two decades of political turmoil.

Daughter of divisive former Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra, Paetongtarn won by nearly two-thirds in a house vote on Friday to become Thailand's second female prime minister and the third Shinawatra to take the office, following Thaksin and her aunt Yingluck Shinawatra.

The approval by King Maha Vajiralongkorn, a formality, was read out by House of Representatives Secretary Apat Sukhanand at a ceremony in Bangkok.

Dressed in official uniform, Paetongtarn knelt in homage to a portrait of king before giving a speech thanking the king and the people's representatives for endorsing her as prime minister.

Pakistan govt denies hand in ongoing internet disruptions

DAWN ONLINE

In the wake of internet disruptions across Pakistan and speculation over firewall installations, State Minister for Information Technology and Telecommunication Shaza Fatima Khawaja said yesterday that reports suggesting that the internet was being throttled by the government were "completely false."

On Thursday, Khawaja said that the government had ordered the Pakistan Telecommunication Authority (PTA) and other relevant bodies to submit a report after citizens in various cities of Pakistan claimed they had been facing internet connectivity issues.

Her statement came a day after the business community and internet service providers alleged that the government's heightened efforts to monitor internet traffic had resulted in a significant nationwide slowdown of services, leading to losses.

On Saturday, the Lahore High Court summoned representatives from the federal government, the information ministry, and the PTA on August 21 over internet disruptions.

Speaking at a press conference in Islamabad yesterday, Khawaja acknowledged the recent frustration among the public regarding internet issues. "I want to reassure the public that the internet has neither been shut down nor slowed down by the state," she said.

"Reports suggesting that the internet was being throttled are completely false. The issue was limited to a few services on certain apps not downloading, which led a large segment of the population to start using VPNs," she added.

A United Nations task force yesterday warned of soaring child malnutrition in Yemen's government-controlled areas, reporting "extremely critical" levels of malnutrition in parts of the country's south for the first time.

"The number of children under the age of five suffering acute malnutrition, or wasting, rose by 34 percent compared to the previous year ... affecting over 600,000 children, including 120,000 children who are severely malnourished," Unicef said of the latest report by Integrated Food Security Phase Classification (IPC) initiative.

Metro rail operations must be resumed

Such a vital service cannot be held hostage to salary hike demands

It is disheartening to see the continued suspension of Dhaka metro rail services—now into its second month—despite earlier assurances about services resuming on August 17. On Sunday, the newly appointed adviser of the road transport and bridges ministry expressed hope that the metro rail would be operational within seven days. And an announcement in this regard may come as early as Monday when a reconstituted board of the Dhaka Mass Transit Company Ltd (DMTCL) convenes to discuss grievances of the employees who are refusing to return to work. What all this means for the commuters is a few more days of suffering before things get better.

The metro work abstention is but a reflection of the chaos and disruption being witnessed across the civil service after the fall of the Awami League government on August 5. At the Secretariat, for example, there have been frequent processions by civil servants who were previously denied promotions for political reasons or poor performance, or preferred placements or postings—all seeking personal benefits rather than better public services. Although the closure of metro services since July 18 was initially linked to the vandalism of two stations during the quota reform protests, it later transpired that around 700 DMTCL employees from grades 10 to 20 have been holding a strike since August 6, shutting any chances of prompt resumption.

Reportedly, the employees have six demands, including one for a salary hike. They argue that those in grades 1 to 9 earn 2.3 times the national pay scale, while those in grades 10 to 20 earn twice the pay scale. They see this as "discrimination," and are demanding that it be rectified. This calls for a comprehensive review of the pay and benefits at DMTCL, which we hope the board will do soon. However, we cannot condone a total work stoppage for something that can be resolved amicably, especially when said stoppage has left thousands of daily commuters struggling with increased travel times, overcrowded roads, and higher transportation costs. The metro was designed to alleviate severe traffic congestion in Dhaka, and its absence is a significant setback.

Resuming its services, therefore, must be a top priority. The interim government's role in this regard is critical. It must ensure that the DMTCL management is supported in meeting the legitimate demands of its employees while also safeguarding the interests of the public. In the long run, the authorities must learn from this experience. Employee grievances should never be allowed to fester to a point where they disrupt essential services. On their part, the protesting employees, too, must understand that they cannot hold the public hostage for their own benefits. It is completely against the spirit of public service.

Extortion at slums, footpaths must stop

Govt must prevent political groups from exploiting public spaces

It is alarming that the evil politics of exploiting public spaces to extort citizens continues despite a regime change mere days ago. After the fall of the Awami League government on August 5, groups claiming allegiance to the BNP, now the central party in Bangladesh, are already trying to assert their dominance in slums and footpaths where AL-linked groups exerted their power for 15 years, according to a report in this daily.

Over the years, we have seen how unscrupulous political elements often took control of government land, built illegal shanties and shops, and sold unauthorised and often risky utility services at exorbitant prices in collusion with corrupt public officials. Similarly, such elements also took control of footpaths and extorted money from hawkers for conducting their business there. Even though a non-political interim government is now in power, pro-BNP elements, who had been absent from the politics of territory control for almost two decades because of AL's absolute dominance, could not wait for their term to wield their muscle power.

According to our report, they have already grabbed shanties, shops, clubs, and offices previously occupied by AL men in a number of places in Dhaka. Similar scenes have likely been unfolding in other cities as well thanks to the power vacuum created by recent events and the resultant mass escape by AL leaders. Thankfully, in some places, marauding cadres pulled away after receiving warnings from party high-ups. In other places, citizens' groups have intervened to thwart potential extortionists.

While we welcome BNP high-ups' effort to control their party activists, this is not enough. The political culture of allowing exploitation of public spaces to appease party activists and affiliates at the expense of the poor must stop. On the other hand, relevant government bodies including city corporations and utility companies must take stern measures to prevent illegal use of public spaces, properties and services. They should also mete out punishment to corrupt officials and law enforcers if found guilty of aiding political elements in such practices.

However, any measure to correct long years of wrongdoing should not lead to dispossessing and depriving anyone of a home or a means of living. We are talking about a proper rehabilitation of slum dwellers and street vendors. We hope that the interim government will initiate dialogue with experts and relevant stakeholders to address the underlying issues related to city slums and informal businesses on footpaths, and come up with sustainable solutions.

The education mission for the interim government

Dr Manzoor Ahmed
is professor emeritus at BRAC University, chair of Bangladesh ECD Network (BEN), and adviser to the Campaign for Popular Education (CAMPE).

MANZOOR AHMED

In 1974, Dr Muhammad Qudrat-i-Khuda, head of Bangladesh's first education commission, outlined many goals for the country's education sector, from universal literacy at the primary stage to quality education in Bangladesh universities. These goals were never realised. A majority of children aged 10-14 years cannot read or count at a basic level, according to World Bank estimates, and adult literacy skills at functional level remain well below 40 percent, according to an Education Watch assessment.

The expectations from the interim government, headed by Prof Muhammad Yunus, are many and high. The burning education questions are the policy and action priorities for the interim government.

To the credit of the Awami League government, the 2010 National Education Policy, adopted by the parliament, was a broadly accepted guideline for development in education. However, 14 years later, we have not seen a comprehensive and coordinated implementation plan for the policy. Most key objectives remain unmet, such as: i) a core unified curriculum for all types of school education with a minimum common standard of school provisions for all students; ii) major change in the professional training of teachers, their performance standards, their status and incentives, and assurance of adequate numbers; and iii) decentralised and accountable education governance, planning and management. These goals were aimed at realising an inclusive and equitable education system that responds to the needs of changing times.

Many educationists saw education development as fragmented and partial. The government actions did not address the roots of the problems. Too often, the government pursued solutions that avoided rocking the boat—solutions that usually don't work.

Public investment in education has remained at or below two percent of GDP—one of the lowest among developing countries. And larger budgets, under the present structure of planning, management and accountability, may lead to more waste, inefficiency, and mismanagement. One of the priorities should be a broad assessment of primary-level students' ability to read and do basic arithmetic, and actions based on the assessment to reach these targets. For example, Bangladesh could adopt the early grade reading and arithmetic survey, Annual Status of Education Report (ASER). It was pioneered by Pratham, an Indian NGO.

The burning education questions are the policy and action priorities for the interim government.

The past government claimed credit for a major expansion of student enrolment including girls, growth in the number of educational institutions, stipends for school students, distribution of free textbooks, and use of multimedia in classrooms. These have not produced satisfactory learning outcomes due to deficits in planning, school management, accountability, and pursuit of an education vision. We don't have enough teachers with professional skills, commitment to teaching, and a career path for them.

Comprehensive and coordinated planning has been obstructed by splitting school education into two ministries, unlike in any other country. As in other sectors, partisan political interests, rather than educational goals, have guided decision-making, especially in recruitment of personnel.

The new school education curriculum, launched in 2022 with much fanfare, has caused much anxiety and confusion among students, teachers, and parents.

The extraordinary recent events call for urgent actions. Students need to be in school and normal operations need to resume. At the university level, the University Grants Commission (UGC), in consultation with students and other stakeholders, should provide guidelines, but not seek to micro-manage. Each institution should consult students and teachers, and parents at school level, in implementing the guidelines.

With their sacrifice and maturity demonstrated in the popular movement, students have earned the right to have a role in managing the education and co-curricular activities of their institutions. Non-partisan elected student bodies should be formed in institutions.

The recent spate of resignations in top university positions requires that the right people be appointed to the right place. Appointments must be based on merit, not political loyalty. The process must ensure impartiality through measures such as clearly defined qualifications and use of search committees. A professional UGC can facilitate the process and consult teachers and students.

While changes are made, schools must continue to operate without disruptions and untried experimentations. This is particularly germane to the new curriculum. Most educationists want a pause in the rollout of the new curriculum. In order to minimise disruption, two steps can be taken: i) textbooks already introduced in some grades under the new curriculum may continue and existing textbooks may be used for other grades; and ii) conventional end-of-year or public student evaluation based on written examinations should continue, separating formative and practical work-based evaluation in classrooms from summative written examinations. Pausing for a year or so should be used to review and rethink the curricular reforms, particularly student evaluation, a highly controversial aspect of the new curriculum, and effective implementation in classrooms. Experts and stakeholders should be involved in this rethink.

An education consultative group of experts and stakeholders should examine the status and the priorities in the education sector and advise the interim government. They would look at the issues and suggest actions on the matters noted above. This group may be turned into a permanent, statutory commission as recommended in the 2010 education policy.

The consultative group would also consider and advise on larger policy questions related to the Sustainable Development Goals and national goals for building an equitable, inclusive and quality education system for all. These larger agenda would include: i) promoting an equitable society through education; ii) a time-bound plan for equitable and inclusive early childhood development and K-12 school education of acceptable quality for all; iii) strengthening the teaching profession and the education workforce in respect of their professional skills, motivation, performance and adequacy of numbers as well as effective use of digital technologies; iv) establishing decentralised district education authorities for planning and managing equitable K-12 education in every community; and v) ensuring academic autonomy of the education system and education institutions, protecting them from partisan politics.

The interim government may not complete all needed reforms. It should at least set a course which all stakeholders can endorse. If the interim government realises at least some of the key reforms, we will have honoured Dr Qudrat-i-Khuda's aspirations.

What the police reform requires

RAKIB AVI

For years, the police force has been used as an extension of the ruling party to control political opponents. Unfortunately, during the July uprising, the said opponents were the students and the general public who took to the streets. The abject lack of a moral compass from the leadership of the police, which made them mere puppets of an authoritarian regime, led to the killing of hundreds of civilians on the streets of Dhaka as well as across the country between July 16 and August 5. What followed was a deadly series of mob attacks that saw the killing of a number of law enforcement members across the country and the burning of police stations as they had become symbols of oppression of the previous regime. The topmost priority of the interim government is, of course, bringing the trigger-happy perpetrators in the police force and the members of the police leadership, who issued the order of shooting at civilians, to justice. But what comes after that? How do the general public and the country heal from an experience like this?

Like many other public institutions in the country, the police have also been enfeebled by successive political administrations over the last five decades in favour of political gains at the expense of the general public. Added to that is a general culture of lacking accountability, rampant corruption in recruitment, and overt political inclination. Hence, an overhaul of the police is long overdue. The members of the police force very recently staged a protest and made an 11-point demand to the interim government, which is legitimate and the current government should take it into consideration.

There are arguments as to how this reform should take place. But above all else, what needs to be prioritised is the full resumption of the general operations of the police force to ensure that we don't go back to the utter lawlessness of the days following the fall of the AL government. As praiseworthy as the community volunteerism has been in safeguarding people's lives and assets, it cannot be the way of life in a civilised country. The state has a mandate to provide safety and security to its citizens and the interim government's legitimacy hinges on ensuring it. As far as a long-term reform goes, a veritable change in how the police function needs to be the goal, not just cosmetic changes like updating the colour of the uniform and logos. It goes far deeper than just a branding issue and needs serious soul-searching from the remainder of the leadership of the police, aided by an empathetic home ministry.

Police reform is a complex process and requires independent oversight, strong political will, and support from a coalition of a broad group of stakeholders; the citizens are a crucial part of that process. There are successful global examples of how to initiate that reform, demonstrated by Singapore when they were trying to overcome their own problems of corruption in the 1950s, and also by South Africa in the post-apartheid era. There is no specific playbook to follow, and each country has its own way to achieve its goals, but there are a few steps which the interim government could follow.

> Police reform is a complex process and requires independent oversight, strong political will, and support from a coalition of a broad group of stakeholders; the citizens are a crucial part of that process. There are successful global examples of how to initiate that reform

First, an independent commission should be set up to provide oversight and investigate corrupt practices in the force. The neutrality and jurisdiction of this commission is critical in curbing corruption and putting an end to the use of the police force for political gains. This could be done by strengthening the Anti-Corruption Commission (ACC), with an added emphasis on the oversight of the police. Second, a lot has been said about improving the salaries and working conditions of police personnel, with very little happening on the ground. There ought to be a fair assessment of compensation and general improvement of working conditions if we are to separate the reputation of corruption from the police.

Third, the recruitment and training process needs to be revised to bring in more focus on integrity, community engagement, and ethical conduct. Finally, bringing the citizens and the police closer through community policing and public engagement is crucial to build trust and responsiveness to the needs of the people. There is an ever-widening trust deficit between the public and the police, further exacerbated by the recent events. A truly responsive and citizen-centric police force cannot function with little to no connection with the communities they serve. Police officers need to be encouraged to engage with the public and work collaboratively with the communities to solve local problems. It's also time to establish an effective public feedback mechanism to encourage reporting of problematic behaviours and concerns by the public.

"The past is a foreign country; they do things differently there," is the immortal opening line from LP Hartley's novel The Go-Between. It should also accurately describe the gulf between what used to happen in Bangladesh up until August 5 and what should happen in the coming days. Let's not cast our minds to the past, sustaining the memories of violence and despair. Now is the time to unite the country, rising above the politics of division and the labels that we all quite comfortably ascribe to people all around us. The police are also our fellow countrymen; let's not shun them due to the action of a small percentage of trigger-happy enforcers. A purge is due in the police force, but let them also heal with the rest of the nation and bounce back from their sclerotic leadership.

Underlying the mass agitation that eventually led to the downfall of the previous government is a deep sense of collective betrayal.

The politics of betrayal and trauma

Be·tray·al
: violation of a person's trust or confidence, of a moral standard, a contract, etc.

Bangladesh has experienced a dramatic series of events in recent weeks. An interim government has been formed, and we await fair and transparent elections. But we would do well to remember the cycles of betrayal and trauma that have shaped the politics of the country and to resolve that they are not repeated again.

Underlying the mass agitation that eventually led to the downfall of the previous government is a deep sense of collective betrayal. The Awami League government betrayed the most fundamental of public trusts: the expectation that the state will not wilfully kill one's children. "My son was murdered," said Shopna, the mother of slain 18-year-old protester Rahat Hossain. "And not by civilians, but by law enforcement officers under government orders. My son was killed by a bullet bought with my tax money."

What began in early July as peaceful protests by Bangladeshi university students against the quota system in government job recruitment faced a full-scale government crackdown as the police, the military, and border guard paramilitaries were deployed to quell the unrest. An Awami League government that shamelessly clung to power for 15 years through rigged elections and persecution of the opposition unleashed its punitive might on student protesters and citizens. A curfew was declared, and internet and mobile phone networks were shut down.

Betrayal has many faces, shapes and forms. At its core, though, is the experience of violation and trauma. The psychological effects of betrayal include anger, loss and grief, self-doubt, and preoccupation or an inability to let go of the precipitating events. Human beings do not compartmentalise these feelings. Emotions seep into political cultures where they have the potential to alter the course of a society.

In the wake of the police brutality, student organisers of the quota reform movement asked then Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina to apologise for what happened. It is easier to heal after betrayal when the responsible party takes ownership for what has happened. Regrettably, the Awami League government devoted its energies to denying responsibility, to pointing fingers at everyone but themselves.

The politics of betrayal in Bangladesh is painfully familiar to me. I am the daughter of the late Shah AMS Kibria. After joining the Awami League in 1992, my father was the finance minister of the government led by Sheikh Hasina from 1996 to 2001. Following that, he was a member of the opposition in parliament and a vocal critic of the rise of militancy, persecution of religious minorities, and state-sponsored political violence in the country.

On January 27, 2005, Shah AMS Kibria was assassinated by a grenade attack during a public meeting at his constituency in Sylhet.

Following her husband's killing, the late Asma Kibria fought hard for a full and transparent investigation conducted independently of the BNP-Jamaat government of the time. I am reminded of her indomitable spirit when I hear Shamsi Ara Zaman, the mother of 27-year-old Tahir Zaman, a freelance photographer who was killed on July 17 when he went to film the protests, "I want justice. As a mother I will do whatever is necessary to get justice for my son."

When the Awami League was elected in 2009, we, the family, rejoiced. After four long years, we would get justice for my father's murder. Who more so than a government led by the political party that he had loyally served could be motivated to address the questions that had been haunting us since that fateful day in 2005? Who ordered the grenade attack on him? What was the source of the grenades?

For 15 years, the Awami League led by Sheikh Hasina has held the reins of government in Bangladesh. For 15 years, we have not seen a complete investigation and trial into our father/grandfather's murder. For 15 years, the crucial questions of motive, intent and plan remain unanswered.

It is of great sorrow to me that my mother never saw the justice that she sought. She died with the trauma of betrayal. "Where can we get justice," she said, "if even those he trusted the most do not have the will to find and punish his murderers?" Her trauma is now mine, to be passed down through the generations of our family.

Growing up, my parents instilled in me a deep appreciation for the ideals of the 1971 Liberation War and the sacrifices of those who gave their lives for the independence of Bangladesh. Over the past decade and a half, I have watched with dismay as the Awami League—the political party so closely tied with these iconic events—chose to politicise and weaponise this glorious history, using it to divide rather than unite the nation.

When I watched the terrifying footage of Abu Sayed, a student shot and killed during the quota reform protests, I felt the sting of many betrayals, one top of another and another. How could the government authorise the use of deadly force against unarmed student protesters? How could a government led by the Awami League, a party founded on principles of self-determination and democracy, turn on its own people? There is a sense in which I am grateful that my father is not around to see the moral degeneration of the party he served with dedication.

Bangladesh is now at a political crossroads. The country, I believe, can only heal from the trauma of betrayal if there is a concerted building of trust in public institutions and those who serve in them—whether it is a policeperson directing traffic or a clerk at the passport control office or a Supreme Court judge. The politicisation of our institutions must stop. After all, in the end, it is very easy to be betrayed by a political party or a political leader. But if we know that our public institutions are there to serve all of us, regardless of who is in power, it may not matter so much.

After all, as Shah AMS Kibria used to say, "We Bangalees can never be put down for long. We sacrificed our lives for freedom once and we will do so again if necessary."

RIGHT TO INFORMATION

Time for the sunshine law

SHAMSUL BARI and RUHI NAZ

The seismic changes in Bangladesh in three fateful weeks—from mid-July to early August—were a powerful testament to people's power. The induction of an interim government led by Nobel laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus has been a harbinger of hope for the country's Right to Information (RTI) Act. This law can help meet the nation's cry for systemic change in governance.

Over the years, this column has lamented that a powerful law like the RTI Act has not been utilised to its full extent. More than a handful of activists and individual citizens have used it, but Bangladesh's civil society, known for its stand on public issues, has largely stayed away. One reason for this was the fear of possible reprisal by the authorities facing information requests on sensitive matters that may expose their misdeeds.

Under the country's changed circumstances, it is time for all, particularly our student community which led the recent uprising, to turn their attention to the law.

RTI is popularly called the sunshine law, as it is meant to shine light on a government's activities. The RTI Act, 2009 provides a legal framework for all citizens to access relevant information from government offices relating to their responsibilities. The idea is that by doing so, they can assess if the offices concerned are performing their duties under the laws of the land. The preamble to the act proclaims that by applying the law, "transparency and accountability of all public ... institutions ... shall increase, corruption of the same shall decrease and good governance of the same shall be established."

Unlike most other laws, the RTI Act requires all public offices to promptly respond to citizens' information requests and, where delinquent, face sanctions. This is a powerful way to hold public officials accountable and make them responsive to the people. It's a step towards establishing transparent and accountable governance, the two most essential elements of democracy. While this law establishes a right, it also lays the responsibility on citizens to hold their government accountable.

FILE VISUAL: STAR

Prof Yunus's call to the nation to unite and help establish peace, justice, freedom, non-discrimination and equality in the country—all very important elements for democracy—resonates well with the primary objectives of the RTI Act. By resorting to it faithfully, our youth can promote systemic changes in the country's governance culture. Their demonstrated skills in organising and achieving their goals in recent times will be invaluable in this new endeavour.

To begin with, they must fully grasp the potential of the RTI Act and learn how to use it to advance their goals. Once that is done, they must develop a specific strategy to achieve them. Therefore, understanding the law's substance and the processes involved in its application is important. Towards that end, we focus below on a few of its salient elements.

An important attribute of the RTI Act is fostering interaction between citizens and public officials. By seeking pertinent information from public offices, citizens establish contact with the officials and simultaneously remind them that they are under public scrutiny. Such interaction was impossible under the Official Secrets Act, 1923, a remnant of colonial times, which prevailed before the enactment of the RTI Act.

The RTI Act serves as a bridge, connecting citizens with government bodies meant to serve them. Any information request from a citizen to a government unit's designated officer (DO) requires a prompt response. Preparing the response, which involves consultation within the office unit, establishes a direct connection between the citizen seeking information and the relevant government office.

To illustrate the process, let us use the quota system for government jobs, which ignited the recent student protests, as an example. Suppose a citizen, whether curious or aggrieved, wished to know how the application of the quota system affected the selection of candidates for public jobs and sent an information request to the DO of the Public Service Commission (PSC). The request asked for lists of candidates who sat for the Bangladesh Civil Service (BCS) exams in a given year, were selected for government jobs, and benefited from the quota system.

The DO could provide the information faithfully if they wished to abide by the law. Another option would be to disregard or bin the request if there was something to hide or if the office felt uneasy about responding. The law, however, provides for an appeal, and if that does not lead to a satisfactory response, a complaint could be filed with the Information Commission. So, the DO and their colleagues must consider what option to take. If they took the first option, the information could be publicised and become a subject for discussion, leading to whatever action is considered necessary by those affected. This is the main objective of the law: drawing public attention to official actions affecting the public.

If the information was not provided or only partially provided and the applicant was dissatisfied, an appeal could be filed with a higher authority in the office. If that, too, was found unsatisfactory, then a complaint could be filed with the Information Commission. The latter would then have to call the two sides and decide on the respective claims, including a directive to provide the information and even sanctions against the delinquent officials. Or the commission could decide against disclosure of the information, in which case the applicant could file a writ petition with the High Court. Thus, a citizen's request for information would have led to national attention to an issue of public interest, alerting the office concerned to be at least careful about how it went about its work. Just imagine if this happened on many other national issues.

When six coordinators of the quota reform movement were picked up, social media pressure forced the authorities to reveal their whereabouts. There was widespread concern in the country about their well-being. RTI could have been used to seek such information from the police, as the law provides for a response within 24 hours if it concerns citizens' human rights. But very few knew this.

Now is the opportunity for our youth, with their courage and sense of national responsibility, to lead us in using existing laws to build a better country. We have faith in the younger citizens' capability to apply the law and oversee the system as a whole, including the role of the Information Commission and the selection process of the commissioners entrusted to safeguard such an important institution. We can only go forward from here.

Shamsur Rahman and Muslim Bengali childhood

MODERNITY, CITY, AND SOLILOQUY

> Shamsur Rahman developed a stylistic approach that diverged from the Calcutta-based concept of modernity and the European notion of cosmopolitanism. His poetic language was deeply influenced by his Islamicate Muslim childhood, which subtly informed the narrative of his work.

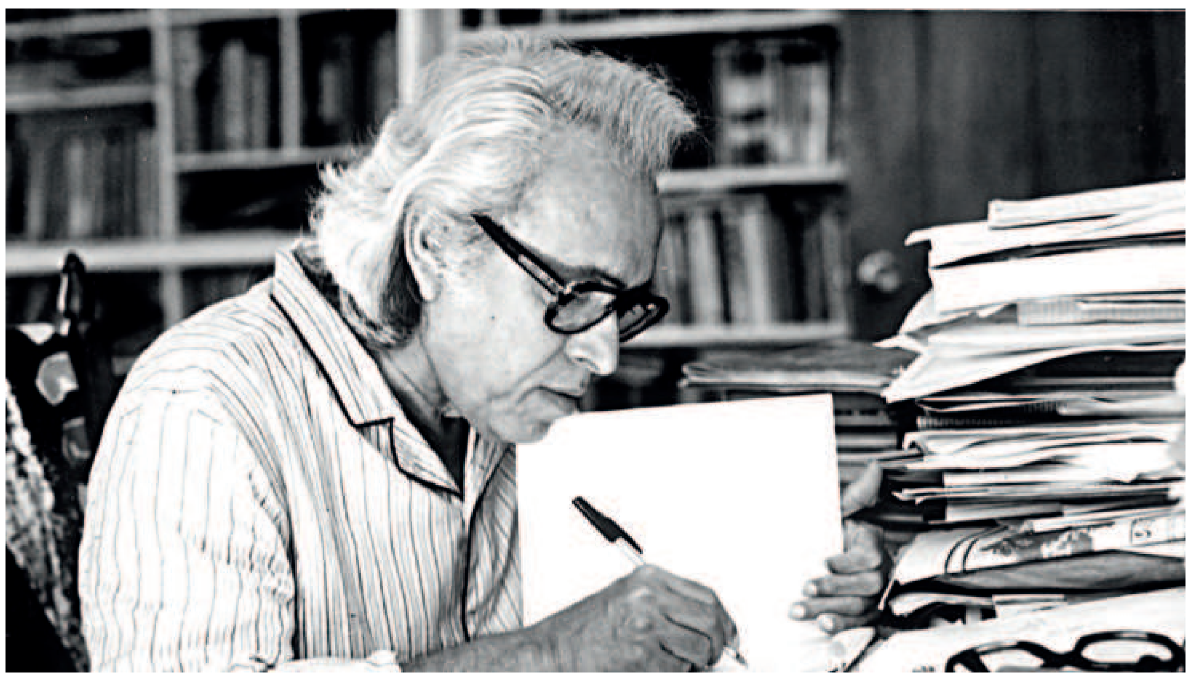
MUJIB RAHMAN

The poetic tradition in the East, particularly in Greater India, has long been characterised by diverse literary experimentation, significantly influenced by Sanskritic, Arabic, and Persian cosmopolitan traditions. Over time, this tradition also drew substantial inspiration from various aspects of colonial modern aesthetics. Poet Shamsur Rahman—affectionately known as Bacchu among close friends—embodies this cosmopolitan narrative. To critically assess Shamsur Rahman's aesthetic sensibility and modernist tone, we must explore the various trajectories within the framework of multiple modernities.

It is also crucial to situate the poet's upbringing, the childhood scenarios depicted in his poetry and memoirs, and his concepts of self and city within the context of the Islamicate, as outlined by M.S. Hodgson. When referring to the Islamicate and Muslim Bengali childhood of old Dhaka, it should not be conflated with an Islamic one. The terms "Islamicate" and "Muslim Bengali" are secular and worldly, often linked to a social and cultural complex that is distinct from religiosity.



Shamsur Rahman (Oct 23, 1929 – Aug 17, 2006)

> His childhood memories serve as a wellspring of inspiration for the development of his unique poetic style. While it may initially appear that he is reliving a colonial and medieval city, it is clear that Shamsur's work must be understood within the broader context of the city's distinctive lineage within the global city narrative.

THE POETICS OF ISLAMICATE CHILDHOOD

In the following poems, we will explore the social and psychological atmosphere of Shamsur Rahman's childhood. Among his poetry centred on childhood, he often evokes the multi-faceted, lost memories of his early years. However, our primary focus here is to unpack the cultural dimensions of Bengali Muslim childhood, its worldview, and its ethos. By delving into the poetics of Rahman's childhood and his autobiographical reflections, we gain insight into the upbringing of Bengali Muslims during the late colonial period. As previously indicated, we are making a clear distinction between the Islamic and the Islamicate; when we refer to Muslim Bengali childhood, it must be situated within the Islamicate sphere—undisputedly non-sectarian and all-encompassing, distinct from the religious dimension.

An unknown, oft-visited lamplighter with a ladder, usually found in the alleyways at dusk

The vivid portrayal of the lamplighter of old Dhaka in the early 1930s serves as a representative sample of the poet's early childhood. Through this narrative, Shamsur Rahman retrieves the lost heritage of earlier town planning and the daily life of old Dhaka's alleys. It is important to note that during that time, DESCO, WASA, and WAPDA were not parts of Dhaka's infrastructure, which does not mean that Dhaka had yet to develop into a modern city or become a hub for the bourgeoisie. From an urban studies perspective, Dhaka's lineage as a city can be traced back to the Middle Ages, if not earlier. As we explore Dhaka's contours through Shamsur's poetic narration, the distinctive features of an oriental and Mughal city like Dhaka will become evident.

The depiction of the lamplighter's tattered shirt and curly mustache reminds us of the often-marginal characters in the city, celebrated in surrealist discourse, who reveal the tales of the city. This is superbly portrayed in Shamsur's famous poem, Shoishober Bati-ola Amake (Chance encounter with that famed lamplighter of my old town childhood). In this regard, Shamsur's lamplighter, if not a connoisseur of the city, resembles Baudelaire's flâneur: both recapture the many lives of a decadent city. The arrival of the lamplighter at dusk, signalling the dazzling glow of night, is one of Shamsur's finest works, creating an iconic character easily identified by readers as the from 46 Mahut-Toli.

Ma is never found in the green room

This narrative captures the inner world of Bengali Muslim women in relation to the arts and aesthetics. Unlike their Hindu counterparts, the emergence of Bengali Muslim women in the public sphere took a different path. In his poems and autobiography, Shamsur Rahman reflects on growing up in an environment often devoid of arts and aesthetics, focusing instead on school textbooks, though this was not always the case. He poignantly reveals that he never saw his mother sing, prompting us to consider the predicament of Bengali Muslim women. Shamsur challenges us to confront the question of modernity for Bengali Muslims. This is evident in every line of his work. The poem Kokhono Amar Ma'ke (Ma is never found in the green room) is less concerned with aesthetic judgment and more with meditative reflection on the mother figure within a Freudian narrative, distinct from the typical Oedipus complex.

Manhood & its cracked mirror

In the poetic narration of Dussomoyer Mukhomukhi (Manhood reminisces and relives the lost childhood), Shamsur Rahman takes us back to his early childhood, growing up in a typical Bengali Muslim household. This poem vividly depicts the evolving milieu of Bengali Muslim childhood, serving as an archive of a young boy's coming-of-age story. The mosque, with its intricate floral engravings, decorations—a hallmark of Islamicate architecture from the Sultanate era—and the water tank with its fish, all captivated Shamsur. He also recalls his father reciting the Azan during a deadly cyclone to calm the approaching storm. These images not only recapture memories but also serve as a poetic archive of Bengali Muslim childhood, common across the social spectrum.

To become more Hindu among Hindus

The remembrance of things past is beautifully articulated in the esoteric poem Chelebela Theke (From My Childhood). It can be argued that this poem serves as a rare document of partition from a poetic perspective, documenting the secular and non-sectarian upbringing in old Dhaka. Among his friends, Shamsur names Arun, Sunil, Subimal, Surjokishor, Taher, and Ashraf. One fine morning, the poet discovers that all his Hindu classmates, including Subimal and Shisir, have left for India—a decision often attributed to the desire to become "more Hindu among Hindus"—a typical narrative of the 1947 partition. His Hindu playmates and non-sectarian Hindu teacher at Pogose School always compelled him, in later days, to reflect on the plight of Hindus in Bangladesh. Besides the tale of Hindu-Muslim solidarity and the tragedy of partition, Shamsur also recounts the heartbreaking loss of his sister, Nehar, in the poem. It was on this occasion that the poet wrote his first elegy, in memory of his deceased sister. All these events unfolded in the Islamicate old town, where Shamsur lived as a Muslim among Hindus.

One Fine Eid Morning

In the poem Das Takar Note Ebong Shoishob (One Fine Eid Morning), Shamsur Rahman reflects on his early childhood, again typical of a Bengali Muslim upbringing. While many poets have written about Durgapuja, Saraswati Puja, and Rathjatra, the world of Bengali Muslim childhood has rarely been explored. Shamsur Rahman ventures into this realm, offering a vivid representation of early Muslim childhood, centring around the Eid festival and the tradition of giving Eid money, known as edyee in the vernacular. He evokes memories of his childhood neighbourhood: the house of Henry, the lamplighter, kulphiwala, and the typical horse stable—a reminiscence of Muslim heritage—with the celebration of Eid at the heart of it.

The Soft Stretch of Father's Prayer-Mat

Shamsur Rahman wrote several poems about the liberation war of Bangladesh, with Swadhinota Tumi being the most renowned. In this poem, he creates a surreal image of his father's prayer mat. During his early childhood, Shamsur would often intrude on his father's prayer time, occasionally receiving a gentle scolding for his interruptions. Rather than merely evoking lost time, Shamsur Rahman draws us into a vivid reliving of it, seamlessly blending past and present.

THE POETIC MEMOIRE OF SHAHI DHAKA: THE LIFE OF AN ORIENTAL CITY

We often hear that poetry serves as a journal and a representation of the everyday. In Shamsur Rahman's work, certain figures and images repeatedly resurface: the Batiwala, Bhakarkhaniwala, Bhistiwala, and horse stable all hint at the city's longstanding Islamicate orientation. Alizan Beyapari, with his pump shoes and his renovation of the seventeenth-century Mirza Mosque—now known as Sitara Mosque, with its colourful, engraved star domes—captivated Shamsur. The poet also explores the worlds of Kawali, Merasin (marginalised women musicians), and the vernacular, including the unknown naive painter Noyeem Mia, with whom he delved into the enigmatic world of painting. Mr. Harney and his son Waisy, along with the neighbourhood populated by Anglo-Indians, Armenian traders, and their places of worship—including churches—feature prominently in his work. Lastly, Shamsur intertwines his persona with the grandeur of Shahi palaces and caravanserais like Choto Katra and Boro Katra. He also depicts the home and world of the Dhakai Nabab, highlighting the divide between them and the unlettered kutti, as well as the native Bengali Muslim. Landmarks in the old town, such as Bahadur Shah Zafar Park and Lalbagh Fort evoke memories of the persecution and execution of soldiers during the First War of Independence in 1857.

It is evident from his writing that his family and neighbourhood were deeply rooted in religiosity, though not in a sectarian way. As a child, Shamsur was influenced by both the Karbala and Hindu Vaisnavite traditions, such as Janmashtami. He fondly recalls the evocative memories associated with Dhakeswari and Ramna Temple and participated solemnly in various Pujo celebrations. This should be understood within the framework of a secular, non-sectarian, and Islamicate worldview. One of his most cherished memories relates to Karbala, which holds a central place in Bengali Muslim culture. Notably, he memorised Mir Mosarraf Hossain's Bishad Sindhu while reading it aloud to his grandmother during his early childhood. In several of his poems and some prose written in memoir form, Karbala, Tazia, the Duldul horse, and Hossaini Dalan are recalled with deep reverence.

The many facets of fanciful and delirious Dhaka nights are vividly captured in his now-classic poem Ai Matuala Rait (The Delirious Dhaka Night), written after he returned from a tavern at midnight. The poem's distinctive style is apparent in its masterful use of local idioms and the Perso-Arabic vocabulary of the old town.

Through these images, Shamsur crafts the narrative of his poetry. His childhood memories serve as a wellspring of inspiration for the development of his unique poetic style. While it may initially appear that he is reliving a colonial and medieval city, it is clear that Shamsur's work must be understood within the broader context of the city's distinctive lineage within the global city narrative.

It is often said that Dhaka does not fit the Western concept of a city; rather, it resembles a series of souks, as noted by many anthropologists. The concept of a souk has a different genealogy in the Middle Eastern world, often carrying an Islamicate connotation. The trajectory of an oriental city is markedly different from that of a Western one. It is clear that the genealogy of an oriental city like Dhaka cannot be fully explained by the Western narrative; it must be understood within the framework of multiple, diverse, and alternative modernities. Many sociologists and anthropologists of urban life have emphasised the unique and distinctive character of our city within the global city narrative.

THE SWADESHI MODERNITY: THE LINEAGE OF OUR MODERN POETICS

Kavitar Songe Gerosthali (Living together with poetry) is one of Shamsur Rahman's most poignant poems. In this work, we find early signs of his poetic development. Through his creative imagination, Shamsur vividly illustrates his journey to becoming a poet. We also gain insight into his liberal upbringing, guided by his elder brother, who was deeply immersed in the world of Tagore. Shamsur's poetic perspective was influenced by a fortuitous encounter with Tagore's Chayanika, followed by his discovery of Sanchayita in the early 1940s. By the early 1950s, he was drawn to the modernist poets of the 1930s, notably Das, Bose, and Dutt. He also found inspiration in Western modernist and surrealist poets such as Paul Éluard and Louis Aragon. William Radice aptly notes that while Shamsur could craft a perfect sonnet, he preferred a poetic form that allowed freedom and flexibility, yet never appeared uncontrolled.

Although this poem does not explicitly detail his poetic influences, Shamsur elsewhere acknowledges various poets from different traditions, including Islamicate figures like Ghalib, Hafiz, and Rumi, as well as other renowned Persian and cosmopolitan poets. It is noteworthy that, early in his career, he introduced the Multani poet Khwaja Farid to his audience.

In 1953, Shamsur delivered a lecture at Shantiniketan, where he clearly differentiated between Islamic revivalist poetry and the secular, Islamicate tradition. The former included poets like Golam Mustafa and Farrukh Ahmad, while the latter comprised poets such as Ahsan Habib and others. Shamsur was committed to advancing the secular tradition. In developing his own style, he regularly drew inspiration from Hafiz, Ghalib, and Neruda, deeply immersing himself in his childhood memories. He frequently highlighted that his early years were enriched by the poetry and epics of Islamic, Persian, and Sanskrit cosmopolitan discourses, all of which shaped the contours of his poetic style.

As we often say, Shamsur Rahman, or Bacchu, was the quintessential poet of Dhaka. He vividly portrayed the everyday life of Bangladesh and captured the political events of the century through his poetic vision. In doing so, he developed a stylistic approach that diverged from the Calcutta-based concept of modernity and the European notion of cosmopolitanism. His poetic language was deeply influenced by his Islamicate Muslim childhood, which subtly informed the narrative of his work.

The lineage of Shamsur's poetics, both within his poetry and in the context of Dhaka, should not be framed within the parameters of Western modernity. As it is often said, modernity is not singular but plural, encompassing numerous distinct styles. Ultimately, Shamsur Rahman, our Bacchu, represents the essence of Swadeshi modernity—a modernity shaped by our own unique narrative of disenchantment and reflected in the poetics of our world.

HP lose final in Australia

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh High Performance (HP) finished runners-up in the Top End T20 Series following a 32-run defeat against Adelaide Strikers in the final at the DXC Arena in Darwin yesterday.

Chasing a target of 170 runs, Bangladesh batters let their side down as they could not get enough momentum during the chase. Tanzid Hasan Tamim and Mahfuzur Rahman Rabby made 35 and 21 runs respectively but it could hardly help the side as they were bundled out for 137 runs in 19.5 overs.

Jordan Buckingham, Liam Scott, Tim Oakley, Noah Mcfadyen and Lloyd Pope took two wickets each.

Earlier, Tom O'Connell struck a 33-ball 53 while Ryan King and Liam made 35 and 30 runs respectively which propelled the Strikers to 169-7.

Pacer Ripon Mondol, who finished the tournament as the highest wicket-taker with 15 scalps, took two wickets in the final.

Earlier in the day, Bangladesh HP beat Northern Territoty Strike by 21 runs in the second semifinal to book a berth in the final.

Bangladesh set to play against Bhutan next month

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh national football team are set to to play two friendly matches against Bhutan in FIFA September window, Bangladesh Football Federation's general secretary Emran Hossain Tushar said yesterday.

"We were hopeful about hosting Bhutan in the September window but the opponents have a concern regarding the current situation in Bangladesh. They are supposed to inform us about their decision on Monday. If they don't want to come here, then we will go Bhutan to play the matches," said Emran.

The BFF general secretary said they picked Bhutan as opponents mainly with the aim of increasing FIFA ranking, with a target of securing Pot-3 instead of Pot-4 in the upcoming draw for the Asian Cup Qualifiers.

Meanwhile, Emran revealed that FIFA recently imposed a fine of 15,000 Swiss Francs [equivalent to Tk 20 lakh] on the BFF over security lapse during Bangladesh's World Cup qualifying match against Australia at the Bashundara Kings Arena on June 6.

Bangladesh were previously fined twice by FIFA – 11,250 Swiss Francs and 1400 Swiss Francs -- during matches against Lebanon and Maldives on Nov 21, 2023 and October 17, 202, both in World Cup qualifying matches at Bashundara Kings Arena.

The BFF general secretary, therefore, requested football fans to enjoy international matches by obeying all rules and regulations.

Bangladesh Sports Institute will be a blessing: Sports adviser

SPORTS REPORTER

Adviser to the Ministry of Youth and Sports in the interim government Asif Mahmud Sajib Bhuiyan on Sunday announced his plans of creating Bangladesh Sports Institute – a first-of-its-kind institution in the country which will work to take Bangladesh sports to the next level.

Asif made the announcement during a press conference at the Secretariat on the 11th day after the current interim government headed by Prof. Muhammad Yunus took oath on August 8. Secretary of the youth and sports ministry Dr. Mohiuddin Ahmed was also present at the event.

"In order to produce international quality sportspersons in Bangladesh and to achieve greater success globally, Bangladesh Sports Institute will collaborate with national and international sports organisations and will deliver specialised and infrastructural assistance to the athletes," Asif told reporters during the press meet.

"Countries like the UK, the USA, China and France have achieved immense successes by linking sports and science together. Bangladesh also wants to reach to such levels through the Bangladesh Sports Institute," he added.

However, the adviser did not provide any specifics about the estimated cost for the institute nor when it could be launched in his press conference.

"To achieve the ultimate target and get quality service, experts from both home and abroad will be involved in Bangladesh Sports Institute. The ministry is determined to complete the project in the shortest possible time. I hope it will be a blessing for the sports fraternity," he said.

The adviser added that the new institute will be an independent organisation and will work to accommodate the sportspersons who come out of BKSP.

"Many athletes come into sports through BKSP. There, they receive training and an education side-by-side till the Higher Secondary Certificate exam. But there is no specific organisation they can go to after that. That's why this project has been undertaken.

"This won't be run by the BKSP. It will be an independent organisation. We will check whether we can accommodate this in our existing infrastructure. Otherwise, we will start it through building new infrastructure," he said.

Several board directors of the Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) including president Nazmul Hasan Papon have gone into hiding since the Awami League government fell through a student uprising on August 5.

Some recent media reports have claimed that the BCB president expressed his willingness to resign from his position to few of the other board directors.

Asif, however, said that he is yet to receive a letter of resignation from any of the BCB directors.

"I have seen it in the media that the BCB president and board directors want to resign. But I'm yet to receive anything related to that directly. We are now discussing the matter with different stakeholders and former cricketers to solve the issue," he said.

The adviser also said that they are in discussion with the International Cricket Council (ICC) regarding hosting the upcoming ICC T20 World Cup in October.

Asif also said that the ministry will be working to ensure that the constitutions of all sports federations are more democratic and also unearth the corruptions that have taken place in different sports bodies in the last few years.

"We speak about a reformation in the system, not a change in individual. The ones who corrupted the system will definitely be removed. But those who come into the [cricket] board or are handed the responsibility have to make the constitution more democratic. Along with that, the irregularities and corruption that have happened before must come to light. We have the same plan for other federations as well."

Govt has no problem with names of Sk Jamal and Sk Russel: BFF GS

SPORTS REPORTER

With the withdrawal of sponsors following the recent political turmoil in the country, clubs like Sheikh Jamal DC and Sheikh Russel KC are struggling to form squads for the upcoming football season, with the latter having already informed the Bangladesh Football Federation (BFF) about their inability to participate in the Bangladesh Premier League.

The interim government, however, has no problem with the names of Sheikh Jamal and Sheikh Russel, two sporting outfits named after two sons of Bagabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman and younger brothers of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina.

"We have come to know from media and players that three clubs – Sheikh Jamal, Sheikh Russel and Chittagong Abahani – will not participate in the upcoming league. Sheikh Russel officially informed us about it yesterday [Saturday]. In this situation, the players sat with the president [Kazi Salahuddin], who requested the clubs to take part in the league.

"I have informed the Youth and Sports Adviser about the developments, and he said as sponsorship is a matter of clubs, the clubs should manage these things. They [govt] don't have any problem with names of Sheikh Jamal and Sheikh Russel. They [govt} will provide necessary security to the clubs if needed," BFF's general secretary Emran Hossain told reporters yesterday after a meeting with adviser Asif Mahmud at the ministry.

Alvarez fits perfectly with Atleti DNA: Simeone

REUTERS, Madrid

Atletico Madrid manager Diego Simeone heaped praise on his new signing Julian Alvarez and expects great things from the 24-year-old Argentine forward.

Alvarez only joined Atletico last week after they paid Manchester City a deal reported by British media to be worth around 75 million euros ($82.7 million), Simeone said he could available for Monday's LaLiga opener at Villarreal.

"Julian (Alvarez) is a player we are all looking forward to seeing and who will help us to be better. It was all very sudden, so quick. He just arrived a little while ago, has been training for four days but has been adapting fast," Simeone told a press conference on Sunday.

"But I see him with a lot of enthusiasm, knowing where he is coming from and understanding where he is heading towards. His characteristics fit to the Atleti DNA."

After spending over 150 million euros on Alvarez, Spain Euro 2024-winning defender Robin Le Normand and last season's LaLiga top scorer Alexander Sorloth, Simeone played down title expectations.

With negotiations to sign Chelsea midfielder Conor Gallagher lingering, Simeone said they still need to add more players to be competitive against a Real Madrid side who won the Champions League and LaLiga double last season before recruiting France captain Kylian Mbappe.

"Real Madrid start the season as the best team and will have to prove it with the wonderful players they have while all the rest of us will be behind to compete against them," Simeone said.

"We haven't closed the squad yet, apart from not closing it yet, we need to focus on tomorrow's game and see game by game how the team progress.

"Barcelona continue to have a very good team, Real continue to grow with players who are phenomenal but it's clear for me that we have to think about ourselves."

201 officials promoted to joint secys

73 police officers also elevated to rank of DIG

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government has promoted 201 officials from the post of deputy secretary to joint secretary.

A notification, signed by Ziauddin Chowdhury, deputy secretary of the Ministry of Public Administration, was issued to this effect yesterday.

Since the fall of the Awami League government, "politically sidelined" officers have been gathering at the Secretariat almost every day to put pressure on the interim government to promote them.

According to sources, among these officers, some were politically sidelined, while others were overlooked due to their poor track records.

Earlier on August 13, 117 government officials were elevated to the rank of deputy secretary from the post of senior assistant secretary or its equivalent.

The promotions that these officers received are retroactive, meaning that they take effect from the date they became eligible. This also means these officers are entitled to retrospective financial benefits.

According to the notification, the promoted officers can submit their joining letters to the public administration ministry in person or by e-mail.

If an officer's place of employment has changed from the one specified in the promotion order, the officer in

626 took shelter in cantonments

Says ISPR; seven of them still there

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh Army provided shelter to 626 people of many professions, including politicians and law enforcers, in cantonments during the recent political upheaval.

The Inter-Services Public Relations Directorate (ISPR) disclosed the information in a press release yesterday.

According to the release, the law and order situation across the country deteriorated drastically following the ouster of the Awami League government on August 5.

"Fearing for their lives, citizens, including some political figures, sought shelter in the cantonments," it reads.

A total of 626 people, including 24 political personalities, five judges, 19 civil administration officials, 28 police officers, 487 policemen of different positions, 12 people of various professions including officials of public universities, and 51 families (wives and children) took shelter in different cantonments, the release reads.

The ISPR further stated that 615 people had already left the cantonment on their own initiative as the situation improved. So far, four of the sheltered people have been handed over to law enforcement agencies following the proper legal process based on the allegations or cases brought against them.

"At present, seven people are staying in the cantonment. All the information has been given to the concerned ministry on behalf of the army," the release reads.

The Bangladesh Army is working with neutrality and professionalism to improve law and order and to prevent extrajudicial activities to uphold the rule of law.

The ISPR also requested everyone not to pay heed to rumours and to show patience and a cooperative attitude.

Bangladesh Army will always be by the side of the people and is committed to upholding the law of the country, the release added.

Israel launches fresh strikes across Gaza

25 more Palestinians killed; Blinken heads to ME for 10th time to push for truce

REUTERS, Cairo

Israeli strikes killed 25 people in Gaza yesterday, including six children, Palestinian health authorities said, ahead of a visit to the region by US Secretary of State Antony Blinken to try to push forward ceasefire talks.

The children and their mother were killed in an Israeli airstrike on a house in the central town of Deir Al-Balah, health officials said. There was no immediate comment from the Israeli military.

The Israeli military said it destroyed rocket launchers used to hit Israel from the southern city of Khan Younis, the scene of intense fighting in recent weeks, and killed 20 Palestinian fighters.

Diplomatic efforts to halt the Israel-Hamas conflict and secure a deal to return hostages held in Gaza have intensified in recent days. Talks mediated by the US, Egypt and Qatar are set to continue this week in Cairo, following a two-day meeting in Doha last week.

Blinken is making his 10th trip to the region since the offensive began days after the United States put forward bridging proposals that the mediating countries believe would close gaps between the warring parties.

There has been increased urgency to reach a ceasefire deal amid fears of a regional escalation. Iran has threatened to retaliate against Israel after the assassination of Hamas leader Ismail Haniyeh in Tehran on July 31.

The health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said yesterday that at least 40,099 people have been killed in the Palestinian territory. The toll includes 25 deaths over the past 24 hours, according to ministry figures.

Ten months after the offensive began, Palestinians in Gaza are living in constant desperation to find a safe place. "There is nothing left to us but the sea," said Tamer Al-Burai, who lives in Deir Al-Balah with several extended family members.

32 OCs of DMP transferred outside Dhaka

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The officers-in-charge of 32 police stations under Dhaka Metropolitan Police (DMP), who hold the rank of police inspectors (unarmed), have been transferred to various police units outside Dhaka.

This transfer order was issued by Additional Inspector General of Police (administration) Kamrul Ahsan from the Police Headquarters yesterday.

Three days after the mass uprising of students and citizens that led to the resignation and departure of Sheikh Hasina on August 5, DMP Commissioner Habibur Rahman was first attached to the police headquarters and later sent into forced retirement.

On August 12, a notification from the police headquarters said 18 inspectors from the DMP were transferred. The next day, seven officers of deputy commissioner rank from the DMP were assigned to new posts.

With the transfer of 32 OCs yesterday, the officers-in-charge of 50 police stations under the DMP have now been transferred.

6 more cases filed against Hasina

Several ex-ministers, AL MPs also made accused

STAR REPORT

Six more murder cases were filed yesterday against former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, several of her cabinet members, ex-Awami League lawmakers, leaders and activists of the party, and police officials.

Three of them were lodged in Dhaka while one each was filed in Rangpur, Joypurhat, and Natore.

With this, Hasina, who resigned and fled the country amid an uprising on August 5, is now facing 15 cases, including 12 for murder, one for abduction, and two for committing crimes against humanity and genocide.

Last night, Kamrul Hasan, father of Khaled Saifullah, who was shot dead at Azimpur in the capital on July 18 during the quota reform protests, lodged a case with Lalbagh Police Station against 91 named people, including Hasina, former home minister Asaduzzaman Khan, AL General Secretary and former road transport and bridges minister Obaidul Quader, and 100-150 unnamed others.

Hasina and 12 others were also sued over the deaths of two students -- Kobi Nazrul Government College student Iqram Hossain Kawser and Government Shaheed Suhrawardy College student Omar Faruque -- at Sutrapur on July 19 during the violence centring the quota reform protests.

Kawser's mother Nasrin Begum filed the case with a Dhaka court.

Former DB chief Harunor Rashid, former DMP commissioner Habibur Rahman, Dhaka South City Corporation Mayor Sheik Fazle Noor Taposh, and former DMP joint commissioner Biplob Kumar Sarkar are among the named accused.

The court directed the officer-in-charge of Sutrapur Police Station to register the complaint as first information report (FIR).

Two children, woman killed in landslide

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Cox's Bazar

A woman and two children of a family died when a landslide crushed their house in Pekua upazila of Cox's Bazar early yesterday.

The tragic incident occurred around 5:00am in the Segunbagicha area of Jarulbonia under the upazila's Shilkhali union, police said.

The deceased Mamtaj Begum, 45, her daughter Moina Akhtar, 12, and her grandson Md Toha, 8, lived at the foot of a hill in the Segunbagicha area.

Pounded by heavy downpours for the past several days, the saturated hillside gave way and collapsed their house, burying it under a large chunk of mud.

"Although local residents rushed to help after hearing the family's cries for help, they could not rescue them. Later in the morning, when the Upazila administration and fire service personnel arrived at the scene, they recovered the bodies of the mother and her daughters," said Pekua Upazila Nirbahi Officer (UNO) Md Saiful Islam.

He also said people living in the risky hilly areas are being evacuated.

India SC takes up doctor's rape-murder case

Some doctors continue strike

AGENCIES

India's Supreme Court, on its own, has taken up the rape-murder case of the Kolkata doctor that has shocked the country and thrown the medical fraternity in a turmoil.

A three-judge bench led by Chief Justice of India DY Chandrachud will hear the matter tomorrow.

The top court's move came as some junior doctors remained off the job yesterday, demanding swift justice for the murder incident, despite the end of a 24-hour strike called by the country's biggest association of doctors, reports Reuters.

The case is already being heard by the Calcutta High Court, which, during a hearing last week, ordered that the probe be transferred to the Central Bureau of Investigation or CBI, overriding Chief Minister Mamata Banerjee's ultimatum to the state police.

If the police were unable to solve the case by Sunday (yesterday), the CBI will take over, she had said.

The case went to the High Court after the woman's parents, and a few others, unhappy with the police investigation, filed an appeal. The court made its displeasure with the police and the administration clear, reports NDTV online.

6 S Alam-linked banks lending now capped

Bangladesh Bank yesterday restricted six banks linked to S Alam Group from lending activities to prevent their situation from deteriorating further amid allegations of wrongdoing.

Experts say the restriction may help boost liquidity in the cash-strapped banks, which were running their activities by taking special liquidity support from the BB.

The lenders are Islami Bank, First Security Islami Bank, Social Islami Bank, Union Bank, Global Islami Bank, and Bangladesh Commerce Bank.

Tk 95,000cr loans taken from 6 banks

MD MEHEDI HASAN and AM JAHID

S Alam Group and its associate companies took out Tk 95,331 crore between 2017 and June this year from six banks, with 79 percent of the sum coming from Islami Bank.

This amount is equivalent to 5.78 percent of the banking sector's total outstanding loans as of March.

However, the total amount taken from these six banks is likely higher, according to Bangladesh Bank and bank officials with knowledge of the matter.

Documents pieced together by The Daily Star show that most of the loans were taken by bypassing banking rules and regulations, which is a testament to how the Chattogram-based conglomerate exerted its influence on the country's banking sector.

Founded in 1985 by Mohammad Saiful Alam, a relative of former Awami League politician Akhtaruzzanan Chowdhury Babu and former Land Minister Saifuzzaman Chowdhury, S Alam Group has grown into one of the largest conglomerates in Bangladesh.

For example, within one month of opening an account with Islami Bank's Chaktai branch in Chattogram, a modest corrugated tin seller Murad Enterprise was given Tk 890 crore without even verifying the need for the funds and the company's financial capacity to pay back the sum.

A year later, another loan of Tk 110 crore was given to the company, which turned out to be a shadow company of S Alam Group, BB documents show.

What is worse is that the bank, where S Alam Group has controlling stakes, took very little collateral from Murad Enterprise.

The conglomerate and companies with ties to it took Tk 74,900 crore from Islami Bank, whose chairman since June last year is Alam's eldest son Ahsanul Alam.

Of the amount, Tk 26,000 crore was borrowed in the name of its subsidiaries, and the remaining amount was in the name of 29 associate companies, such as Nabil Group, Desh Bandhu Group, Unitex Group, and Anantex Group.

Islami Bank's Khatunganj branch in Chattogram is particularly noteworthy: a staggering Tk 35,924 crore was taken from the branch through 10 companies, documents show.

Why scrapping of caretaker system not unconstitutional?

HC issues rule on 15th amendment

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday issued a rule questioning the constitutionality of the 15th amendment that scrapped the nonparty caretaker government system and brought some significant changes in the charter.

The 15th amendment bill was passed by the Jatiya Sangsad on June 30, 2011, and signed into law on July 3 the same year. It abolished the caretaker government system introduced by the 13th amendment in 1996.

The law also recognised Sheikh Mujibur Rahman as Father of the Nation and increased the number of reserved seats for women in parliament to 50 from 45.

Following the amendment to the constitution, three general elections were held on January 5, 2014, December 30, 2018 and January 7 this year, with Awami League President Sheikh Hasina in the prime minister's office. The scrapping of the 13th amendment created huge controversy and sparked outrage among the opposition political parties.

Yesterday, the HC also asked the respondents to the rule to show causes why the Constitution (Fifteenth Amendment) Act, 2011 should not be declared unconstitutional, and why the previous actions and deeds done or taken in any manner under this act should not be treated as transactions past and closed.

Secretaries at the ministry of law and Jatiya Sangsad Secretariat have been made respondents to the rule, which is returnable in 10 days.

The HC bench of Justice Naima Haider and Justice Sashanka Shekhar Sarkar issued the rule following a writ petition challenging the legality and constitutionality of the 15th amendment.

Speaking to reporters after the issuance of the HC rule, Attorney General Md Asaduzzaman said Bangladesh was taken towards non-democratic rule through the 15th amendment to the constitution and a

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The National Board of Revenue yesterday asked banks to unfreeze the accounts of BNP Chairperson Khaleda Zia.

The move came 17 years after the NBR froze the accounts.

AZIM MURDER

West Bengal CID submits charge sheet

AGENCIES

The Criminal Investigation Department of West Bengal has submitted a charge sheet in the murder case of former Jhenaidah-4 MP Anwarul Azim Anar who was killed in Kolkata in May.

The 1,200-page charge sheet was placed before a Barasat court on Saturday, reported Anadabazar Patrika.

According to CID sources, Jihad Hawlader and Mohammad Siam, who allegedly dismembered the body after the murder, have been named in the charge sheet.

Jihad is in Kolkata police custody since the murder while Siam has reportedly fled to Nepal.

However, nothing was said about the motive for the murder.

CID sources said the motive cannot be disclosed now as the investigation is yet to be complete. Besides, the main accused in the case is yet to be cross-examined, they added.

According to West Bengal CID sources, Azim's close friend Akhtaruzzaman Shaheen, a US citizen, is the main accused in the crime. He has fled to the US after the murder.

Akhtaruzzaman allegedly paid Rs 5 crore to the suspects involved in the crime.

Lawmaker Azim went to Kolkata on May 12. Nine days later, India and Bangladesh police said he was murdered at a Kolkata flat.

Police suspect that political rivalry and a feud over gold smuggling may have played key roles behind the murder of the Jhenaidah-4 lawmaker.

Family of four meets tragic end on road

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Pabna

Jasim Uddin, 65, of Bagmara upazila, Rajshahi, was brought to Dhaka a few days ago by his two sons so he could have better care for his chronic paralysis.

After the treatment, when Jasim, along with his wife and two sons, set out for their home on a rented microbus in the early hours of yesterday, they were met with a fatal collision with a truck in Sirajganj.

Following the incident, the bodies of Jasim Uddin, 65; his wife, Nargis Begum, 60; and their two sons, Jamal Uddin, 45, and Kamal Uddin, 40, were taken to their home in Noroshinghapur village of Bagmara upazila around noon for burial. Jamal's wife and child are the only surviving members of the family.

Confirming the accident, Md Taj Uddin, inspector (investigation) of Solonga Police Station, said the accident took place around 3:30am in Hatikumrul area when the family was returning to their village home in Bagmara by microbus.

On information, firefighters rushed to the spot and recovered the bodies.

The inspector said four members of the family died on the spot, and Md Ashik, the driver of the microbus, was taken to Shaheed M Monsur Ali Medical College in Sirajganj with critical injuries.

The police were now trying to track down the truck involved in the collision as soon as possible, he added.

All city mayors removed

Divisional commissioners, deputy commissioners (DCs), and upazila nirbahi officers (UNOs) will also be administrators of their respective zilla and upazila parishads, the notifications said. They, however, did not mention who will perform the duties of upazila parishad vice-chairmen and women vice-chairmen.

On August 14, the LGD in an order said many mayors and panel mayors have been absent due to existing circumstances. The LGD tried to communicate with them but failed.

The order said their absence halted services and other work of city corporations and that was why a decision was made to give chief executive officers the full administrative and financial authority to run the city corporations in public interest.

Five days after the order, the government yesterday issued notifications, removing all public representatives and appointing administrators.

According to sources, several mayors, including the ones of the DSCC, the DNCC, Chattogram, Khulna, Barishal, Mymensingh, and Cumilla city corporations, have been absent at work since the fall of the Awami League government on August 5.

All the absentee mayors had AL backing.

DNCC mayor Atiqul Islam went to his office on Sunday night but left soon afterwards as a group of people tried to chase him, sources said.

Talking to reporters at his office yesterday, LGRD Adviser AF Hassan Ariff said, "The move is an attempt to clean up the entire local government."

Basically, the administrator will perform the duties instead of the mayor and chairman, he said, adding that no decision was made regarding the councillors.

Dr Tofail Ahmed, a local government expert, welcomed the move saying the public representatives failed to prove themselves.

"As the elections were grossly faulty and since almost all public representatives -- including the prime minister, ministers, lawmakers, under whom they were elected -- are now on the run, these appointments have justification," he told The Daily Star.

Of the 12 mayors, nine are on the run. The rest are in the country but absent at work, according to sources.

The councillors are also absent for which the city corporations are dysfunctional, he added.

Their absence hampers day-to-day services and there is no good alternative to appointing administrators, Tofail said.

"These administrators are acceptable as interim management, but I hope they will do only day-to-day work and continue ongoing projects and not take up any new projects," he said.

On zilla parishads, Tofail said that these local government bodies were dysfunctional as people did not take part in the election. The representatives were not elected directly and zilla parishads were like "rehabilitation centres for Awami League leaders".

He added that upazila parishads too became dysfunctional to some extent as local lawmakers were made advisers to the parishads. There has always been a feud between chairmen, MPs, UNOs, vice-chairmen, and members.

ZILLA, UPAZILA, UNION

The government appointed officials, including additional deputy commissioners and assistant commissioners (land), as administrators for the 330 municipalities.

With gazette notifications issued by the LGRD ministry, 323 municipality mayors and seven municipality administrators were removed. All municipalities now have new administrators at their helms.

The DCs will now serve as administrators of 53 zilla parishads.

Divisional commissioners will act as administrators of Dhaka, Chattogram, Rajshahi, Khulna, Sylhet, Mymensingh, Rangpur, and Barishal zilla parishads.

No change was made to the three zilla parishads in Chittagong Hill Tracts.

The UNOs will be administrators of 495 upazila parishads until further notice following the removal of the chairmen of 493 upazila parishads.

Khulna's Koyra upazila parishad chairman passed away and polls to Madaripur's Dasar upazila parishad have not been held since it became an upazila.

In a notification issued last night, the LGD asked divisional commissioners and DCs to give panel chairmen the authority of unions if the chairmen were absent.

In case there are no panel chairmen, the divisional commissioners and DCs can assign the UNO and AC (land) concerned financial and administrative authority of the union parishads.

Why scrapping of caretaker system situation like interfering in the judicial functions was created.

During the hearing on the petition, Sharif Bhuiyan, counsel for the petitioners, told the HC bench that the basic structures of the constitution -- democracy and election -- have been damaged by the 15th constitutional amendment.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in its judgement in the 13th amendment (caretaker government system) case had asked for holding two national elections (10th and 11th) under caretaker governments, but the 15th amendment abolished the caretaker government system and therefore, those elections were held under political governments, he said.

Sharif said the 15th amendment states that the president would conduct a referendum within seven days from the date of the amendment bill presented to him, but no such referendum was held and therefore the 15th amendment is illegal.

The provision of the 15th amendment, which said that basic structures of the constitution cannot be amended, is unconstitutional as it has damaged the sovereignty of parliament which is elected by the people, the lawyer argued.

Five conscious citizens -- Badiul Alam Majumdar, secretary of rights organisation Shushashoner Jonno Nagorik, Tofail Ahmed, M Hafizuddin Khan, Md Jobirul Hoque Bhuiyan and Zahrah Rahman -- submitted the petition as a public interest litigation to the HC on August 18.

They stated in the petition that following the abolition of the nonparty caretaker government system through the 15th amendment act, the nation saw three consecutive failed elections in 2014, 2018 and 2024 and it ultimately led to the July 2024 uprising by students and ordinary people and the fall of the government on August 5, 2024.

The 13th amendment was incorporated in the constitution to ensure free and fair election and strengthen democracy and therefore, the 13th amendment became part of the basic structure of the constitution since 1996.

The 13th amendment represented the "will of the people" and a "political consensus and settlement" as it was made in the context of the demand of major political parties, and the public, including civil society, the petitioners stated in the writ petition.

According to the writ petition, a 15-member special parliamentary committee was formed on July 21, 2010 to amend the constitution. Twelve members of the committee were senior Awami League leaders.

After consulting 104 distinguished citizens, the committee on March 29, 2011, unanimously recommended amending the constitution by retaining the nonparty caretaker government system with a three-month tenure.

After holding a meeting with then prime minister Shiekh Hasina, the committee the following day changed its previous recommendation. It suggested amending the constitution to abolish the nonparty caretaker government system. Thus, it is clear that while the committee and other participants in the special parliamentary committee meetings were in agreement to retain the nonparty caretaker government system, the entire system was abolished only on the recommendation of then prime minister Hasina.

On June 30, 2011, the Jatiya Sangsad passed the 15th constitutional amendment bill. With the passage of the bill, Islam's status as the state religion was retained and the Arabic phrase "Bismillahir Rahmanir Rahim" with its translation "In the name of Allah, the Beneficent, the Merciful/ In the name of the Creator, the Merciful" was made a part of the constitution.

The amendment also introduced the provisions for holding parliamentary polls in 90 days before the dissolution of parliament, secularism, Bangalee nationalism, more powers for the war crimes tribunal and displaying the portrait of Father of the Nation Sheikh Mujibur Rahman in all government offices.

Tk 95,000cr loans taken from 6 banks

International, and Anowara Trade International, secured loans amounting to Tk 29,575 crore from the Rajshahi branch of Islami Bank.

Another Tk 23,900 crore was taken from Islami's offshore banking unit and other branches over the years in violation of rules.

Rules were also not followed by state-run Janata when extending loans to the business giant, whose interests range from commodity trading to fishery, from construction materials to real estate, from textiles to media, from intercity buses to shipping, and from power and energy to banks and insurance.

S Alam Group and its affiliate companies took Tk 13,400 crore from state-run Janata Bank.

About Tk 10,449.45 crore was taken in the name of S Alam subsidiaries, with as much as 90 percent of the loans taken from Janata's Sadharan Bima Corporate Branch in Chattogram.

The remaining Tk 2,950.55 crore was taken from Janata by its associate companies.

Janata's lending to S Alam Group breached the bank's single borrower exposure limit by an alarming margin.

According to banking law, a bank is prohibited from lending more than 25 percent of its paid-up capital to a single party. At the end of June this year, Janata's paid-up capital stood at Tk 2,314 crore.

Some Tk 4,200 crore was taken from Social Islami Bank (SIBL), whose chairman Belal Ahmed is Alam's son-in-law. Five more relatives of Alam are on the board of SIBL.

Some Tk 2,000 crore was taken from Union Bank, whose board consists of Alam's siblings Halima Begum, Osman Goni, and Md Rashedul Alam and his wife Marzina Sharmin. Their nephew, Mohammad Mostan Billah Adil, is also on the board.

S Alam Group and its associate companies took Tk 574 crore from Global Islami Bank (GIB), whose vice-chairman is Alam's daughter Maimuna Khanam. Seven other relatives of Alam, including his brother Shahidul Alam and sister Rokea Yasmin, are on the board of the 11-year-old bank.

Some Tk 257 crore was taken from First Security Islami Bank (FSIBL), whose chairman is Alam himself. Alam's wife, Farzana Parveen, and four other relatives are on the board of FSIBL.

If the loans taken by its associate companies are added, the total amounts taken from SIBL, FSIBL, Union, and GIB will go up, according to industry insiders.

In light of the gross irregularities, the BB yesterday restricted the lending activities of the banks save for Janata.

Alam; Subrata Kumar Bhowmik, executive director of S Alam Group; the managing directors of the six banks; and BB spokesman Md Mezbaul Haque could not be reached for comment.

ACC to investigate 41 ex-ministers, MPs

Minister Tazul Islam; ex-religious affairs minister Faridul Haque Khan; former state minister for shipping Khalid Mahmud Chowdhury; ex-state minister for disaster management and relief Mohibbur Rahman; and former state minister for Chittagong hill tracts affairs Kujendra Lal Tripura.

This decision was made yesterday by a full commission meeting at the ACC headquarters. Three separate teams, each led by a director, were formed to carry out the investigation, said multiple senior officials of the commission. None of them agreed to speak on record.

The decision comes a day after Supreme Court lawyer M Sarwar Hossain filed a complaint with the ACC on Sunday seeking probes into allegations of amassing illegal wealth by the 41.

Sarwar said he filed the complaint following a daily Samakal report which was based on research carried out by Transparency International Bangladesh.

He attached data that apparently showed how their wealth increased over the years. "Such a rise in assets is not possible without corruption," the complaint read.

Talking to the reporters on Sunday, ACC Secretary Khurshida Yasmin told reporters, "If a complaint against the 41 was made to the commission, the commission will look into it according to its rules. This is routine work for the commission."

Sarwar told The Daily Star, "I am happy with the quick action the ACC has taken the day after I filed the complaint. This was something the ACC should have done on its own. Nonetheless, I appreciate the decision they made ... ."

The other former ministers and state ministers are Tipu Munshi (commerce): Zahid Maleque (health); Golam Dastagir Gazi (textiles and jute); Imran Ahmad (expatriate welfare): Nurul Majid Mahmud Humayun (industries); Shajahan Khan (shipping); Hasanul Haq Inu (information); Faridul Haque Khan (religious affairs); Meher Afroz Chumki (women and children affairs); Swapan Bhattacharjee (LGRD, primary and mass education); Kamal Ahmed Majumder (industries); Zahid Ahsan Russell (youth and sports); and Meher Afroz Chumki (women and children affairs).

The former AL lawmakers being probed are Benjir Ahmed (Dhaka-20); AKM Sarwar Jahan (Kushtia-1); Shariful Islam Jinnah (Bogura-2); Shahidul Islam Bakul (Natore-1); Sheikh Afil Uddin (Jashore -1); Salim Uddin Torofdar (Naogaon-3); Kazi Nabil Ahmed (Jashore-3); Enamul Haque (Rajshahi-4); Noor Alam Chowdhury Shaon (Madaripur-1); Sheikh Helal Uddin (Bagerhat-1); Mamunur Rashid Kiron (Noakhali-3); Kazim Uddin Ahmed (Mymensingh-11); Anwar Hossain (Pirojpur-2); Abu Sayeed Al Mahmud Swapan (Joypurhat-2); and Ziaur Rahman (Chapainawabganj-2).

TIB Executive Director Iftekharuzzaman said the move might be viewed as a welcome news, quite belated though, in the backdrop of self-inflicted credibility gap of the ACC.

"While people will expect to see specific progress to ensure exemplary accountability of such erstwhile high-profile individuals for their abuse of power, this will remain as yet another example that ACC tends to act against the so-called big fish only when they are out of power.

"It will not be unjustified to question that by failing to take action before their humiliating downfall, the ACC has in reality protected their corruption and violated their own mandate as well as the relevant law.

"Be that as it may, nothing can justify any underestimation of the imperatives for a thorough overhaul of this institution as part of state-restructure to meet the aspirations of a 'new Bangladesh' as articulated by the student-led people's uprising," he said.

TRAVEL BAN ON TAQSEM

The ACC sought a travel ban on former managing director of Dhaka Wasa, Taqsem A Khan. It wrote to the Special Branch of the police regarding this yesterday.

The ACC is probing alleged amassing of illegal wealth by Taqsem and has formed a committee, led by ACC Assistant Director Mahbubul Alam, in this regard.

ACC Deputy Director Syed Nazrul Islam has written to the secretary of the Local Government Division requesting documents related to Taqsem's appointment, ACC sources said.

Dipu Moni arrested in Baridhara DOHS

This was also the first case lodged against Hasina after she resigned and went to India amid an uprising on August 5.

Seven people were named as accused in the case. They are former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader, former home minister Asaduzzaman Khan, former inspector general of police Chowdhury Abdullah Al Mamun, former DB (Dhaka Metropolitan Police) chief Harun Or Rashid, former DMP commissioner Habibur Rahman, and former DMP joint commissioner Biplob Kumar Sarker.

Besides, several unnamed top police officials and other government officials were accused in the case, Mamun Mia, a lawyer for the complainant, had told The Daily Star.

SM Amir Hamza Shatil, a resident of Mohammadpur, filed the murder case with the court of Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Rajesh Chowdhury.

The complainant was not a relative of the victim and filed the case voluntarily.

In his complaint, Shatil mentioned that Saeed was killed around 4:00pm on July 19, when police were firing indiscriminately on the protesters, following the accused's directives.

The victim's family members, who are very poor, live in Boda upazila of Panchagarh. They do not have the ability to file the case, he mentioned in the complaint.

Dipu Moni, a joint general secretary of the Awami League, was a member of parliament (MP) from Chandpur-3 constituency.

From 2019 to 2023, she was the education minister in the Awami League-led government. She faced criticism for the new curriculum passed during her tenure. Due to a lack of sufficient training, many teachers were confused about how to give classroom instructions, distribute group work to students, and evaluate the students' performances based on the new curriculum.

Between 2014 and 2018, she was chairperson of the Parliamentary Standing Committee on the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

On January 6, 2009, she became the country's first female foreign minister, serving until 2013. When she was foreign minister, she made headlines for her frequent trips abroad.

Earlier in 2023, The Daily Star published a report on Dipu Moni's involvement in illegal sand lifting in Chandpur. Besides, Dipu Moni and her brother JR Wadud Tipu were found involved in illegal land acquisition at Chandpur Science and Technology University.

Following the fall of the AL government on August 5, law enforcers started arresting top leaders of the party.

So far, former law minister Anisul Huq, Hasina's private investment adviser Salman F Rahman, former ICT minister Zunaid Ahmed Palak, former deputy speaker of the 12th Jatiya Sangsad Shamsul Haque Tuku, and Chhatra League leader Tanbir Hasan Shaikat have been arrested and are now in police custody for interrogation.

Improving law, order now main challenge

Says home adviser

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The current challenge is to improve the law-and-order situation in the country, Home Adviser Jahangir Alam Chowdhury said yesterday.

He was addressing reporters at the secretariat.

"The home ministry's main challenge is to improve law and order as soon as possible," he said.

Earlier around noon, the adviser met Gwyn Lewis, the UN Resident Coordinator in Bangladesh.

Asked in this regard, he said, "We discussed the types of help they [the UN] can provide in this situation and sectors in which we want cooperation."

He, however, did not elaborate on the situation or the discussions.

Support interim government to bring stability

Fakhrul urges party men; EU expresses willingness to help recover laundered money

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday urged his party activists to support the interim government, stressing the need for stability.

"We have an interim government, and we all have to back them so that they can sustain," Fakhrul said at a discussion held at the Jatiya Press Club.

"The ones running the government now do not have political sense; they are not politicians. They have come for a short period to try and lift the state from its ruined condition," he said.

He further urged party members to avoid negativity, saying, "It would be wrong to undermine our efforts with negative words or actions at this time."

Expressing hope for a fair election, Fakhrul said, "Through a neutral election, we will be able to establish a representative parliament and form a government. Today, we must perform our duties with patience."

Shot six times, Amir lives to tell his tale

18-year-old shot by police while hanging from Rampura building escapes death

MASHFIQ MIZAN

After broadband internet was restored in selected areas on July 23, a video dated from July 19 began circulating on social media showing a boy hanging from the cornice of an under-construction building.

Two cops then arrive at the scene and several rounds of gunshots are heard. The video shows police pointing their guns at the boy, who is desperately hanging on for his life.

The footage led many to believe that the person in the video had been killed on the spot.

Social media and some mainstream outlets reported he was dead. This correspondent spoke to eyewitnesses and verified the authenticity of the video through geolocation tracking on July 24.

It was confirmed that the footage was from a building near Meradia Bazar in Rampura.

Visiting the under-construction building, this correspondent saw bloodstains on the third and fourth floors.

However, this was all circumstantial evidence, and without tracing the body, The Daily Star could not confirm the death.

Despite efforts to track down the body to confirm the death, all attempts failed.

However, recently, we got information that Amir Hossain, the subject in the video who everyone believed to be dead, is alive.

He is now recovering at his Dhaka residence in a slum in Noapara, Meradia.

Speaking to The Daily Star yesterday, Amir told us how he survived.

End political dominance, bring reforms in higher edn

Demands University Teachers' Network

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The University Teachers' Network yesterday proposed ending political dominance and ensuring both academic and administrative accountability within universities.

The network, comprising educators from both public and private universities, demanded for modern universities that support freedom of thought, and encourage students to ask questions.

They urged the government to be accommodating and to allow universities to operate autonomously, without any form of political interference.

They put forward the proposals while taking part in a discussion. Titled, "What kind of university we want: thoughts on reformation of universities" the session took place at the University of Dhaka's Muzaffar Ahmed Chowdhury auditorium yesterday.

Key proposals include holding teachers accountable for classroom performance and decentralising decision-making powers currently concentrated in vice-chancellors.

Former Jahangirnagar University Professor Anu Muhammad said, "Sycophants of the government should not be appointed as vice-chancellors, and individuals who lack interest in reading and teaching should not be hired as teachers."

DMP suspends cop for gagging student

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Inspector (Operations) Arshad Hossain of Shahbagh Police Station, who was pictured gagging the mouth of a student during a protest on July 31, was suspended on Sunday.

Dhaka Metropolitan Police Commissioner suspended him citing his unprofessional conduct.

Arshad gagged the mouth of Nahidul Islam, a student of political science department at New Model Degree College in Dhaka, during the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement's "March for Justice" programme.

Despite being a member of a disciplined police force, his unprofessional actions have created adverse perception about the activities of police and tarnished the image of the police force, a DMP official said.

A photo of the incident was widely shared and also inspired graffiti on a wall of Dhaka University.

HOUSING PROJECT IN RANGUNIA

Environmental clearance cancelled

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Chattogram

The Department of Environment has cancelled the environmental clearance of a housing project of the National Housing Authority in Rangunia upazila of Chattogram.

The DoE director general approved the unanimous decision to cancel the project's environmental clearance in a meeting yesterday, according to a letter signed by Masud Iqbal Md Shamim, director (Environmental Clearance) of DoE.

The project titled "Site and Service Residential Plot Development at Rangunia Upazila in Chattogram" was earlier initiated upon a demi official letter from former foreign minister Hasan Mahmud, when he was the chairman of Parliamentary Standing Committee on Environment and Forest in 2014.

After a visit to the spot, the officials concerned found that a significant portion of the nine acres of land for the proposed project belong to hills, hillocks and waterbodies there.

Although there is 4.02-acre of plain land in the area, it is not enough for implementing a housing project with all sorts of utilities and civic amenities.

According to the officials, there is possibility of adverse impact on nature and financial loss to the authority if the project is implemented.

If the project is implemented, there is probability of an adverse impact on nature and financial losses to the authority.

Hasan Mahmud, also then lawmaker of Chattogram-7 (Rangunia) constituency, sent the DO letter on July 7, 2014, said officials.

Even though the project was initially returned without consent from the Prime Minister's Office, it was later approved by the PM in June this year, on conditions including preserving the hills, hillocks and water bodies in the area.

Following a letter issued on July 10, Bijoy Kumar Mandol, member of Planning, Design and Special Project of NHA, submitted a report on August 13 after visiting the site, deeming it not feasible for the project.

ABANDONED SUV

Former home minister found to be its owner

UNB, Dhaka

An SUV valued at approximately Tk 2 crore was found abandoned in front of Baitul Aman Mosque in the capital's Dhanmondi on Sunday morning, sparking widespread curiosity.

The vehicle, a Land Cruiser with the licence plate Dhaka Metro-Gha 21-8456, was eventually towed to a secure location around midnight with the assistance of Bangladesh Army.

The mystery surrounding the unclaimed vehicle led to a flurry of questions about its ownership and origin, particularly after a post on social media.

Finally, information and photos obtained from various sources confirmed that the SUV belongs to former home minister Asaduzzaman Khan.

He said the state must decide whether a university will be a centre for the creation of knowledge or a centre for the creation of goons.

Syed Nizar, associate professor at Jahangirnagar University, called for the protection of academic freedom and argued against punitive actions for researchers.

He criticised existing repressive laws and noted the autocratic tendencies among some vice-chancellors.

Dhaka University Professor Mohammad Azam highlighted the inadequate education budget, urging the interim government to commit to increasing funding to 4 percent of GDP.

Seuty Sabur from BRAC University called for a student-centric approach, with accountability for all university staff.

Professor Kamrul Hassan of Dhaka University proposed limiting the powers of vice-chancellors to prevent their control from extending over entire universities.

They criticised the previous governments' interference in university autonomy and the influence of partisan politics on university appointments and promotions.

The teachers also criticised the 1973 order, arguing it allowed political activities to overshadow academic priorities, turning universities into election-centric institutions.

They stressed that teacher recruitment should prioritise merit over political connections and called for modifications to ensure economic freedom for both teachers and universities.

The network also recommended fixing teachers' working hours, involving senior students in teacher appointments, allowing visiting professorships, and setting a class size limit of 40 students.

They proposed using both Bangla and English as languages of instruction and ensuring students learn at least three languages.

The proposed reforms aim to restore academic integrity and autonomy, ensuring universities fulfill their educational mission without political interference.

Shot six times, Amir

After attending Friday prayers, he was on his way home when BGB and police opened fire on protesters. Fearing for his life, he ran and took refuge on the fourth floor of the under-construction building.

According to Amir, two police officers suddenly entered the building and chased him. He retreated and hung onto the cornice of the fourth floor. When cops found Amir, they pointed their firearms at him, and yelled, "Jhap de, jhap de (Jump, jump)."

To intimidate him, one of the officers fired several blank shots while pointing their gun at him.

"But I knew that if I jumped, I would not survive the fall," Amir added.

Suddenly, another cop from the third floor shot at him six times, aiming at both of his legs.

He fell to the third floor, collapsed and began bleeding profusely. Then the officers left, completely disregarding whether Amir was alive.

"I tried to get up, but had no strength. I shouted, but sounds of gunfire muffled my pleas for help," Amir recounted.

"At one point, I almost gave up hope. I thought I would die. My vision was blurred, but a part of me didn't want to give up. I kept thinking, 'I can't die like this'. Thoughts of my elderly father and my sister, whose marriage I had been saving money for, kept me going. This wasn't how I would die," he added.

Gradually, the gunshots stop ringing through the area. After nearly three hours, a student rushed into the building and found Amir lying in a pool of blood.

Two doctors from a nearby hospital, who were in the area, quickly joined the rescue. They worked desperately to stop the bleeding.

"They kept telling me, 'Don't close your eyes. We won't let you die. Please, don't close your eyes'," Amir recalled.

They took him to Famous Hospital, where he received initial treatment that night, before being referred to Dhaka Medical College and Hospital.

Amir experienced so much blood loss that he required three bags of blood at the hospital. After three days, he was discharged from DMCH.

"He needed further treatment, but DMCH was flooded with people who had life-threatening injuries. Since Amir's condition was stable, doctors prescribed him medication for three months and sent him home," said Nasima Begum, Amir's aunt.

"After the video went viral, we heard police were searching for us. There were stories of raids where police were picking up people with bullet injuries, so we stayed quiet. Journalists were looking for him, but we only found our voices after hearing about Sheikh Hasina's fall on August 5," she added.

Amir showed this correspondent all of the bullet wounds he had to mark the horrific day.

In his right leg, a bullet struck the sole of his foot and pierced through his ankle, another hit his shin and exited through his calf, and a third struck his thigh, passing through his hip.

In his left leg, one bullet struck just below his knee and exited the other side, another hit the top of his thigh and exited through the opposite end. The last one was lodged below his thigh and exited through the other side.

We took photos of his medical reports, including the X-rays, and consulted physicians from Famous Hospital and Farazy Hospital, where Amir had a follow-up after being discharged from DMCH.

At Famous Hospital, doctors confirmed that Amir would have likely died from excessive bleeding if he had been brought in just 5-10 minutes later. Both hospitals noted that Amir's speedy recovery was due to the fact that none of the six bullets struck his bones; if they had, it might have been fatal.

However, Amir still can't stand on his own and needs assistance to use the washroom. The doctors noted that he lost a significant amount of blood and it would take time for him to fully recover.

Withdraw VAT

standard service rules across all private universities in the country.

The statement said the former government previously attempted to impose VAT on private educational institutions in 2010 and 2015 but was forced to withdraw it in 2015 following strong opposition from students. However, the VAT was reimposed in the 2024-25 fiscal year.

Citing that any imposition of VAT or taxes on private universities ultimately harms both teachers and students, the platform demanded that these funds be reserved for research, scholarships, and student welfare.

Nahin Mamun, general secretary of BSPUA, delivered the opening address at the event.

The event was also attended by key BSPUA members, along with teachers and students from nine universities.

"One form of fascism has left, but we cannot allow a new fascism to be imported," he said.

Criticising India, Fakhrul said, "The enemies of Bangladesh had to flee the country, and I don't think providing them shelter will earn India any goodwill from the country's people."

Earlier in the morning, after placing wreaths at the shrine of party founder Ziaur Rahman, Fakhrul said members of BNP and its affiliated organisations have no involvement in the recent "disturbances".

"Certain individuals are conspiring to undermine the students' victory. They are creating disturbances and unfairly targeting our party members," he added.

Meanwhile, Bernd Spanier, acting ambassador of the EU to Bangladesh, met Fakhrul yesterday and discussed various issues related to Bangladesh's economic development and democratic transition.

Speaking to reporters after the meeting, BNP standing committee member Amir Khasru Mahmud Chowdhury said the EU has expressed willingness to assist in the recovery of money laundered abroad.

"Over US $100 billion has been laundered out of the country. Discussions have been held about bringing the money back, and they [the EU] are ready to cooperate in this matter," said Khasru.

During the hour-long meeting at the BNP chairperson's office in Gulshan, he said talks were held about Bangladesh's future, focusing on democratic, political, and overall development.

He also mentioned discussing the Rohingya issue and the details of the fact-finding mission.

"We sought more cooperation. Around 1.2 million Rohingyas reside here [in Bangladesh], with their population increasing every day ... How much longer can we afford their expenses?" Jahangir said.

Asked about the arrival of UN factfinding mission to probe atrocities committed during the student-led protests in July and earlier this month, he said they may arrive next week.

Persistent waterlogging in Chattogram highlights the city's struggle with uncleaned drains, amid political unrest and heavy rains, leaving residents in knee-deep water and disrupting daily commutes. PHOTO: COLLECTED

SUSPENSION OF CCC ACTIVITIES

Ctg areas waterlogged as drain cleaning stalls

ARUN BIKASH DEY, Ctg

Multiple areas in Chattogram city have been facing waterlogging as regular drain clearing activities have been suspended for much of the last one month.

Most activities of the Chattogram City Corporation have been on hold due to the unrest that started with the quota protests over a month ago.

Following the ousting of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina and her Awami League government, the situation has been improving gradually, and the city corporation initiated a crash programme to clean the major canals in the port city, targeting two canals each day.

The programme started with drives at Chawkbazar and Shulakbahar on Sunday, while cleaning of drains in Katalgaganj and Sholashahar Gate-2 was scheduled for Monday.

Visiting the areas yesterday morning, this correspondent did not find any workers at the aforementioned spots.

"The CCC conservatory department was supposed to clean drains in our area today. However, no one arrived here since morning," said Abdur Rahaman, a resident of Katalganj.

Overnight rain inundated the area as the drains, not cleaned for over a month, were clogged with garbage, he added.

The situation is similar in Sholashahar area, with city corporation workers being a no-show since morning.

Many low-lying city areas, including Bahaddarhat, Muradpur, Katalganj, Halishahar, Agrabad, Bakalia, and Chandgaon, went under knee-deep water due to overnight rains.

Engine seizures in many three-wheelers and long tailbacks on waterlogged roads added to the woes of the locals.

According to CCC authorities, cleaning activities for yesterday were suspended due to downpours.

Soil, washed off slopes due to rain, sedimented in the canals, blocking them, as per CCC's Chief Conservation Officer Commander Latiful Haque Kazmi.

"Workers could not work for 20 days due to the political situation in the country. We launched the crash programme as the situation is normalising. We started yesterday but could not continue today due to heavy rains," he said.

He said they are planning to resume the cleaning works today, if rain recedes.

The Chattogram Met Office recorded 124 millimetres of rain in the 24 hours preceding noon yesterday, said its forecasting officer Jahirul Islam, adding that the downpour may continue for the next couple of days due to low pressure over the Bay.

The Chattogram Port has been advised to hoist cautionary signal-3, he added.

Withdraw VAT, taxes on private universities

Demands BSPUA

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Bangladesh Society for Private University Academics (BSPUA) yesterday demanded that the government withdraw all forms of VAT and taxes imposed on private universities, urging to redirect these funds towards research, scholarships, and student welfare instead.

At a press conference held at Jatiya Press Club, BSPUA, a platform representing private university faculty, also called for an end to politics in all educational institutions, including private universities.

Farid A Sobhani, professor at United International University and president of BSPUA, citing the 2024 QS World Rankings and Times Higher Education Rankings, said private universities have made substantial progress in educational quality and research, often surpassing public universities.

The long-standing discrimination against private universities is unacceptable, he added.

In a written statement outlining a nine-point demand, Prof Sobhani called for the inclusion of private university faculty in the University Grants Commission (UGC), Bangladesh Accreditation Council, Bangladesh Public Service Commission, and various government committees related to education.

He also demanded prioritising private university faculty for top administrative positions within the institutions.

Additionally, the BSPUA called for the establishment of a separate regulatory agency for private universities and an end to discriminatory practices against private university graduates in the job market.

They also demanded that private university graduates be allowed direct admission into PhD programmes at public universities.

"We demand equal opportunities for higher education based on merit and qualifications," said Prof Sobhani.

The BSPUA also urged the implementation of

I stepped out to witness the people's victory: MEHAZABIEN CHOWDHURY

SHAH ALAM SHAZU

> The country has gained a new form of independence. On the day of the students' and people's victory, I stepped out of my home to witness the joy and celebrations firsthand. The experience was amazing.

Mehazabien Chowdhury's debut film Saba is set to make a remarkable entry at the 45th edition of the Toronto International Film Festival, before its official release. The film has been selected for the prestigious Discovery programme, a significant recognition that highlights the anticipation surrounding the film and marks a major milestone in Mehazabien's career, as she steps into the world of cinema.

Expressing her heartfelt emotions, the actress shared, "I am absolutely thrilled and overjoyed by this news. It's a special moment for those living abroad, especially in Canada, and for everyone attending the festival—they'll have the chance to watch Saba, at its world premiere."

The Punorjonmo actress added, "It's truly a matter of pride for me because Saba is my first film. It has made a place along with a total of 25 movies from around the world which will be showcased at this festival. This is a significant achievement for me."

Speaking about the world premiere of a Bangladeshi film abroad, she remarked, "Very few films from our country have had the opportunity to reach international film festivals. Previously, Rehana Maryam Noor was praised on the global stage. Now, Saba will be part of that legacy, which is a significant accomplishment for Bangladeshi cinema and a proud moment in my career."

Even before the film's release, her long-time colleagues and directors in the industry are highly optimistic about it, and discussions have already sparked on social media. When asked about her satisfaction with the experience, she shared, "I'm absolutely content with my performance in the project. There's a unique emotion that comes with the first silver-screen project, and that feeling has stayed with me."

Mehazabien also noted, "Saba is not just my debut film, but the first film for director Maksud Hossain. I had hoped it would be released in Bangladesh first, so I could experience it in theatres with my family, friends, and loved ones."

She believes that it is a great achievement for her that many renowned filmmakers from around the world will be watching the film at the Toronto International Film Festival.

When asked about how well Saba will resonate with Bangladeshi audiences, Mehazabien said, "The film's budget isn't extravagant, but my genuine aim was to be part of a compelling story, and I'm glad to say we've achieved that. I believe the story of Saba has the potential to connect with viewers from all walks of life. The entire team has done an excellent job, and I've given my best performance."

Meanwhile, from the very beginning of the recent anti-discrimination student movement, the former Lux Superstar has been actively supporting the students on social media.

"The country has gained a new form of independence. On the day of the students' and people's victory, I stepped out of my home to witness the joy and celebrations firsthand. The experience was amazing," said Mehazabien.

When asked about her vocal support for the students, despite some hesitating to speak out, she responded, "I believe that personal freedom is essential in all aspects. Ultimately, one must stand up against injustice. I protested in my own way and supported the students' movement."

Mehazabien also spoke about the language of protest for artistes. She said, "The language of protest for artistes should be artistic. Everyone should have the freedom to protest against injustice in their own way. It's important to allow individuals the freedom to make their own choices."

The 45th Toronto International Film Festival is set to begin on September 5 and will run for ten days. The actress plans to attend the festival in full glory.

FAROOKI demands reform in censorship system

Mostofa Sarwar Farooki called for the dissolution of Bangladesh's film censorship laws, advocating for a rating system to replace outdated censorship policies. His film, Saturday Afternoon, remains censored for undisclosed reasons, prompting his demand for change. Farooki criticised the censorship board for silencing dissenting voices, particularly those challenging the ruling Awami League's historical narratives.

Farooki proposed safeguards to address concerns over historical misrepresentation while protecting creative freedom. He also criticised former state minister Mohammad Ali Arafat for tightening regulations on OTT platforms instead of reforming censorship laws.

The filmmaker called for the removal of outdated figures from the censorship board and grant committee, pushing for more progressive and sensible leadership in Bangladesh's film industry.

Hasina faces another ICT case

Among the others are former foreign minister Hasan Mahmud, former minister Jahangir Kabir Nanak, former state minister for ICT Zunaid Ahmed Palak, former state minister for information Mohammad Ali Arafat, former state minister Kamal Ahmed Majumder, former IGP Chowdhury Abdullah Al-Mamun, and former RAB director general Md Shafiur Rahman.

According to the complaint, Alvi died after being shot by police at the behest of the accused. It mentioned the entire country of Bangladesh as the location of the incident. It also said that the incident took place between July 15 and August 5, the day Hasina was ousted.

5 MORE MURDER CASES

Hasina has been accused in five more murder cases over killings in different parts of Bangladesh during the student-led movement that led to her ouster and escape.

With these, she is now facing 21 cases, including 18 on murder charges, two over alleged crimes against humanity and genocide, and one on allegation of abduction.

Several members of her cabinet, ex-Awami League lawmakers, leaders and activists of the party, and police officers are Hasina's co-accused in these cases.

One of the three latest cases in Dhaka was filed by Afsana Akhter Islam over the killing of her husband Jubo Dal leader Abdullah Kabir Khan, 50, at Mirpur-10 on August 4. Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Mehedi Hasan ordered Mirpur police to register the complaint as a first information report (FIR).

Among the 66 other accused are AL General Secretary Quader, ex-home minister Asaduzzaman, former Mirpur MPs Majumder and Mainul Hossain Khan Nikhil, ex-IGP Mamun, ex-DMP chief Habibur Rahman, former chief of DMP's DB Harunor Rashid, and former DMP joint commissioner Biplob Kumar Sarkar.

In another case, Hasina is among 148 accused of killing protester Liton Hasan Lalu in Mirpur-10 on August 4. The others include Quader, Asaduzzaman, Kamal Majumder, Nikhil and the top police officers names in the previous case. Lalu's brother Md Milon Hasan filed a complaint with a magistrate's court that ordered police to register it as an FIR.

In the other case in the capital, Hasina and 12 others were sued over the death of carpenter Tarique Hossain, 18, who passed away on August 9 after being shot in front of Sher-e-Bangla Nagar Police Station on August 5.

A Dhaka metropolitan magistrate ordered the Police Bureau of Investigation (PBI) to submit an investigation report by September 30 in the case filed by Tarique's mother Fidusi Khatun.

Along with Quader, Asaduzzaman, Majumder, Nikhil, Mamun, Harun, Habibur and Biplob, former law minister Anisul was named in the case.

In Chattogram, Hasina, Quader and 106 other people were sued in a case over the killing of college student Wasim Akram in a clash between Chhatra League and protesters in the Muradpur area on July 16 – one of the first killings that turned the quota reform movement into a mass uprising. Wasim's mother Jyotsna lodged the case last night at Panchlaish Police Station.

Wasim, a third-year social science student at Chattogram College, was involved with Chhatra Dal, the BNP's student wing, according to police and his family members.

The other accused include Chattogram-based former ministers Mohibul Hassan Chowdhoury Nowfel, Hasan Mahmud, former Chattogram City Corporation (CCC) mayor Rezaul Karim, city unit AL's General Secretary AJM Nasir Uddin, former Chattogram-10 MP Mohiuddin Bachchu, and 12 AL-backed CCC ward councillors. Some 100 to 150 unnamed people were also accused in the case.

In Narayanganj, the case was filed against Hasina, Quader, Asaduzzaman, former MP Shamim Osman and 58 others on Sunday. Shamim Osman's son Imtinan Osman Ayon, nephew Azmery Osman and many of his followers were also accused in the case. Plaintiff Shahnaz is the widow of victim Md Milon, a fish trader.

On July 21, law enforcers and Awami League men clashed with the protesters between Signboard and Shimrail on the Dhaka-Chattogram Highway. Milon, who lived with his family in the Mizmizi Purbapara area in Siddhirganj, was shot in the chest while returning home from a fish warehouse on that day.

Two journalists were also accused in the case over Milon's killing. They are Billal Hossain Robin, staff reporter of The Daily Manabzamin and correspondent of NTV, and Forhad Hossain, Siddhirganj Thana correspondent of The Daily Bhorer Kagoj.

2 DU deans step down in face of protests

Students said the three deans were asked to resign for supporting the Awami League government's mass killings during the July movement.

Around 11:30am, around 50 students gathered in front of the arts faculty building, demanding Prof Bachir's resignation, alleging that he was an aide of the ousted autocratic government and had previously issued show cause notices to students who attended a Quran recitation programme on campus during last Ramadan.

Around an hour later, Prof Abdul Bachir wrote his resignation letter and signed it.

"I'm resigning from the post of dean of the arts faculty. Please take the necessary measures in this regard," reads the resignation letter addressed to the DU vice-chancellor.

At that time, the protesting students recited verses from the Quran and prayed for guidance for the dean in his office with his participation.

Meanwhile, Prof Nisar Hossain, fine arts faculty dean, in his resignation letter also addressed to the DU VC, wrote, "I've received a letter with a four-point demand, including the resignation of the dean of the Faculty of Fine Arts for taking a stance in favour of mass killing and autocracy during the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement. There is currently no scope for me to verify how objective their allegations are and how logical the demand for resignation is, so I request that I be relieved of my duties as dean without regard to the allegations."

Contacted, DU Pro-VC Sitesh Chandra Bachar said the resignations will come into effect once the new VC is appointed.

Khaleda's bank accounts unfrozen formed during the then Army-backed caretaker government, said a senior official of the NBR.

Khaleda's accounts had been blocked since then although the BNP on several occasions demanded unfreeze.

The latest move by the NBR comes after a mass uprising toppled the government of Sheikh Hasina, a long-time rival of Khaleda, on August 5, ending the 15-year Awami League rule.

The NBR said they received an application from Khaleda's lawyer on Sunday seeking unfreezing of the bank accounts.

"As there are no tax-related issues pending investigation relating to Khaleda Zia, we have advised banks to unfreeze all her accounts. We have asked them to take immediate action and provide a compliance report," the official said.

Internet blackout had no legal basis

"The question is whose opinion would constitute the opinion of the government? Can the telecom minister form the opinion of the government? Generally speaking, the government means the cabinet," said an eminent telecom lawyer who asked not to be named.

Most importantly, since there is a positive requirement of "opinion", the exercise of power under this section must be preceded by a written record of forming the opinion.

"Such opinions must also be objective," he said.

No administrative approval of the posts and telecommunication ministry was taken while issuing the directive to shut down the internet, according to a probe report of the ministry.

The government and its agents acquire their powers and authority from statute, and there is currently no statute in force that can be used to legitimise the unprecedented mobile and internet blackout, said Fatema Anwar, a Supreme Court advocate.

"A fundamental principle is that one cannot rely on an extenuating circumstance that is self-induced to justify one's illegal action," she said, adding that the entire episode was "clearly and unequivocally escalated and exacerbated" by the last government.

State agencies who facilitated the said aggravation cannot now turn back and claim that they have a legal justification for a law-and-order situation that they created, Anwar said.

The widely referred provisions of the telecom act are inappropriate given the circumstances of those days.

"Interpreting statutes to justify their misconduct is legally fallacious. There was no war or warlike situation against Bangladesh. There was no external threat to our national security or sovereignty."

As for the internal law and order situation, the government is entitled to preferential use of telecommunication apparatus, equipment and systems.

"I do not see how this provision can be interpreted to mean blocking the service altogether. Moreover, there was no state of emergency declared," Anwar added.

In its response, the BTRC also said: "It is to be noted here that the former state minister gave his own confessions regarding internet shutdown and took the responsibility on his own which has been widely published in various media platforms."

The total losses from the internet shutdowns amounted to Tk 100,000 crore, said Mohiuddin Ahmed, president of the Bangladesh Mobile Phone Consumer Association.

"This action violated human and economic rights and those responsible must be held accountable and face trial -- it is a severe criminal offence," Ahmed added.

Sri Lanka defends diplomat fined for exploitation in Australia

AFP, Colombo

Sri Lanka's government has defended a top diplomat ordered by an Australian court to pay over $360,000 in back wages to her former housekeeper held in Canberra under "slavery-type conditions".

Colombo's foreign ministry in Colombo said Himalee Arunatilaka, currently Sri Lanka's permanent representative to the UN in Geneva, including the International Labour Organization, had followed government-approved rates in paying low wages.

Arunatilaka had previously been Colombo's Deputy High Commissioner in Canberra for three years, up until 2018.

The Federal Court of Australia on Thursday found Arunatilaka had breached the Fair Work Act and was not entitled to diplomatic immunity.

Australian media reports said the court ordered Arunatilaka to pay more than Aus$540,000 in back wages and interest to Priyanka Danaratna.

"She worked seven days a week for three years, and she had two days off in that entire time — and she did that because she burned her hand while preparing some food," her lawyer David Hillard was quoted as saying.

She was not given unpaid breaks, not paid overtime or penalty rates, and not paid regularly or issued payslips.

"It's an example of how modern slavery works," he said.

The court was told that Danaratna was paid a total of Aus$11,212 for three years of work, while the national minimum wage for a 38-hour week was Aus$656.90.

After running away from the diplomatic compound, Danaratna had sought refuge with the Salvation Army.

Hezbollah claims attacks on north Israel

Says two of its fighters killed

AFP, Beirut

Lebanese group Hezbollah said yesterday two of its fighters were killed and claimed attacks on northern Israel, including with drones, the latest cross-border violence amid fears of full-blown war.

The powerful Iran-backed group has exchanged regular cross-border fire with Israeli army in support of ally Hamas since the Israeli offensive in Gaza began on October 7.

Hezbollah said two of its fighters were "martyred on the road to Jerusalem", the phrase it has used to refer to members killed by Israeli fire since October.

The Israeli military said air forces struck "Hezbollah terrorists" in the Hula area and "Hezbollah military structures" elsewhere in south Lebanon.

Lebanon media reported Israeli shelling and raids on several southern areas.

A record number of aid workers killed in 2023: UN

AFP, United Nations

The United Nations yesterday condemned the "unacceptable" level of violence becoming commonplace against humanitarian workers, a record 280 of whom were killed worldwide in 2023.

And it warned that the Israel's offensive in Gaza is potentially fueling even higher numbers of such deaths this year.

"The normalisation of violence against aid workers and the lack of accountability are unacceptable, unconscionable and enormously harmful for aid operations everywhere," Joyce Msuya, acting director of the UN's Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), said in a statement on World Humanitarian Day.

"With 280 aid workers killed in 33 countries last year, 2023 marked the deadliest year on record for the global humanitarian community," a 137 percent increase over 2022, when 118 aid workers died, OCHA said in the statement.

It cited the Aid Worker Security Database which has tracked such figures back to 1997.

The UN said more than half of the deaths in 2023, or 163, were aid workers killed in Gaza during the first three months of the offensive, mainly in air strikes.

South Sudan, wracked by civil strife, and Sudan, where a war between two rival generals has been raging since April 2023, are the next deadliest conflicts for humanitarians, with 34 and 25 deaths respectively.

A counter-terror operation has been launched in the area. A joint party of the CRPF and the Special Operations Group of the Jammu and Kashmir Police came under fire from the terrorists in Dadu area.

Yesterday's attack took place in Jammu region, which for several years, remained relatively silent compared to Kashmir. There has been a spurt of terror activities in Jammu, particularly in the Pir Panjal range.

Ukraine 'achieving our goals' in Kursk assault

Says Zelensky; Russia rules out peace talks with Ukraine

AFP, Kyiv

Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky yesterday said his troops were meeting their objectives during their offensive in Russia's Kursk region, launched almost two weeks ago.

"We are achieving our goals. This morning we have another replenishment of the (prisoner of war) exchange fund for our country," Zelensky said, a day after saying Ukraine was attempting to create a "buffer zone" in Russia.

The Kremlin said yesterday it "will not talk" to Ukraine given its incursion into Russia's Kursk region.

Kyiv sent troops over the border on August 6, and has since held onto a part of the Kursk region, going on the attack in an offensive that has rattled Moscow.

Russian troops capture 'major' settlement in Ukraine's Donetsk region

"At the current stage, given this escapade, we will not talk," Kremlin aide Yuri Ushakov told the Russian Shot Telegram channel, adding that "at the moment it would be completely inappropriate to enter into a negotiating process".

Authorities in the southern Russian city of Proletarsk introduced a state of emergency yesterday as firefighters battle for more than 24 hours to extinguish a blaze at an oil facility hit by a Ukrainian drone.

Russia said Kyiv struck the fuel storage warehouse -- located in the city of 20,000 people in the southern Rostov region -- on Sunday morning and that the blaze was raging for a second day.

Local governor Vasily Golubev said the "liquidation of the fire is continuing" and that 18 firefighters were hurt tackling the blaze.

Meanwhile, Russia said yesterday its troops captured a "major" settlement in Ukraine's eastern Donetsk region, where Moscow's forces are advancing.

Russia's defence ministry said it had "liberated" the village of Artemovo, describing it as one of the area's "major population centres," located outside the town of Toretsk, where there has been heavy fighting.

Modi to visit Ukraine on Aug 23

REUTERS, New Delhi

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi will visit Ukraine on August 23, at the invitation of President Volodymyr Zelenskiy, the foreign ministry said yesterday.

Modi has trod a delicate balance between maintaining his country's historically warm ties with Moscow while courting closer security partnerships with Western nations as a bulwark against regional rival China.

His government has avoided explicit condemnations of Russia's invasion of Ukraine in the more than two years since the conflict began, instead urging both sides to resolve their differences through dialogue.

Biden to pass torch to Harris

AFP, Chicago

US President Joe Biden was due to give a bittersweet farewell address at the Democratic National Convention in Chicago yesterday, passing the torch to Kamala Harris as the party's nominee for November's election.

Less than a month after his stunning withdrawal and Harris's astonishing ascent, Biden can expect a hero's send-off from many of the same people who helped push him out due to concerns about his age.

The 81-year-old is expected to say that Harris -- America's first female, Black and South Asian vice president -- is the best person to finish the job he started of protecting American democracy from Republican rival Donald Trump.

Philippines, China trade blame after vessels collide

REUTERS, Beijing

The Philippines and China yesterday accused each other of ramming vessels and performing dangerous manoeuvres in the South China Sea, the latest flare-up after the two nations agreed last month to try to manage disagreements at sea.

China's Coast Guard said in a statement a Philippine vessel which had ignored its repeated warnings had "deliberately collided" with a Chinese vessel in an "unprofessional and dangerous" manner in the disputed waterway early yesterday.

The Philippines disputed Beijing's account and accused it of "imposing its version of facts." It said two of its coast guard vessels "encountered unlawful and aggressive manoeuvres" from Chinese vessels near Sabina Shoal, while on their way to supply Filipino personnel stationed in two occupied islands.

"These dangerous manoeuvres resulted in collisions, causing structural damage to both PCG (Philippine Coast Guard) vessels," said Jonathan Malaya, a spokesperson for the national security council.

At a regular news briefing, Chinese foreign ministry spokesperson Mao Ning told reporters that China would continue to take lawful "resolute and forceful measures" to safeguard its territorial sovereignty.

"We hope that the Philippines can keep its commitments (and)earnestly abide by the temporary arrangements reached with China," Mao said.

The US condemned China's actions. Its ambassador to Manila, Mary Kay Carlson, said on X the US "stands with the Philippines in condemning the China Coast Guard's dangerous manoeuvres".

Bring discipline back in civil admin

Stability needed to keep public offices running smoothly

We are concerned about the chaos gripping the civil administration following the fall of the Awami League government two weeks ago, resulting in disruptions in regular activities and services. According to a report by this daily, disorder, mainly due to a lack of qualified leadership, has been reigning in the ministries housed at the Secretariat Building, with frequent processions seen throughout last week. This situation must be handled deftly, lest the chaos leads to a deadlock in public services.

One issue highlighted by some mid-level officials is accumulated anger over top officials failing to lead by example. During the 15-year rule of Sheikh Hasina, these officials—mostly secretaries—spent their time running after various benefits. As the regime fell, a number of them did not show up at work—some even switching off their phones—when their presence was needed. Moreover, there are no specific instructions yet about the general administration from the interim government, which took office on August 8.

On the other hand, officers from different ministries, mainly BCS cadres, have been demonstrating with various demands. Their grievances range from denial of promotions to unfavourable transfer orders to change of designation. What is astonishing is that a majority of them are seeking to safeguard their personal interests during a crisis. Given how the top officials acted so far, it is perhaps natural that those below them would follow suit. One secretary lamented that "it is unimaginable that BCS cadres... can behave like this." We can't say we are surprised, though. When competent and sincere officers are pushed aside while incompetent and corrupt officials are favoured, such an outcome is inevitable. There have been no administrative reforms over the last 15 years; those who sought such reforms were ignored or not allowed to work, said a joint secretary.

Crisis has taken hold of the police administration as well. According to a report in Prothom Alo, there, too, partisanship has helped some police officials make impressive gains while those deemed remotely affiliated with the opposition were deprived of due benefits. Now, many of the police officers are in hiding while many have been dismissed from duty or made to retire because of past records. This has led to a sense of uncertainty among the junior and low-ranked officials.

This state of affairs cannot continue. A civil administration cannot continue to be dysfunctional, just as the police force cannot wallow in uncertainty. We would like to remind public servants that their job requires a bit of compromise, especially during a crisis. We know that some of their grievances are genuine and need attention of the authorities. But given the current situation, they need to be patient and follow due process to get what they have been deprived of. The interim government, meanwhile, must deal with this situation firmly and judiciously to restore discipline, getting rid of the unruliness. It must also address all genuine grievances and bring to the fore competent, honest officials with good track records. Lastly, an administrative overhaul is crucial to ensure that the civil and police administrations are able to operate independently and efficiently, regardless of who sits at the helm of the government.

Energy reforms are long overdue

CPD's three-step proposal deserves consideration

The Awami League government's questionable policies in the power and energy sector badly affected the economy over the last 15 years, prompting experts to frequently call for reforms but to no avail. Now that the interim government has taken charge, we hope to see the initiation of some much-needed actions in that regard. The three-step proposal given by the Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD) shows where the focus should be. It has put forth a 100-day plan highlighting the key priorities, followed by significant reforms stretching over the next six months.

In particular, four acts and policies highlighted by the CPD need immediate revisions since those were made primarily to benefit vested interest groups. For instance, through the enactment of the Quick Enhancement of Electricity and Energy Supply Act, also known as the Indemnity Act, the erstwhile government awarded public works to conglomerates without issuing any tender notices, while no public procurement rules were followed either. This act should be repealed immediately. The other acts that need revisions are the Bangladesh Energy Regulatory Commission (BERC) Act, the Renewable Energy Policy, and the Integrated Energy and Power Master Plan (IEPMP).

The need for the BERC to operate independently cannot be stressed enough. The amendment to the relevant act, done in 2022 to empower the government to set power and energy tariffs on its own under "special circumstances," without holding any public hearing, was a shady decision that frequently shot up energy prices. This needs to change. In addition, the IEPMP needs to be revised because the government allegedly projected faulty energy and power demand in it. Moreover, the suggestion to link the Sustainable and Renewable Energy Development Authority with the chief adviser's office also deserves consideration, as it will hopefully speed up phasing out of the fossil fuel-based power plants.

Phasing out the inefficient power plants should be another goal for the interim government. According to the CPD, the Awami League government paid a total of around Tk 105,000 crore as capacity payments to power plant owners in the 14 years up to August 2023, which is outrageous. So much money was squandered while citizens were either deprived of power or forced to pay exorbitantly for it. Revising the power purchase contracts and incorporating a "no electricity, no pay" clause will lessen the burden of capacity payments.

These are just a few key areas that need immediate attention from the interim government. There are many other short- and long-term suggestions given by the CPD which are quite well-thought-out, and can, if properly implemented, ensure competition, efficiency, transparency and accountability in the power and energy sector.

How a banking commission can address challenges in the sector

FAHMIDA KHATUN

In a welcome move, the Bangladesh interim government intends to establish a banking commission soon to introduce crucial reforms in the banking sector. This initiative is a response to our long-standing demand for taking meaningful measures to rescue the financial sector from inadequate governance.

It is unfortunate that the previous government fell short of its commitments to strengthen the banking sector, as outlined in various policy documents and strategic plans. This lack of action has left the sector exposed to increasing vulnerabilities.

Institutional challenges in the banking sector include the appointment of bank directors often influenced by political connections, loans granted for political reasons, the rescheduling of loans despite poor repayment records, writing off loans to reduce tax burdens and clean bank balance sheets, weak internal controls, inadequate compliance and risk management, and the failure of some banks to meet international standards.

Additionally, regulatory weaknesses have contributed to the sector's vulnerability. These include the lack of independence of the Bangladesh Bank, overlapping regulations by the Financial Institutions Division (FID) and the Bangladesh Bank, leniency towards defaulters by the Bangladesh Bank, arbitrary issuance of bank licenses to crony capitalists, government-led recapitalisation of banks, and the quasi-monopolistic power held by a few bank oligarchs.

The most alarming indicator of the banking sector's fragility is the substantial increase in non-performing loans (NPLs) accumulated over the past 15 years, exacerbated by both direct and indirect support from the previous government's policymakers. In 2009, NPLs in banks totalled Tk 22,480 crore, which surged to about Tk 1,82,000 crore by March 2024. The true extent of NPLs would be considerably higher if distressed assets, loans in special mention accounts, loans under court injunctions, and rescheduled loans were included.

High NPLs limit banks' fiscal flexibility by constraining their ability to expand lending and forcing them to forgo interest income. They also reduce banks' capacity to take on risks, leading to an increase in the cost of funds. Additionally, banks face capital shortfalls as they must set aside provisions to cover their NPLs, which in turn negatively impacts their return on assets, equity, and capital liquidity.

Often, loans were approved without proper commercial considerations, heightening the risk of defaults during the previous regime. When the central bank is not allowed to operate independently, it is more likely to make poor decisions. Unfortunately, the Bangladesh Bank was unable to penalise wilful defaulters due to the loss of its independent decision-making authority, which has been overridden by politically connected interest groups.

Given the worsening performance of the banking sector, we have consistently advocated for the establishment of a temporary banking commission to address these pressing issues. The purpose of this commission would be to thoroughly investigate and propose solutions to the challenges facing the sector. To ensure the commission is effective, its Terms of Reference (ToR) should be clearly outlined and may include the following objectives.

First, the objectives of the banking commission should be clearly defined and focused. These should include: i) conducting a critical assessment of the overall state of the sector; ii) ensuring transparency in data and information related to the sector; iii) identifying the root causes of current problems and potential future challenges; iv) determining which groups and institutions are responsible for the sector's crisis; and (v) providing specific, actionable recommendations for administrative, regulatory, legal, and structural reforms in the short to medium term.

Second, the commission's timeline should be concise and strictly timebound, not exceeding three to four months, to enable the government to begin implementation promptly.

Third, the commission should adopt an inclusive and participatory approach in preparing its report. This approach should include: i) conducting desk research using existing data and information; ii) holding individual meetings with relevant stakeholders; iii) consulting with experts; iv) organising public dialogues and hearings; and v) engaging in discussions with a wide range of stakeholders including policymakers, entrepreneurs, bank customers, small savers, small and medium-sized businesses, experts, bank officials, economists, representatives of banking-related organisations, women, youth, grassroots organisations, and the media.

Fourth, to ensure transparency, the commission should regularly update the public on its progress. Interim reports should be prepared and made available to citizens, and a draft of the final report should be posted online to gather feedback from stakeholders.

Fifth, commission members should be highly competent, experienced, honest, and impartial, and they must carry out their responsibilities with the utmost professionalism.

Sixth, the commission must be allowed to operate independently, free from any external influence.

Seventh, the interim government should establish a clear roadmap outlining when and how the commission's suggestions will be implemented. The government should also be required to provide full transparency regarding the proper implementation of these recommendations and their impact on the banking sector.

The banking sector has undeniably played a significant role in expanding trade and business within the economy. In the 1980s, the government of Bangladesh initiated the liberalisation process by privatising nationalised commercial banks. This reform process continued throughout the 1990s and 2000s, guided by the directives of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund (IMF).

Alongside these reforms, the National Commission on Money, Banking, and Credit was established in 1984. A banking commission was formed in 1996, followed by the creation of a banking reform committee in 2002. In 2003, the Central Bank Strengthening Project was initiated to develop a robust and effective regulatory and supervisory framework for the banking sector. The Bangladesh Bank Amendment Bill, 2003, which granted Bangladesh Bank autonomy, was passed by the parliament. However, despite this mandate, Bangladesh Bank ultimately lost its independence.

The recommendations for the commission can only improve the banking sector if it is allowed to operate without political interference. While the interim government is dedicated to implementing institutional reforms during its term, it must also ensure that these reforms are sustained beyond its tenure.

The darkest hour

MANZUR-AL-MATIN

After a decade of separation, my four sisters and parents had planned to finally meet in the US. My elder sister travelled across the Atlantic from the UK, my father from Bangladesh, another sister from the West Coast to meet the rest in the East Coast of the US. One of my sisters, Mouna (whom I have always addressed as Myna), almost managed to convince me to apply for a US visitor visa. But then, the attacks on Gaza happened. I could not get myself to travel to a country that continued to supply weapons and provide unconditional political support to the Netanyahu regime.

Then Abu Sayed appeared before all of us. With his outstretched arms, with his head held high, with his simple yet impenetrable courage! That changed everything.

I, who always thought it wise to stay out of the political binary, decided the time for patience and silence was over. As I stepped out of our apartment the next day, I found my wife, Sara, and my friend, Snehadri, by my side. I was certain of one thing, if we didn't go out and protest, the next child to receive a bullet in his chest would be mine.

> I, who always thought it wise to stay out of the political binary, decided the time for patience and silence was over. As I stepped out of our apartment the next day, I found my wife, Sara, and my friend, Snehadri, by my side. I was certain of one thing, if we didn't go out and protest, the next child to receive a bullet in his chest would be mine.

Out there we found so many of our children. Boys and girls alike. The age-old trifurcated system of English, Bangla, and Madrasa mediums of education had suddenly evaporated. They were all there. All chanting the same slogan, "WE WANT JUSTICE!"

To my surprise, I found the mothers closely following their sons and daughters. They were afraid. Afraid of the tear gas, the rubber bullets, the cleavers, and the live rounds. But falling back was not an option. Because falling back meant betraying Abu Syed. And he was standing right there. All the while.

I managed to upload several images and video footages on social media. One of these was particularly disturbing for my family, who had managed to come together in the East Coast by that point. I can hardly imagine what they went through when all communications in the country were severed by the government. I later learnt my 83-year-old father barely slept during those five days and nights. My mother, whose life revolves around her plants that have often made us siblings envious, went out to join a gathering outside the White House defying incessant rain. An umbrella in one hand, and a placard in another. The support I received from my family moved me to the core. Even my uncle, with whom I had fallen out of contact a long while ago, reached out, spoke out, and wholeheartedly supported our cause.

During the days of the internet blackout, all social media platforms were hushed. All we had remaining on TV was the voice of Tanvir Chowdhury on Al Jazeera English. BBC would follow his lead a couple of days later. But at least four newspapers kept fighting: Prothom Alo, The Daily Star, Samakal and last but not the least, New Age with the uncompromising Nurul Kabir as its editor. I must thank all the brave journalists who fought on despite all odds, risking their lives. Within my TV station, Channel 24, Zummatull Bida was my inspiration. Despite being hit by shotgun pellets, despite the attempts to seek her out when she was hiding among the students, she somehow managed to gather the courage to fight on. She went back out onto the field the very next day after being shot. That night, she had to keep her location a secret, even from her colleagues. You will always be remembered as the pioneers of truth, strength, and courage!

These people have shown us, no matter how ruthless an oppressor gets, no matter how much pressure is there to silence the media, there are always ways to keep on fighting. As individuals entrusted to inform the public, journalists must ask themselves at the end of each day, whether they have done justice to the duty they have taken up on their shoulders. It is a very personal burden that each news crew carries.

In Zumma's own words, "If at the end of a day's work we can look at the mirror and see no shame or guilt in our eyes, we are then fit for the next day's work."

These dark days and nights have taught us plenty. My only hope is that we remember the strength that lies with every individual. The strength to call a spade a spade, to speak out, when everyone else falls silent.

After the euphoria, the concerns

Dr Ahrar Ahmad
is professor emeritus at Black Hills State University in the US, and director general of Gyantapas Abdur Razzaq Foundation in Dhaka.

AHRAR AHMAD

The young people of the country deserve to be congratulated, their heroism celebrated, and their momentous accomplishments acknowledged. Their dedication, bravery and sacrifices to free the country from a deeply unpopular regime justly earned them the affection, admiration and gratitude of the people.

However, the pace and abruptness of these unprecedented developments must give us pause. After all, the actual movement and the fall of the regime occurred within only one month of turmoil and bloodshed. Moreover, the political and psychological legacy left by the previous regime heightens some concerns.

First and foremost, some resentments and frustrations of the people that had accumulated over several years, some sentiments of revenge and retribution among those who had suffered injustice, and some opportunists simply taking advantage of a fluid situation, have all led to various incidents of violence and vandalism. While some of this is expected, it must be resisted.

This lawlessness is particularly worrisome since some people have ransacked government (read people's) properties, destroyed revered historical markers relating to our Liberation War, and attacked minority communities simply because they are vulnerable. Given the fact that the police themselves remain discredited and demoralised, such crowd gangsterism becomes a self-fulfilling prophecy and invites disaster.

Even though people like Gustave Le Bon, Sigmund Freud, Nobel Laureate Elias Canetti and others have studied the psychology of mob behaviour, the phenomenon remains unclear. There are theories of deindividuation when people supposedly lose their sense of individual identity, personal responsibility or moral authority; of people demonstrating "bystander effects" that attract random participants by appealing to their sense of enhanced power; of people responding to simplistic, exaggerated and overly sentimental rhetoric, signs and codes; or of people becoming emboldened to do what they can get away with in the culture of impunity typically associated with the fall of an autocrat.

These groups must be calmed and contained as soon as possible, or it will become progressively difficult to do so later. It is uplifting to witness courageous and committed young people volunteering to combat such sinister forces and protect public order and minority communities. The worst seems to be over. But the anxieties persist, made sharper in the age of social media, AI bots, and deep fakes. One hopes, like Lincoln, that "the better angels of our nature" will prevail. But let us not forget that he himself was killed.

Second, the rapidity and drama with which the situation unfolded made it impossible for any "day after" scenarios to emerge. There was no time or opportunity to develop any ideals, programmes, goals, or a clear direction forward. So, the situation remains fraught and fragile. This becomes more problematic in the moral vacuum, personal distrust and social erosion that resulted from years of misrule and mischief, and the hyper-polarised political environment that had been created.

Moreover, the very idea of "politics" had been devalued and mangled by successive regimes. The classical notion of "politics" was built around concepts of public service, the common good, and the people's welfare. But in Bangladesh it had become a sport (the word "khela" had been routinely used) in which cynical, cunning and self-serving people desperately and shamelessly pursued the acquisition of personal profit and power.

> The problems Bangladesh faces today are surely daunting. But an incredible opportunity has been created to build a more democratic, just and beautiful country. The youngsters have fulfilled their responsibilities. Will the elders find the moral clarity, economic foresight and political courage to fulfil theirs?

Additionally, the guardrails that protect democracy, such as independent judiciaries, robust parliamentary oppositions, vigilant media houses, lively civil society platforms, or autonomous institutions of higher education had all been overwhelmed, finessed out of existence, or serially threatened and undermined.

Similarly, political parties that exist are not based on policies, ideologies, or democratic practices. They merely represent some patron-clientelist configurations where some sycophantic and opportunistic followers cluster around a "leader" who demands a cultish reverence (which is often shown in extravagant and comical ways).

The two organised parties which had held power in the past are burdened by their own history of bad governance, electoral abuses, violence against opponents (including assassination attempts and farcical cover-ups like Joj Miah), ethical lapses, constitutional tinkering, endemic corruption, and nepotistic family control. Other parties are shadowy and limited in their organisation and appeal. The consequent political vacuum in the country looks like an abyss staring back at us.

Even the "deep state" in Bangladesh has been debilitated by inefficiency, bribery and political patronage. Access to almost all government services (which are people's rights) as well as the regular functioning of the economy, became contingent upon payments to syndicates, power brokers and toll collectors, and navigating through serpentine and costly procedures and paperwork.

KLEPTOCRACY
ONE TAKA

The economy was turned into a vast kleptocracy of the lumpen-bourgeoisie and their bureaucratic enablers. VISUAL: STAR

The economy, suffering from inequality, inflation, unemployment, low forex reserves, and a banking sector in shambles, was turned into a vast kleptocracy of the lumpen-bourgeoisie and their bureaucratic enablers. It embraced the principles of predatory capitalism and concentrated on maximising aggregate indicators of growth and undertaking some dazzling megaprojects, while disregarding quality-of-life indicators such as human rights, civil liberties, ecological conservation, economic justice, gender equity, and public safety. To re-set directions and craft policies that would prioritise the interests of the people would be a complex undertaking.

Third, the previous regime is down, but not out. They may lie low for the time being, some may have fled, some arrested, some may announce retirement. But they are still there. The fact that so many of their followers are armed, are used to violence and, unlike most other parties, have a mass basis, makes their presence more ominous.

However, while we condemn their behaviour that brought us to this sad situation, that party's role in our national movement for independence and, particularly, the charismatic presence of Bangabandhu in that struggle, cannot be dismissed or minimised. One must demonstrate some maturity and objectivity in separating his inspiring leadership at that critical juncture in our national history from his obvious missteps and misjudgements later.

Along the same lines, weaponising "muktijuddher chetona", the hawking of "official" narratives by claiming exclusive partisan ownership over the war (even pitting freedom fighters against the people e.g., through "quotas") and interjecting the hateful word "Razakar" during the current unrest, were all crude and cruel interventions. However, the war itself, and the artefacts and relics of that glorious period of our national history, must not be tarnished but appreciated, preserved and studied (hopefully by scholars and researchers and not slogan-mongering party hacks).

Finally, the "India factor" lurks around the corner. There is no doubt that India deserves our respect and gratitude for its actions and sacrifices in our Liberation War. It had harboured millions of our refugees, hosted our government in exile, provided weapons and training to our freedom fighters, offered critical diplomatic support and, eventually, fought a war with Pakistan in which 3,843 of its soldiers were killed and 9,851 wounded.

The initial relationship was predictably rosy but soured later. Many bilateral issues (such as trade barriers, market access, illegal immigration, borders, water sharing, etc.) could all be resolved if good faith negotiations between equals had been pursued. However, India's patronising attitudes and the insensitivity to the interests and demands of Bangladesh increasingly forced the latter to look weak and dependent. In popular perception, India turned from a "good neighbour" into a "neighbourhood bully."

The relationship became more complicated through the unleashing of communal forces in India through the ascent of proto-fascist forces pursuing a Hindutva agenda of supremacy and intolerance which led to systematic assaults on India's Muslim history and heritage, as well as the rights and practices of minorities. This would affect the people of Bangladesh as well.

Finally, India left the impression that it was more interested in cultivating a relationship with a particular "party" than with the sovereign country that international law and norms dictate. This politicised its role and compromised its neutrality. And since that "party" stands discredited in Bangladesh today, and its leader has found protection in India, the situation becomes murkier yet.

The problems Bangladesh faces today are surely daunting. But an incredible opportunity has been created to build a more democratic, just and beautiful country. The youngsters have fulfilled their responsibilities. Will the elders find the moral clarity, economic foresight and political courage to fulfil theirs? The nation wishes them success and waits in hope and prayers.

'Any VC or teacher is expected to stand by students'

Dr Gitiara Nasreen, professor, Department of Mass Communication and Journalism at the University of Dhaka, talks with Naznin Tithi of The Daily Star about ways to end the current stalemate in our public universities and the reforms needed to ensure a better educational environment.

After the July uprising, what kind of changes do you want to see in our public universities? What kind of reforms are needed for a better academic environment on the campuses?

Many will admit that it is now difficult to call the public universities in Bangladesh "universities" in an ideal sense. They have gradually become stagnant, losing the environment for knowledge exploration. While their numbers have increased, their quality and standards have diminished. I believe the main reason behind this is, for many years those in power have maintained their control over the universities. Since there are many sagacious and conscious young people in the university, political power has been used to manage them through all spheres including students, teachers and administration. Now, to bring about positive changes in the universities, several changes need to be made in both the short-term and the long-term.

First, those who will lead the university, namely the vice-chancellors and pro-vice-chancellors, should not be appointed based on their educational and research qualifications only, they must have a clear goal to advance the institution and the capacity to fulfil that goal. Secondly, it is necessary to guarantee a proper educational environment for students with adequate accommodation and other necessary facilities. Thirdly, it is important to ensure teachers' accountability. Evaluation of teachers by students must be implemented quickly and effectively.

What should be done to end the stalemate that has been created in the public universities with the mass resignations of vice chancellors, pro-VCs and other key position holders? What should be the standard procedure for appointing new VCs?

The ideal method for the appointment of a vice-chancellor at a university should be through open competition so that qualified individuals are entrusted with this responsibility. The vice-chancellor must be academically sound, and at the same time, a visionary who knows which direction he wants to lead the university. After the anti-discrimination movement, students now want a vice-chancellor who will stand by their side. This is what any vice-chancellor or a teacher is expected to do—stand by students. Since partisan politics has dominated these appointments until now, vice-chancellors were subservient to the dictates of those who appointed them. Therefore, the welfare or safety of the students did not get priority to the VCs. Another part of this control structure was the ruling party's student organisation. They kept ordinary students in a state of fear through various forms of direct or indirect coercion.

Gitiara Nasreen

During the student-led mass movement, the relationship between the teachers and students became strained for obvious reasons. What should be done to mend this relationship?

The positions of proctor, provost and resident teachers have so far been given on political considerations. And since the nature of their work is controlling, this creates a distance between them and the students. When students believe that a teacher is sincere in teaching and related activities, and does not discriminate, no complications are created between the students and teachers. A teacher is a human being, and he can make mistakes, and he can also apologise for those mistakes. Sadly, many teachers and students do not think this way.

Do you think banning partisan student politics will bring the much-awaited change on our campuses?

We are observing a growing hatred towards politics among ordinary students. But this anti-discrimination movement is indeed a part of politics. In that case, it is their responsibility to determine how they will organise to ensure their rights. However, it is important to re-establish all the hall councils and central student councils in the universities as soon as possible. It is also necessary to fix the method through which students can participate in the decision-making process at the Senate and all other levels.

What about teachers' politics? What kind of reforms are needed in the university teachers' recruitment process?

It is natural for a teacher to be politically conscious. It is also not unusual for teachers to have their demands and claims and also their own unions. But by the term teacher politics, we now only understand the sharing of positions and titles among the teachers affiliated with power and the various ways they gain personal benefits. We have seen that the members of the teachers' association in every university are mainly from the political party in power. Therefore, they are by no means the representatives of all teachers. We hope that the teachers' associations will engage in the necessary reforms with the participation of all types of teachers, without being influenced by those in power.

What immediate measures should be taken to make all the campuses and residential halls safe for the students?

There are specific rules for seat distribution in the hall, which were not followed.

It is possible to ensure the security of the students if the seats are distributed according to the rules if no individual or group is allowed to dominate the halls, and if those involved in harassing the students are given appropriate punishment.

I feel as much pain in the abuse of the students as I do for those who are learning to abuse and torture. Eliminating discrimination means that no student—male or female—should be subjected to any kind of abuse in the universities.

The sexual harassment prevention cells that universities are supposed to have are either absent or not set up according to the rules. Students are often not aware of their existence. In some recent cases, it has been seen that even when complaints are filed with the cells, they often end up accusing the victim and absolving the accused.

There should be clear guidance on where and how to file complaints in case of any harassment or bullying. There is a need to create policies to prevent any form of harassment that the proctorial team will implement. In addition, we, on behalf of the University Teachers' Network, have been calling for the formation of an education commission that will formulate policies and monitor them to bring about the necessary changes in university education.

How international investment and local innovations shape our startup ecosystem

The startup ecosystem in Bangladesh is on an impressive growth trajectory, powered by a blend of international investments and local innovations.

IMAAD AHMED

The startup landscape in Bangladesh is undergoing rapid transformation, spurred by significant inflows of international investments and the innovative prowess of local entrepreneurs. This growth is evident across various sectors, with mobile financial services and tech-based startups leading the charge. With a strategic mix of global funding and local entrepreneurial flair, Bangladesh is carving a niche as an emerging hub for innovation in South Asia.

The impact of remittances and foreign investments

The interplay between local entrepreneurial spirit and foreign financial support has been pivotal. For instance, bKash, a mobile financial service provider that revolutionised digital payments in Bangladesh, emerged from this ecosystem. Starting with seed capital from BRAC Bank and international backers like the Gates Foundation and Ant Financial, bKash has scaled to a valuation close to $2 billion, highlighting the potential for local startups to achieve substantial growth.

Beyond their own successes, financial technology startups are playing a crucial role in the startup ecosystem by facilitating seamless transactions between investors and startup founders, thus enhancing the flow of capital within the sector. This capability has been instrumental in accelerating growth and allowing startups to rapidly scale and innovate.

Case studies of innovation and success

Pathao is another illustrative example, evolving from a ride-sharing service to a multifaceted platform offering delivery and logistic services, demonstrating the scalability of startups in addressing diverse consumer needs. This growth was supported by strategic investments from international venture capitalists, including Indonesian ride-sharing giant Go-Jek, showcasing the confidence of global investors in Bangladeshi startups.

Moreover, the tech-startup scene in Dhaka is becoming a hub for software and mobile application development, attracting attention from multinational corporations seeking to tap into the local talent pool. These startups are not only contributing to economic diversification but are also fostering job creation and technological advancement.

The startup ecosystem in Bangladesh is on an impressive growth trajectory, powered by a blend of international investments and local innovations. As this sector expands, it will play a crucial role in shaping the country's economic future, making it imperative for policies to align with the evolving needs of this dynamic sector. With continued support and investment, Bangladesh is poised to become a significant player in the global digital economy.

The art of embracing feedback for self-improvement

SHAMS RASHID TONMOY

In today's fast-paced competitive workplace, a small positive comment like "Good job" from your employer can go a long way. Inversely, a negative comment can leave you feeling deflated – and repeated instances can even lead to burnout and wanting to quit. However, when approached with the right mindset, both types of feedback can significantly contribute to professional development.

Keep an open mind

The first step is to approach feedback, both positive and negative, with an open mind. It's natural to feel defensive with negative feedback or complacent with positive feedback, but inappropriate responses to either type could hinder your growth or leave a bad impression. When given feedback, listen carefully and focus on understanding the message without immediately reacting. Taking time to reflect helps differentiate emotional responses from constructive actions.

Distil the core message

Feedback often includes emotions and subjective opinions. To use the comment for your betterment, focus on the core message instead of getting bogged down by the unnecessary details. For example, rather than fixating on a critique like "Your presentation lacked energy", focus on the actionable part: "Consider varying your tone to maintain audience engagement."

Avoid complacency with positive feedback

Positive feedback isn't just a pat on the back; it's an opportunity to understand what you're doing well and how to build on it. Rather than letting it lead to complacency, use it as a springboard for further improvement. Consider how the praised qualities can be developed further, such as by mentoring others, taking on more complex projects, or refining your skills.

Don't let negative feedback get you down

Negative feedback, though often hard to swallow, is invaluable for pinpointing areas that need improvement. For example, if you receive feedback that your time management needs improvement, consider it a priority, as this skill affects many aspects of your work, and potentially, the work of your colleagues as well. Once you've identified key areas for development, create a concrete plan to address them. This might involve seeking additional training, asking for guidance from a mentor, or setting specific goals for yourself.

Shikho was blacklisted from government funding, says CEO

NEXT STEP DESK

Shahir Chowdhury, the founder and CEO of the Bangladeshi edtech startup Shikho, recently stated in a Facebook post that his company had been blacklisted from receiving government funding. According to Chowdhury, Shikho was close to securing an investment, which included BDT 5 crore from Startup Bangladesh Limited (SBL) as part of a larger USD 1.5 million funding round. However, SBL abruptly withdrew its support just before the agreement was to be signed, citing political reasons.

In his post, Chowdhury claimed that SBL's decision was influenced by information from a third party, leading SBL to believe that it could not provide funds to Shikho due to political concerns. In his post, he expressed his surprise and disappointment, noting that this situation has posed a significant challenge for the company.

Chowdhury also stated that it later became clear that Shikho had been "blacklisted" from all official activities of the government. Despite efforts to maintain contact and seek assistance, he said that the Ministry of ICT and SBL chose to support only the institutions of their choice.

In his Facebook post, Chowdhury referenced comments made by Bangladesh's new ICT advisor, who has called for a re-evaluation of the startup ecosystem. He highlighted the importance of supporting startups that have faced challenges, alongside those that were previously supported by the government.

Earlier in March 2023, Shikho successfully raised USD 900,000 in a strategic funding round involving four investors, including three foreign venture capital funds: Goodwater, Sturgeon Capital, and Black Kite Capital. The Sajida Foundation, a charitable organisation, also participated in the fundraising effort.

To date, Shikho has raised USD 6.5 million, the highest amount secured by any edtech startup in Bangladesh, according to a previous company press release. Shikho's investor base includes notable global entities such as Learn Capital from Silicon Valley and Wavemaker Partners from Singapore.

Ola electric hits $7 billion valuation after e-motorcycle launch and battery plan

NEXT STEP DESK

Ola Electric Mobility, India's leading e-scooter manufacturer, saw its valuation soar to 586.64 billion rupees ($6.99 billion) on Friday, following the launch of its new line of electric motorcycles. The company's shares surged by 20%, reflecting investor confidence in its plans to reduce costs by manufacturing its own batteries.

The launch marks Ola Electric's entry into the highly competitive Indian two-wheeler market, where it will compete with established players like Bajaj Auto, TVS Motor, and Hero Motocorp. Two-wheelers are a dominant mode of transport in India, with 18 million units sold last year.

Ola Electric's stock has jumped 75% since its August 9 IPO, which raised $734 million. Despite initially lowering its valuation target to $4 billion due to global tech market corrections, the company's current growth trajectory has exceeded expectations.

BCB in flux as key ICC meeting approaches

SPORTS REPORTER

There was plenty of activity in Bangladesh cricket yesterday, and while this will influence how the Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) is run, the focus will be on today's ICC virtual meeting, where the decision on whether Bangladesh will be able to host the upcoming Women's T20 World Cup will be made.

While the Youth and Sports Adviser, Asif Mahmud, visited the BCB headquarters for the first time, the highlight of the day was the resignation of board director and cricket operations chairman Jalal Yunus, which signalled significant developments in store.

The BCB's modus operandi has garnered interest ever since the fall of the Awami League government on August 5, which saw many board directors go into hiding, including its president, Nazmul Hassan Papon.

Although there were suggestions from various quarters that the BCB directors might resign altogether, the National Sports Council (NSC) route was ultimately chosen to keep the board functional.

The NSC has five councillors and nominated two board directors, Jalal Yunus and Ahmed Sajjadul Alam Bobby, in the BCB's 25-member board of directors. Eventually, Yunus resigned from his directorship role under the NSC quota. "I have resigned as director for the greater good of cricket," Jalal told The Daily Star yesterday.

However, Bobby informed The Daily Star that he will not follow Yunus's lead, having received a call from NSC secretary Aminul Islam earlier on Monday.

"The secretary called me in the morning. He said that I would have to resign from both the councillorship and directorship. I told him that the NSC nominated me as a Councillor for four years, and by that equation, I am a director. So they should decide what they want to do with this Councillorship and Directorship and then inform me of their decision," Sajjadul said.

According to BCB constitution, a councilor can only be ineligible for nomination or remain a member if the person has been convicted or declared bankrupt by a court or found to be mentally ill. Regarding the matter, The Daily Star attempted to contact NSC secretary Aminul but he did not pick up his phone.

Meanwhile, with the BCB president missing, questions have been raised about who will attend the ICC's virtual meeting on the board's behalf. "The meeting will be attended by the existing members of the board," BCB CEO Nizamuddin Chowdhury said at a press conference yesterday, adding that the ICC's communications about the BCB's World Cup arrangements so far have been positive.

It is expected that Nizamuddin and another senior board director, Mahbub Anam, will attend the ICC meeting.

Former Bangladesh captain Tamim Iqbal and BCB CEO Nizamuddin Chowdhury show Asif Mahmud, the adviser of Youth and Sports Ministry of the interim government, around inside the Sher-e-Bangla National Cricket Stadium in Mirpur yesterday. It was Mahmud's first visit to Bangladesh's home of cricket since taking charge of the ministry. When asked in which capacity was Tamim accompanying the sports adviser, Nizamuddin said he did not know. PHOTO: FIROZ AHMED

We have all our bases covered against Pakistan,

SAYS HATHURUSINGHA

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh head coach Chandika Hathurusingha feels that his side is ready to face any challenge thrown at them by their Pakistani counterparts in the first Test of the two-match series set to take place at the Rawalpindi Cricket Stadium, starting Wednesday.

In a bold move, Pakistan named their playing XI for the opening Test yesterday, two days before the match begins, where they picked four pacers - Shaheen Shah Afridi, Naseem Shah, Khurram Shahzad and Mohammad Ali – alongside seven genuine batters.

Bangladesh have packed five pacers in their 16-member squad, of which four will be available for the first Test as Taskin Ahmed is in the squad only for the second Test.

Pacers Khaled Ahmed, Nahid Rana, Hasan Mahmud and Shoriful Islam are available for selection and the Tigers also have two spin-bowling all-rounders in Shakib Al Hasan and Mehedi Hasan Miraz, which emboldened Hathurusingha to claim that they have 'all bases covered'.

"The Pindi pitch looks more favourable for fast bowling and batting. They [Pakistan] also didn't pick any spinners," Hathurusingha told reporters during a press conference in Rawalpindi yesterday.

"Lately, we have developed a lot of good fast bowlers in our rank as well. If the condition favours, they will do well. Shakib Al Hasan and Miraz are two world-class allrounders. We have all our bases covered for whatever they throw at us," he added.

Batting department has been a real concern for Bangladesh for quite a long time and when it comes to the longest format, their performance has been especially poor.

Bangladesh could not go past the 200-run mark in five of their last eight innings in Tests. They went past the 300-run mark thrice with a highest total of 338 runs against New Zealand in November last year in Sylhet.

"Batting has been a concern for a while, but not for one reason. We play in result-oriented wickets back home. Sometimes 250 is a winning score in those pitches. Obviously when you play on these pitches, the batters have a tough time.

"The pitches in Pakistan generally favour batting. It is a good contest between bat and ball. We will show better results on these pitches," he said, adding that Shakib is doing well with his batting despite his recent struggle with an eye problem.

"He is actually batting well. He has looked fitter. He has done some eye testing as well. He is saying that it helped him with the problem he had," said the Sri Lankan.

Meanwhile, Hathurusingha claimed that spin-bowling coach Mushtaq Ahmed has gelled really well with the group and the players are taking his advice not only on bowling but also about other sectors as well.

> "I don't know what's happening back home. I have signed a contract till whatever the date [February 2025]. I am looking forward to serve the term. If the board changes, and the new people want to make a change, I am okay with that. If they want to continue with me, I am happy to continue."

"I know Mushy. We met in 1988. That's how old we are. He has fitted into the coaching group really well. He has a lot of experience working with England and Pakistan. He has a lot of local knowledge and experience from other parts of the world. Not just bowling, we take his advice in certain decisions."

Women's NCL to start from August 24

SPORTS REPORTER

The National Women's Cricket League, which will be held in T20 format keeping the upcoming ICC Women's T20 World Cup in mind, will get underway on August 24 at two different venues in Rajshahi.

The league was originally scheduled to start on August 19 but due to the political crisis in the country, it was deferred by five days. Now the eight-team event will be held at the Shaheed Kamruzzaman Stadium and Bangla Trac Cricket Academy venue.

According to a BCB women's wing official, the players will travel to Rajshahi on August 22 before attending a training session on the following day.

The tournament will be held in round-robin league system and there will be a rest day after two rounds. Four matches will be held in two venues on each match day. The last league matches will be held on September 2.

The women's NCL will be the last preparatory tournament for the Tigresses ahead of the ninth edition of the ICC Women's T20 World Cup, scheduled to start on October 3 in Bangladesh. However, the recent unrest and the subsequent fall of the Awami League government on August 5 has put a serious question mark over the fate of Bangladesh hosting the mega event.

Cameroonian club field only eight players in continental tie

AFP, Johannesburg

Cameroon club Fovu Baham fielded only eight players in a CAF Confederation Cup qualifier on Sunday and suffered a 4-0 loss away to Paynesville of Liberia.

A Confederation of African Football official told AFP that "only eight of the Fovu players who travelled to Monrovia were registered to play in the competition".

It was not immediately known why the Cameroonian outfit did not take at least 11 eligible players to Liberia for the first round, first leg so they could field a full-strength side.

Playing with a goalkeeper and seven outfield players, Baham were no match for the hosts, who scored twice in each half to build a convincing aggregate lead before the August 25 second leg.

Mark Paye netted in each half for African debutants Paynesville, whose other goals came from Lawrence Kumeh and Dean Weah.

The failure of Fovu to field 11 players came 24 hours after another unusual incident in the African equivalent of the UEFA Europa League.

AS Otoho from Congo Brazzaville travelled to Equatorial Guinea for a fixture against 15 de Agosto only for the match to be called off because the match venue was staging a concert.

CAF reacted by ordering both legs to be played in the Congo with the first on August 25 and the second three days later.

Nsoatreman of Ghana were another west African club to win convincingly at home as two goals from Mohammed Abdul Rahaman and one from Meider Kwabena earned a 3-0 win over Elect Sport of Chad.

U-20s set sights on semis in SAFF opener

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh are eager to make a strong start in the SAFF U-20 Championship as they face Sri Lanka in a Group A fixture at the ANFA Complex in Nepal today.

The match is set to kick off at 3:15 pm (Bangladesh time).

Bangladesh are still seeking their first title in this competition, having finished as runners-up three times in last five editions. In the previous edition, however, the boys in red and green were eliminated in the group stage after losses to India and Bhutan.

With Sri Lanka suffering a 1-0 defeat to hosts Nepal in their campaign opener, a winning start for Bangladesh will secure them a place in the semifinals before they face Nepal.

The team, under the guidance of coach Maruful Haque, are optimistic about overcoming the island nation -- a team they defeated twice in the 2019 and 2022 editions of the competition.

"We are not taking Sri Lanka lightly as they are good opponents, but we are hopeful of leaving the ground with a victory if the players can execute the coach's plan and remember their responsibilities on the field," said captain and goalkeeper Mehedi Hasan Srabon in an audio message provided by Bangladesh Football Federation after the practice session.

Srabon, who is also the second-choice goalkeeper for the senior side, believes their mission will be only half done if they can beat Sri Lanka today.

UEFA A-licenced coach Maruful had nearly two weeks of preparation with his charges, most of whom have experience playing in the country's top-flight football league.

"Before coming to Nepal, we stated that our goal is to play in the final. I believe the boys are on the right track with the hard work, dedication, and sacrifices they have shown in training.

"We have analysed Sri Lanka's strengths and weaknesses and prepared our game plan accordingly. Playing in the final and winning the title is always a challenge, so the first match is very important," said Maruful, who has also coached the Bangladesh national team.

Internet blackout had no legal basis

Say legal experts

MAHMUDUL HASAN

No legislation explicitly permits the internet blackout enforced by the Sheikh Hasina government to quash protests centring the quota reform movement.

The disclosure came in the government's official response to a joint communication from three UN special rapporteurs Irene Khan, Morris Tidball-Binz and Gina Romero asking for the legal and factual basis for internet disruption in Bangladesh.

In its response on August 13, the Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission said the internet shutdown was done by the Awami League government to fulfil political interests.

"To fulfil the political interest of the former government, BTRC was forced several times to shut down telecommunication networks by the former state minister. At the end, political government tried to achieve its own political interest," reads BTRC's response.

The BTRC cited Section 97 of the telecom law as the rationale for the internet shutdown.

The section states that the government will have preferential access to the internet during war or when a foreign power causes a warlike situation, internal rebellion or disorder.

Preferential rights of usage would also be given to the government "for any other reason the defence or other security of Bangladesh or any other urgent state-affair are required".

The sub-section (2) states that telecom services may be withheld if the president declares a state of emergency or if the government deems it fit to sustain law and order.

Hasina faces another ICT case

Inu, Menon, Manju also accused; 5 more murder cases filed against her

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Former prime minister Sheikh Hasina faces charges of crimes against humanity in another complaint at the International Crimes Tribunal, this time with allies Hasanul Haq Inu, Rashed Khan Menon and Anwar Hossain Manju, among others, as her co-accused.

Besides Jatiya Samajtantrik Dal President Inu, Workers Party President Menon and Jatiya Party (JP) Chairman Manju, Tariqat Federation President Syed Nazibul Bashar Maizvandary from the Awami League-led 14-Party Alliance has also been named in the complaint.

Md Abul Hasan, father of Shahriar Hasan Alvi, a 15-year-old ninth grader of Desh Polytechnic College who was killed during the student-led uprising in Dhaka's Mirpur on August 4, filed the complaint yesterday afternoon.

The complainant also accused around 500 unidentified members of the Awami League, Jubo League, Chhatra League and police as a group.

The 27 people named in the case include former home minister Asaduzzaman Khan, former law minister Anisul Huq, former prime minister's adviser Salman F Rahman, and Awami League general secretary and minister Obaidul Quader.

Last chance to end Gaza violence

Warns Blinken; 40 more Palestinians killed in strikes

AGENCIES

US Secretary of State Antony Blinken warned yesterday that the latest push for a Gaza ceasefire and hostage release deal was probably the best and possibly last opportunity, urging Israel and Hamas towards an elusive agreement.

Palestinian group Hamas has cast doubt on the chances of reaching a deal since talks in Qatar last week paused without a breakthrough, but the negotiations are to resume this week based on a US "bridging proposal".

Blinken met Israeli President Isaac Herzog yesterday before heading into a meeting with Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu while in Gaza Israeli forces thrust further into Khan Younis, residents said, in the latest phase of their assault. At least 40 Palestinians were killed in the past 24 hours, according to Gaza health ministry figures.

"This is a decisive moment, probably the best, maybe the last opportunity to get the hostages home, to get a ceasefire and to put everyone on a better path to enduring peace and security," Blinken told reporters before meeting Herzog.

Months of on-off talks have circled the same issues, with Israel saying the offensive can only end with the destruction of Hamas as a military and political force, and Hamas saying it will only accept a permanent, and not a temporary, ceasefire.

There are disagreements over Israel's continued military presence inside Gaza, particularly along the border with Egypt, over the free movement of Palestinians inside the territory, and over the identity and number of prisoners to be freed in a swap, reports Reuters.

Hamas accused Netanyahu on Sunday of "thwarting the mediators' efforts", and Turkey said after meeting Hamas envoys that Gaza's ruling group had told it that US officials were "painting an overly optimistic picture" of the talks.

Netanyahu told Israel's cabinet on Sunday that "we are conducting negotiations and not a scenario in which we just give and give," his office said.

Israel's military campaign has levelled swathes of Gaza, driving nearly all of its 2.3 million people from their homes, giving rise to deadly hunger and disease, and killing at least 40,139 people, according to Palestinian health authorities.

The main UN agency in Gaza, UNRWA, said yesterday that 207 of its staff had been killed since the offensive began. "They were engineers, teachers, medical staff. They were humanitarian workers," UNRWA said in a statement.

2 DU deans step down in face of protests

DU CORRESPONDENT

Professor Abdul Bachir, dean of the Faculty of Arts, and Professor Nisar Hossain, dean of the Faculty of Fine Arts, at Dhaka University, were forced to resign yesterday in the wake of student protests.

In the morning, students began separate demonstrations on campus, demanding the resignation of these two deans, who were elected from the Awami League-backed "Blue Panel" teachers' association.

However, their resignations will not take effect right away, as the vice-chancellor's post is currently vacant.

Additionally, students demanded the resignation of Professor Rahmatullah, dean of the Faculty of Law and a leader of the Blue Panel teachers' association.

As the dean was absent, it is not clear whether he had resigned till the writing of this report. In the meantime, his office was sealed off by protesting students.

Ex-judge, 4 former ministers, 10 MPs sued in 8 districts

STAR REPORT

A retired Supreme Court judge, a former minister, three former state ministers, 10 former MPs and six police officers have been sued in the last two days over murder, vandalism, extortion and other charges in eight districts.

Police have confirmed the filing of the cases amid a barrage of charges being brought against AL leaders after the party's ouster.

In Dinajpur, retired Appellate Division judge Justice M Enayetur Rahim and his brother M Iqbalur Rahim, a former MP and whip of parliament, are among 20 people sued in a case filed yesterday.

A local BNP leader filed the case at Dinajpur Sadar Police Station over the killing of Rahul Islam, 18. The student of Raniganj Ahiya Hossain School and College was shot dead during a clash between protesters and law enforcers on August 4.

The case in Tangail was filed against six AL MPs, including two former cabinet members, on charges of killing 10th grader Md Maruf in a clash between protesters, police and AL men on August 5 during the anti-discrimination student movement.

RAPE, MURDER OF DOCTOR

Indian medics refuse to end protests

REUTERS, Kolkata

Thousands of Indian junior doctors yesterday refused to end protests over the rape and murder of a fellow medic, disrupting hospital services nearly a week after they launched a nationwide action demanding a safer workplace and swift criminal probe.

Doctors across the country have held protests and declined to see non-emergency patients following the August 9 killing of the 31-year-old medic, who police say was raped and murdered at a hospital in the eastern city of Kolkata where she was a trainee.

A police volunteer has been arrested and charged with the crime. Women activists say the incident has highlighted how women in India continue to suffer from sexual violence despite tougher laws brought in after the 2012 gang-rape and murder of a 23-year-old student on a moving bus in New Delhi.

Friends and relatives mourn over the body of photojournalist Ibrahim Muhareb, who was killed while covering the advance of Israeli forces in north of Khan Yunis the previous day, at Al-Nasser hospital in Gaza Strip yesterday.

Wreck of WWI warship found in 'amazing' condition

CNN ONLINE

For more than 100 years, the otherworldly wreck of a British warship sat lost on the seabed, covered in barnacles and seaweed, after it was torpedoed by a German U-boat during World War I.

Now, specialist divers working with Lost In Waters Deep say they believe they have found the wreck of the HMS Hawke, which sank on October 15, 1914, off the coast of Scotland, the organization posted on Facebook.

"She's lying on her starboard side and under there ... seems to be quite intact," Will Schwarz, one of the divers, told CNN in a phone interview on Friday. "The guns look as if they're still active, they're so highly polished it's unbelievable ... I've never seen guns like that in such amazing condition, it's absolutely beautiful. But, we're very aware that 524 lads lost their lives on it."

It took just seven minutes for the warship to slip beneath the waves once it had been hit, Schwarz said, adding that historians believe the ship's magazine, where ammunition was stored, exploded.

As a result, 524 sailors lost their lives, including many cadets who were younger than 18 years old. The youngest to die in the shipwreck was a 14-year-old cadet, Schwarz said.

DCs feel insecure, fear embarrassment

At least 17 were PS to former ministers

'Deprived' officers lobby to become DCs

Amid lobbying by deputy commissioners seeking transfer from their once desired post, the interim government yesterday transferred 25 of them.

The interim government has also been facing pressure from officers, who feel they were "discriminated against" during the Awami League-led government, and want to be DCs.

The officers are seeking transfer from the usually coveted post of DCs because many of them have been fearing attacks and embarrassment following the ouster of the Hasina-led government on August 5.

Many DCs say they are receiving threats over the phone.

In the tumultuous weeks leading to the fall of the previous government, law enforcers and Awami League supporters opened fire on protesters in many places. When the mass uprising peaked and the government fell, government facilities and officers were attacked by locals in many places.

DCs are the head of civil administration in the districts. Since Monday, the DCs oversee the Zila Parishad and school managing committees.

MUNTAKIM SAAD and SAJJAD HOSSAIN

After years of denial by the authorities, chilling details about secret prisons are now emerging as victims of enforced disappearance begin to speak out after their release following the dramatic fall of Sheikh Hasina's 16-year regime.

Victims who once kept themselves shut are now providing distressing accounts of these detention facilities, commonly known as "Aynaghar," (house of mirrors), where victims of enforced disappearance were held in inhuman conditions over the last one and a half decades.

Although these victims come from different age groups and political and social backgrounds, their narratives of these thick-walled, iron-door prison cells are strikingly similar.

Steps against S Alam Group

Three state agencies yesterday made a series of moves against S Alam Group, its chairman Mohammed Saiful Alam, and his family members amid allegations of loan irregularities during the tenure of the recently ousted Awami League government.

Bangladesh Bank dissolved the board of National Bank linked with S Alam Group, and the stock market regulator restricted transfer and sale of shares of six banks with ties to S Alam.

Also, an NBR field office formed four teams to audit VAT compliance status of 18 concerns of the Group.

AL govt leaves behind $156 billion debt

REJAUL KARIM BYRON

When Sheikh Hasina returned to power in 2008, Bangladesh's total debt was just $33.66 billion. When she fled amid an unprecedented student-led uprising on August 5, she left behind a burden of $156 billion in local and foreign loans for the country to carry.

Converted to the local currency, the country's total debt stood over Tk 18.35 lakh crore as of June 30, according to finance ministry data.

These included $88 billion or over Tk 10.35 lakh crore from domestic sources and the remaining $68.33 billion or nearly Tk 8 lakh crore was external debt.

To put in words how the vast debts are affecting Bangladesh's finances: Tk 1.135 lakh crore or 14.02 percent of the total has been kept for interest payment in the proposed budget for this fiscal year, which is the highest among the sectors in the outlay of over Tk 8 lakh crore.

Economists have blamed stagnant revenue growth against a huge rise in expenditure, coupled with corruption in mega projects, for the massive debts.

The government spent around Tk 54 lakh core in total in its three consecutive terms while revenue earnings amounted to just Tk 37 lakh crore. Government expenditure increased from Tk 94,000 crore in FY09 to over Tk 7 lakh crore in the revised budget for FY24.

Bangladesh's revenue-GDP ratio has hovered around 9 percent, one of the lowest rates in the world.

A lack of government initiatives to bring reforms to the National Board of Revenue (NBR), along with tax dodging and huge tax exemptions provided to different pressure groups is blamed for the low revenue collection.

- Total debt soared fivefold in 15 years
- As of June 30, total loan Tk 18.35 lakh crore
- Stagnant revenue, mega project graft blamed

Besides, corruption in different mega projects increasingly made the revenue-expenditure gap bigger, said some leading economists.

Most of the mega projects were riddled with corruption, said Zahid Hussain, a former lead economist at the World Bank's Dhaka office.

"Big Projects, big corruption," he told The Daily Star last night.

He mentioned Bangladesh built the Padma Bridge with its own funds that came from domestic loans while the funds for the Karnaphuli Tunnel and the under-construction Rooppur Nuclear Power Plant have come from foreign sources.

"Corruption happened through cost escalation. Many, many unnecessary layers were added to the projects," he said, citing the Rooppur power project as an example.

Former social welfare minister Dipu Moni and former deputy sports minister Arif Khan Joy were placed on remand yesterday in a murder case.

The case was filed over the death of a grocery shop owner Abu Saeed in Dhaka's Moham-madpur on July 19.

ASHUTOSH SARKAR and SHARIFUL ISLAM

Uncertainty looms over quick delivery of a High Court judgement in the August 21, 2004, grenade attack cases as the hearing on appeals and death references has recently been halted.

It has not been specified when the HC will resume the hearing and the verdict will be delivered as the bench concerned of the HC dropped the case from its list of matters to hear.

The hearing is very unlikely to resume before October 20, when the court reopens after its annual vacation.

The horrifying grenade attack on an Awami League rally on Bangabandhu Avenue claimed 24 lives and left about 300 injured.

Then opposition leader Sheikh Hasina, who later ran the country for 15 years as prime minister and was forced to resign and flee on August 5 following a mass uprising, narrowly escaped the attack on this day 20 years ago.

UN team flies in tomorrow to discuss probe framework

PORIMOL PALMA

A team of UN experts is set to arrive in Dhaka tomorrow to set a framework for the fact-finding mission that is expected to probe the "atrocities" committed during the unrest that toppled former prime minister Sheikh Hasina.

They are expected to discuss detailed terms and conditions for investigating all the human rights violations that took place between July 1 and August 15, a UN official based in Dhaka told this correspondent yesterday.

"This is the primary UN team of experts before the UN fact-finding mission comes and investigates [the atrocities]. We are expecting to sign an agreement of framework for the probe," a UN official based in Dhaka told this correspondent yesterday.

The delegation will stay here for at least a week and meet the civil society groups, victims of human rights violations, students and government officials and any other actors concerned, the official added.

Foreign ministry officials also confirmed the arrival of the three-member UN team.

The government yesterday cancelled the previously postponed Higher Secondary Certificate and equivalent examinations after hundreds of students entered the Secretariat and demonstrated for hours.

The students gathered in front of the Secretariat in the morning and around 2:00pm, they entered the premises defying restrictions at the gate and then demonstrated there until around 5:00pm.

A 10-member delegation met Education Adviser Wahiduddin Mahmud to submit a memorandum. But at one stage, several hundred students went to the education ministry on the 18th and 19th floors.

Hasnat Abdullah, a key organiser of the student movement against discrimination, tried in vain to calm the protesters.

By 4:00pm, the protesters blocked the gates of the Secretariat, barring anyone from leaving or entering the premises.

MIKEL CHANGMA
UPDF leader
Detention: Apr 9, 2019 to Aug 7, 2024

'It felt like living in a grave'

MD ABBAS

Mikel Changma, a political organiser of the United Peoples' Democratic Front (UPDF), could not see daylight for five years after being picked up by some plainclothes men on April 9, 2019.

"During my captivity, the only sunlight I glimpsed was through the gap under the door or the ventilator. I finally saw the outside world again early on August 7 this year when they [abductors] released me," he said.

Following his detention from the capital's Shyamoli, he had been held in four to five secret prisons, widely known as "Aynaghar".

When Mikel was dropped off on a road in Chattogram, he was unaware of the fall of the Sheikh Hasina government two days ago.

Over the last five years, his family has endured severe pain and mental anguish.

Believing that Mikel was dead, the family even performed his funeral rites. His father passed away "mourning the loss of his son".

In an interview with The Daily Star, the leader of the Chittagong Hill Tracts-based UPDF on Monday remembered his ordeal in the secret prisons.

"On the night of August 6, I was blindfolded and forced into a car. I thought they would take me somewhere and kill me....

"After picking me up, the abductors interrogated me on putting logs on a road in Khagrachhari in support of a blockade during a rally of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina. They enquired about a case in which I was accused of a murder. I told them that I was not involved in those incidents," Mikel said.

Even though he was not physically tortured, his time in solitary confinement was so harsh that he described it as severe psychological torture.

"I was held in such inhumane conditions that felt like living in a grave. The room had no windows and no fresh air, just four enclosed walls."

Mikel, aged about 45, had a run-in with a prison supervisor. After that

'Captors kept watch on my family'

SAJJAD HOSSAIN

On the evening of December 4, 2017, around 6:45pm, M Maroof Zaman, former Bangladesh ambassador to Vietnam, was on his way from his Dhanmondi home to receive his daughter at the Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport.

While driving, he noticed a microbus tailgating and attempting to ram his car.

Near the airport, his car was intercepted, and two men in plain clothes got off the microbus, assaulted him and dragged him out of his car.

They forcibly placed Maroof into the microbus, where several other individuals blindfolded him, tied his hands, and covered his face with a cloth.

Under duress, he had to call a family member to instruct him to hand over his laptops to a "technician" who would visit his home.

"They wanted my laptops. I initially resisted, but after the assault I had no choice but to cooperate. They eventually took my laptops from my home," he told The Daily Star.

After driving for about 20 minutes, the microbus stopped, but he could not see where they were as he was blindfolded.

Maroof, also a retired captain of Bangladesh Army, said he was confined to a small, filthy room furnished with a wooden bed, a CCTV camera, and four fans. The space was barely livable.

"Many people were detained in this room at different times, and some had written their names, addresses and dates on the walls. These writings were painted over every three months."

During his captivity, the former diplomat, 67, faced interrogations more than nine times.

'They didn't even let me drop off the milk for my child'

MUNTAKIM SAAD

After years-long legal battles, all 110 cases against Nobel laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus and his organisation Grameen Telecom over alleged labour law violations were dropped by union workers and employees on May 23, 2022, following a settlement regarding payment claims.

Around a month later, on June 30, Grameen Telecom Workers' Union General Secretary Firoz Mahmud Hasan, 44, was picked up by plainclothes men.

He was then taken to the infamous "Aynaghar", a secret detention facility, where he was subjected to torture in an attempt to force him to make a statement against Prof Yunus and Grameen Telecom authorities.

This is the story of his abduction, his experience in "Aynaghar", and his eventual release.

HOW HE WAS PICKED UP

It was around 10:30pm on June 30, 2022. Firoz, along with his wife and children, had just sat down for dinner when they realised they were out of milk for their one-and-a-half-year-old child. So, Firoz left his dinner and went to buy some at a shop close to his home in Mirpur's ECB Chottor.

> "I couldn't tell day from night. I didn't even hear the call to prayer. I could only tell it was morning when they brought me breakfast."
> FIROZ MAHMUD HASAN.

On his way home, 10-15 masked men stopped him and asked for his identity. They took his mobile phones and forced him to go with them.

They didn't even let him drop off the milk for his child. He was quickly blindfolded and taken away on a microbus.

Hours later, Firoz found himself in a detention centre, which he was unaware at the time was the infamous "Aynaghar."

There, he was tortured, both physically and mentally, and threatened with the same treatment for his family if he did not comply with their request.

Piecing together the details of their narratives, it is now clear that many of these facilities were run by the Directorate General of Forces Intelligence (DGFI), which operates under the defence ministry. DGFI heads are reportable directly to the prime minister and prime minister's security adviser.

These facilities are notorious for their complete isolation, with detainees unable to see any light from the outside world.

The Daily Star spoke to four such victims who endured mental and physical torture inside these secret prisons for days, months and even years during the Awami League regime.

CHT-based United People's Democratic Front (UPDF) leader Mikel Changma is one of them. After five years of captivity since April 2019, he was freed just two days after Hasina fled the country in the face of a popular uprising.

"For the first time in five years, I saw daylight in the early hours of August 7 when they released me," Mikel told The Daily Star, adding that he was unaware of the August 5 political changeover.

Former Bangladesh ambassador to Vietnam Maroof Zaman had gone missing on December 4, 2017, and returned home after nearly 16 months (467 days) in March 2019. Talking to this newspaper yesterday, he narrated how his captors tried to establish him as an anti-government element.

His accounts also clearly indicate that his captors were linked with the army, as he saw words like "Sena" (army) in the water bottles; Defence Medicine, trading prohibited, on the medicine leaf; and Station Headquarters Library and Senabahini Library in the Quran he was provided during his captivity.

The two other victims are Kamruzzaman, president of Grameen Telecom Workers Union, and its General Secretary Firoz Mahmud Hasan. Their 2022 captivity in the so-called Aynaghar was short – only seven days – but their secret imprisonment appears to be directly linked to Sheikh Hasina's reported dislike of Prof Muhammad Yunus.

Both said they were forced to give confessional statements against Yunus. They were also forced to claim that they coerced workers into withdrawing the cases against the Nobel laureate after secretly agreeing with the Grameen Telecom authorities in exchange for money.

FALSEHOOD FALLS APART

The AL government has persistently denied the existence of the secret prisons run by security forces, and maintained that the term "enforced disappearance" was used to malign the government and its achievements.

"Upon investigation of the alleged enforced disappearance cases, the findings reveal that people often disappear voluntarily to avoid legal action for cases lodged against them. Sometimes they choose to disappear due to family feud or to avoid business liability, and some often willingly disappear with the intention of embarrassing the government," the government wrote to the UN on May 12, 2022.

But this version started falling apart after the release of former army brigadier general Abdullahil Amaan Azmi and Mir Ahmad Bin Quasem on August 6, the day after Sheikh Hasina's fall. Azmi, son of late Jamaat leader Ghulam Azam, and Ahmad, son of executed Jamaat leader Mir Quasem, were held in secret prisons for eight years.

"I was kept in darkness, not allowed to see the light of day. Even the ventilator in the room was sealed off," Azmi said in a video posted on social media after his release.

> "Upon investigation of the alleged enforced disappearance cases, the findings reveal that people often disappear voluntarily to avoid legal action for cases lodged against them."
> BANGLADESH WROTE TO UN ON MAY 12, 2022.

In a recent interview with AFP, Barrister Ahmad, a defence lawyer fighting the war crimes case against his father when he simply vanished, shared his ordeal inside Aynaghar and how he got fresh air for the first time in eight years.

"Slowly, slowly, I could realise that I am not alone," he said. "I could hear people crying, I could hear people being tortured, I could hear people screaming."

The story of Aynaghar first came to light on August 14, 2022, when Netra News, a Sweden-based news portal, revealed in a report the location of a secret prison in which the victims of enforced disappearances were kept.

For over a decade, hundreds of families in Bangladesh have lived with the unbearable pain of not knowing the fate of their loved ones. These individuals—mostly critics of the government and members of the opposition parties—disappeared during its 16-year rule, allegedly abducted by state agencies.

In its 2021 report, Human Rights Watch said that security forces have committed over 600 enforced disappearances since Hasina came to power in 2009.

While some people were later released, produced in court, or said to have died during gunfire exchanges with security forces, nearly 100 people were still missing, HRW said.

Rights activists have noted an increase in enforced disappearances before and after elections, as well as during political movements.

According to rights organisation Odhikar, at least 708 people were victims of enforced disappearance between 2009 and June 2024. Of these incidents, 454 occurred between 2013 and 2018, during which Bangladesh held two general elections.

Odhikar data show that 98 people were victims of enforced disappearance in 2018, 95 in 2017, 97 in 2016, 69 in 2015, 41 in 2014, and 54 in 2013. In the lead-up to the last election, state agencies allegedly abducted 54 people in 2023.

AN INVITE TO AYNAGHAR

On August 6, members of Mayer Daak, a platform for family members of victims of enforced disappearance, gathered in front of the DGFI office inside Dhaka cantonment seeking information about their missing relatives.

Azmi and Ahmad, also known as Arman, suddenly returned home that day, and Mikel the next day.

At a meeting with DGFI on August 6, a six-member team including rights activists and a UN representative, demanded access to the detention facility. The team was allowed to visit the DGFI headquarters on August 7.

After coming out from the facility, rights activist Shireen Huq told families of some victims, "They invited us to visit the facility. The DGFI said there were no detainees in their Dhaka facility. They also said that they will form a joint commission to arrange visits for rights activists to 23 other facilities across the country to see if the victims of enforced disappearance are there."

Home Adviser Lt Gen (retd) Jahangir Alam Choudhury and Law Adviser Asif Nazrul did not respond to our calls and text messages seeking their comments. Inter Services Public Relations Directorate (ISPR) also declined to comment, saying it does not deal with matters related to DGFI.

At a meeting with members of Mayer Daak on August 13, Prof Yunus expressed deep concerns after hearing the distressing accounts of families whose loved ones have gone missing over the years.

On Sunday, the platform sent a list of 158 missing people to DGFI.

Afroza Islam Akhi, cofounder of Mayer Daak, told The Daily Star that the interim government has assured them that it will address their concerns.

"We saw that Lt Gen Ziaul Ahsan was arrested and placed on remand. This was one of our demands to investigate his role. We have also demanded the formation of an enquiry commission, which they agreed to," she said, adding that they also want information about the numerous secret detention cells across the country.

Nur Khan Liton, a noted rights activist who has long been voicing concerns about enforced disappearance, said many people still remain unaccounted for after being taken away by alleged state agencies.

"It is time to demand their release or for the state to provide information on their whereabouts," he said.

Govt transfers 25 DCs in one go anonymity, said, "The situation in local administration has created a crisis, especially since the government's priority is to maintain law-and-order."

The DC from a southern district who was transferred yesterday, told this newspaper that he was so relieved that he would celebrate by distributing sweetmeat worth several thousands.

"I could not take the pressure anymore," he said.

The Ministry of Public Administration last night issued a notification stating that the DCs of Dhaka, Sylhet, Habiganj, Mymensingh, Magura, Rangpur, Gaibandha, Naogaon, Natore, Cox's Bazar, Chattogram, Noakhali, Gazipur, Cumilla, Moulvibazar, Khulna, Gopalganj, Faridpur, Sherpur, Kushtia, Jhenaidah, Pabna, Bogura, Joypurhat and Chandpur had been transferred.

As of last night, no DCs were appointed to these districts.

Several experts on civil administration said they have never seen so many DCs getting transferred in one go.

INSECURE AND AFRAID

On Sunday, activists of several student organisations entered the DC office in Jhenaidah and openly accused DC SM Rafiqul Islam of acting like an Awami League supporter and taking bribes.

Rafiqul then sought a three-day leave while the students surrounded him.

After the fall of the AL government, the residence of Mymensingh DC was ransacked. Offices of upazila nirbahi officers and assistant commissioners were vandalised in Cumilla, Bhola, Sunamganj, Narsingdi and Chuadanga, officials said.

Several top officials said that information regarding many DC's previous involvement in Chhatra League were spreading.

"This is putting more pressure on them. We heard that in some cases, certain colleagues of the DCs are giving the information to local students," said a top official of the public administration ministry.

Many former bureaucrats say the previous government's appointed DCs are perceived to be close to the ruling party.

A top public administration ministry officer said, "Political considerations used to be a decisive factor in government appointments. Very few officers were appointed solely because of their professionalism, merit, and qualifications."

In July 2023, less than six months before the last general election, the government appointed 30 DCs. Seven of them worked as personal secretaries to different ministers.

As of yesterday morning, at least 17 DCs had previously worked as PS to different ministers of AL governments.

Under the AL government, officers of the 25th batch of BCS faced the most discrimination because they were recruited during the BNP-led government. Now they are lobbying for the post of DCs.

An officer of the 25th batch said, "Many good officers of our batch did not even try to be DCs under the previous government. Now, we are interested.

"If corrupt officers who behave like party cadres are placed across the country, the government will be harmed. This is a different kind of government. We need efficient and honest officers who are not partisan."

Former cabinet secretary Mosharraf Hossain Bhuiyan said, "DCs must be honest and efficient. Appointment to the posts should be made on special considerations, especially due to the volatile situation."

Neither the cabinet secretary nor the public administration senior secretary could be reached for comment.

20yrs on, justice not served yet

The then BNP-led alliance government had the case investigated, but the probe was farcical as senior CID officials cooked up a story involving one Joj Mia.

They detained the man from Noakhali, along with 20 petty criminals, and forced Joj Mia and two others to make confessional statements.

During the caretaker government rule after the January 11, 2007, changeover, the CID submitted two charge sheets in two cases accusing 22 people, including Huji chief Mufti Hannan and BNP leader and former deputy minister for education Abdus Salam Pintu.

One of the cases was filed under the Explosive Substances Act while the other was for murder.

The trial began after charges were framed against them in October 2007 and the court recorded testimonies of 61 prosecution witnesses.

After the AL assumed power in January 2009, the prosecution appealed for further probe and the court in August that year issued the order for it and a new investigation officer was assigned.

The CID in July 2011 submitted a supplementary charge sheet, accusing 30 more people, including BNP acting chairperson Tarique Rahman and Lutfozzaman Babar, state minister for home 2001-2006.

A Dhaka court on October 10, 2018, sentenced 19 people, including Babar to death, in the two cases.

Nineteen others, including Tarique, were given life imprisonments and 11 people were handed different terms in prison.

The convicts included former top officials of police, DGFI, NSI, CID, and top militants of Huji.

While delivering the verdicts in the two cases, the court observed that it was a well-orchestrated attack executed abusing state power.

Eighteen convicts are absconding and 31 are in jail.

The death references of the cases reached the HC on November 27, 2018, for examination of the trial court's verdict.

On January 13, 2019, the HC accepted the appeals filed by the convicts for hearing.

The HC bench of Justice Shahidul Karim and Justice Md Mostafizur Rahman has so far held hearings on death references and appeals for around 100 working days since December 5, 2022.

A lawyer, who was involved in the cases, recently told The Daily Star that the HC could have concluded the hearings on the appeals and death references this month if it could have heard those continuously.

The last hearing on the cases was held on August 1, the lawyer said.

Contacted on Monday, Attorney General Md Asaduzzaman, who was appointed on August 8, told The Daily Star that the HC bench led by Justice Shahidul Karim on August 18 dropped the cases from its hearing list as its junior judge was assigned to another bench.

"When the court reopens [after its annual vacation], I will examine the relevant papers and documents and decide on the cases," the AG said.

He, however, said, "The cases will be in the hearing list after the annual vacation."

The Appellate and High Court divisions of the Supreme Court are scheduled to go into its annual vacation on September 6 and reopen on October 20.

HC sources said for 61 days, the prosecution read out from books case details, trial proceedings, statements, evidence, verdicts, and other documents before the HC bench.

The defence lawyers for 24 out of the 49 convicted placed their arguments for 30 days until June 12 this year.

After concluding the hearings, the HC bench will deliver a verdict on the death references and the appeals. When the HC releases the full text of its verdict, the state and defence would have the opportunity to appeal before the Appellate Division.

A few years may be required after that for the Appellate Division to dispose of the appeals. Both parties will then have the option to move review petitions challenging the apex court judgement.

Says HRSS

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Human Rights Support Society yesterday demanded the formation of an independent investigation commission to ensure justice for all the killings during the recent anti-discrimination students' protest.

The rights body, in a statement, also demanded compensation for the families of the deceased, coverage of medical expenses for the injured, and their rehabilitation.

High-ranking cops concerned as ACC probe looms

DIPAN NANDY and MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN

The high-ranking police officials loyal to the previous Awami League regime, are now passing days amid fear of losing their jobs, lawsuits, arrests and public wrath.

Their concerns follow the Anti-Corruption Commission's recent decision to launch investigation into allegations of corruption, irregularities, and amassing wealth illegally by abusing power, against at least 80 present and former police officials.

Confirming the ACC's move, ACC's secretary Khorsheda Yasmeen said, "Decision has been taken to investigate the corruption and illegal wealth of Habibur Rahman, former commissioner of Dhaka Metropolitan Police, and Harun Or Rashid, former chief of Detective Branch. An investigation team has also been formed."

Khorsheda said complaints against any other police official will come under the jurisdiction of the commission and will be investigated.

Sources alleged that these police officials amassed ample wealth through bribery, recruitment, posting, tender manipulation, interference in cases, and arrest trade.

Some of these top police officials used ruthless force and opened fire to stop the protesters who joined the quota reform protest.

A dozen cases have already been filed including murder charges against top police officials including the former inspector general of police, former DMP commissioner, and dozens of other officials.

Some officers have yet to join their workplace after Hasina's fall, while others submitted medical certificates

ISPR protests misleading media report

BSS, Dhaka

The Inter-Services Public Relations (ISPR) yesterday protested a report published by various media outlets titled, "Army Chief faces anger by young army officers at a meeting that day."

In a rejoinder, ISPR said the news was published based merely on a report in the Indian newspaper "The Week", which was motivated and misleading. It is advisable to contact ISPR for an accurate presentation of any internal information related to army affairs, said an ISPR press release.

In fact, the meeting was a regular internal meeting of the Bangladesh Army, held in a very cordial and conducive atmosphere, and ended amicably. An attempt has been made to tarnish the glorious image of the Bangladesh Army before the public

Take clear stance on women's issues

Demand women leaders at meeting with chief adviser

DEMANDS

- Establish a Women's Rights Commission
- Ensure equal inheritance rights
- Increase budget allocation for women
- Find truths about Kalpana Chakma, Tonu, Munia
- Recognise women's unpaid work

Leaders of women's rights organisations proposed the establishment of a Women's Rights Commission to tackle women's issues in a more comprehensive and unified manner.

They made the call in a meeting with chief adviser of the interim government Dr Muhammad Yunus yesterday.

The meeting, held at the state guesthouse Jamuna, was attended by around 30 women leaders and two coordinators from the anti-discrimination student movement.

Syeda Rizwana Hasan, Environment, Forest, and Climate Change Adviser, briefed the media on the meeting's outcomes.

She said the Information Commission and National Human Rights Commission have faced difficulties under partition governments and emphasised the need to ensure their independence and effectiveness.

Rizwana announced the interim government's plan to set up a foundation to provide medical treatment for individuals injured during recent student protests. Supported by the interim government, the foundation will expedite treatment and rehabilitation through donor funds.

"While setting up the foundation will take time, an immediate interim solution is needed to provide funds for urgent medical needs," Rizwana said.

Discussion also centered on the Ministry of Women and Children Affairs.

"While the ministry implements various projects, it is also expected to oversee 45 other ministries, a role it is not adequately fulfilling," she added.

Addressing gender discrimination, the leaders highlighted both national and international discriminatory laws.

BLAST condemns remands of women

Calls for adherence to SC directives

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Bangladesh Legal Aid and Services Trust (BLAST) has expressed deep concern over the recent arrests and remands of women in various cases, calling for strict adherence to Supreme Court directives by law enforcement agencies.

In a press release issued yesterday, BLAST highlighted reports from newspapers and social media indicating that women have been arrested and taken on remand following the recent anti-discrimination movement.

The organisation noted that these actions often disregard the directives set by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court regarding arrests and interrogations during remand.

MUNIA MURDER CASE

Family demands reinvestigation

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The family of college student Mosarat Jahan Munia, whose body was found in a Gulshan flat in 2021, yesterday demanded reinvestigation into the rape and murder case filed against Bashundhara Group Managing Director Sayem Sobhan Anvir and seven others.

Saying that previous investigation officers were bribed to cover up Anvir's crimes, Munia's sister Nusrat Jahan Tania appealed to the interim government to immediately arrest and interrogate the accused.

Tania, the complainant in the case, was speaking at a press conference at the Jatiya Press Club.

Following Munia's death, two cases were filed against Anvir, his family members, and some others. The accused were later cleared in both cases.

The other case was filed over abetting her death by suicide.

Tania alleged that several law enforcement officials, including the then IGP Benazir Ahmed and deputy commissioner of Gulshan Division, played a "shameless role" in saving Anvir.

She termed the previous investigation and the Metro likely to resume Sunday

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The metro rail authority aims to resume operations on Sunday after employees, who had been on work abstention since August 6, returned to work yesterday.

However, trains will not stop at the vandalised Mirpur-10 and Kazipara stations, the road transport and bridges ministry announced.

Employees from grades 10 to 20 resumed work after the Dhaka Mass Transit Company Ltd board agreed to their demand for a pay rise, according to two officials.

Speaking to The Daily Star* on Sunday, DMTCL Managing Director MAN Siddique said that five days would be needed to complete all necessary tests, including a trial run, once employees returned.

On Monday night, the DMTCL board held a lengthy meeting and eventually invited

New administrators vow to improve services

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The newly appointed administrators of Dhaka North and South City Corporations yesterday pledged to ensure smooth and efficient service delivery.

Speaking to reporters on their first day in office, Md Mahmudul Hasan, administrator of Dhaka North City Corporation, emphasised the importance of meeting public expectations.

"The interim government was formed through a student uprising. We will prioritise fulfilling the students' expectations from this government," Hasan said.

DNCC will enhance its services, particularly in mosquito control, to combat dengue during the rainy season, he added.

He also pledged to clear canals of illegal encroachments and maintain routine services like birth and death registration.

Dr Mohd Sher Ali, administrator of Dhaka South City Corporation, echoed a similar commitment.

"The services provided by DSCC will continue uninterrupted," Ali assured.

He highlighted improvements in the birth and death certificate services, now managed through a central server, and vowed to ensure the efficient delivery of trade licenses and other services.

Ali also warned that any deliberate obstruction by officials in providing these services would result in legal action.

They urged he government to take a definitive stance on issues like equal inheritance rights and enforce international laws that address discrimination in family, guardianship, and citizenship matters.

There were also calls to withdraw the state's reservations on these issues and to support ILO Convention 190 on violence and harassment in the workplace, among other international regulations.

The meeting also emphasised the need for a societal shift to combat violence against women effectively, arguing that focusing solely on empowerment is insufficient.

Leaders called for a thorough investigation into the disappearances and deaths of women such as Kalpana Chakma, Tonu, Munia, Runi, and Nusrat, and demanded accountability for those responsible.

Dr Fahmida Khatun, executive director of the Centre for Policy Dialogue, proposed increasing the budget allocation for women and enhancing monitoring of expenditures.

She pointed out that while many banks have programmes claiming to support women, their effectiveness is limited, and women face significant challenges in accessing finance.

She also suggested economically recognising women's unpaid work through a satellite system of accounts.

Naripokkho advocated for reforms across various sectors, including infrastructure, politics, civil rights, and laws.

They proposed political reforms that include providing women with opportunities to express their views within and outside political parties, suggesting that 50 percent of candidates on each party's election list should be women.

They also recommended introducing a "no vote" option on ballots.

For legal reforms, they recommended updating laws to prevent rape, revising the Evidence Act, and including informal sector female workers in labour laws.

They also called for judicial reforms through the Judicial Reform Commission to prevent past mistakes.

Additionally, the meeting discussed appointing qualified individuals to the Bangladesh Shilpakala Academy.

They also demanded consultation of relevant stakeholders on decisions affecting the Chittagong Hill Tracts.

There were also calls to protect NGOs from harassment by the NGO Bureau under party-based governance.

to avoid being present.

Among them are DMP additional commissioner AKM Hafiz Akter, former DB chief Harun Or Rashid, DMP joint commissioner Biplob Kumar Sarker, PHQ additional IG Anowar Hossain, additional IG Atikul Islam, and additional IG Devdas Bhattacharjee.

Also, a section of non-cadre police officials has been calling for a work abstention from today, protesting the countrywide cases filed against policemen.

However, terming it illogical, a high official from Police Headquarters, said, "These officials, who were beneficiaries of the last government, are trying to create instability."

Several officials of the rank of superintendent of police said, there is panic among the officials about whether they could be "politically victimised" as they had good postings during the last government's tenure.

Although many have joined their workplaces, however, they have become cornered there. For this, no operational activities have been started by police yet, they added.

TOP COPS UNDER ACC SCANNER

ACC sources said while they are yet to finalise the list of the top police officials to be investigated, it can be confirmed that the list includes former IGP Benazir Ahmed, former DMP commissioners Asaduzzaman Miah, Shafiqul Islam, and Khandaker Faruq Hossain.

The list also includes former PBI chief Banaj Kumar Majumder, former Special Branch chief Monirul Islam, additional IG YM Belalur Rahman, Industrial Police chief Mahbubur Rahman, former RAB director general Harun Ar Rashid, former CID chief Mohammad Ali Miah, additional IG Devdas Bhattacharya, Khandaker Lutful Kabir, former Chattrogram Metropolitan Police commissioner Krishna Pada Roy, and Tourist police additional IG Meer Rezaul Alam, PHQ additional IG Anowar Hossain, DMP additional commissioner AKM Hafiz Akter and Kh Mahid Uddin, Rangpur Range former DIG Abdul Baten, retired CID DIG Sheikh Nazmul Alam, Rangpur Range former commissioner Md Moniruzzaman, PHQ DIG Joydeb Bhattacharjee, DMP CTTC chief Md Asaduzzaman, DMP joint commissioner Biplob Kumar Sarker, and Subrata Kumar Halder.

A high official of ACC's intelligence wing said they have so far started investigation against three police officers of BCS 12 batch, 10 officers of 15 batch, seven officers of 17 batch, four officers of 18 batch, 21 officers of 20 batch, 12 officers of 21 batch, four officers of 22 batch, eight officers of 24 batch, and 10 officers of BCS 25 batch.

the order of the court as blatant examples of the culture of lawlessness during the AL regime.

Tania hoped that by ensuring justice for Munia, the culture of impunity in the country will stop.

She expressed her frustration at not being able to meet former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, despite repeated attempts. Tania said she even wrote a 26-page letter and sent it to her several times.

M Sarwar Hossain, Tania's lawyer, said officials of the home ministry wing that supervises sensational murder cases, police, and the court were influenced by bribes.

The lawyer also alleged that former law minister Anisul Huq, currently on remand in a murder case, played a key role in the cover-up.

"Why didn't the investigation officer arrest Anvir... and why didn't collect DNA samples from Anvir and match them with those found on Munia's body?" he asked.

Tania alleged that Anvir had offered her bribes, through intermediaries, of Tk 20 crore to drop the case.

The 21-year-old college student was found dead at a Gulshan flat in April, 2021.

Tania later filed a case at Gulshan Police Station against Anvir, accusing him of instigating the victim's death by suicide.

On August 18, 2021, Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Rajesh Chowdhury cleared Anvir of the charges, following a police report.

On September 6, 2021, Tania filed a case with the Women and Children Repression Prevention Tribunal-8 of Dhaka, bringing allegations of rape and murder, where Ahmed Akbar Sobhan alias Shah Alam, chairman of Bashundhara Group, and six others were also accused. On September 29, the High Court refused to grant bail to Anvir.

On October 19, 2022, PBI submitted a probe report clearing all the accused of the charges.

After the rape and murder case was filed, Bashundhara Group, in a statement, said the group's chairman, managing director, and any other family members were not involved in the incident, and claimed the case was "conspiratorial" and "baseless".

BLAST condemns remands

BLAST condemned these practices, stating they violate constitutional rights, including equality before the law (Article 27), protection of law (Article 31), the right to life and personal liberty (Article 32), safeguards against arbitrary arrest and detention (Article 33), and protections during trial and punishment (Article 35).

The organisation emphasised that these actions contradict the Supreme Court's landmark judgement, which provides clear instructions to law enforcement agencies and magistrates on the proper procedures for arrests and remands.

Referencing the Supreme Court's verdict, BLAST pointed out that law enforcement officers must notify the nearest kin of the arrested individual in writing within 12 hours of the arrest. Additionally, under Section 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code (CrPC), a specific case must be filed against the arrested person before they can be taken on remand, into custody, or sent to judicial custody.

BLAST also reminded law enforcement officers to disclose their identity during an arrest and to present their identification upon request. If the arrested person has any injuries, the arresting officer is required to document the details, arrange for medical treatment, and obtain a certificate from the attending physician. Furthermore, the arrested individual must be allowed to consult with a lawyer of their choice or meet with family members.

The organisation also underscored the provisions in Chapter 6.6 of the Bangladesh Police's "Criminal Investigation Guidelines," which mandate that police must adhere to international norms when arresting women, ensuring their dignity and privacy are protected during investigations.

In light of these concerns, BLAST urged immediate action to safeguard justice and ensure that constitutional rights and Supreme Court directives are upheld during the arrest and remand of individuals.

term was extended seven times before he resigned.

He faces allegations of violating regulations in his reappointment.

Additionally, Taqsem and others were under investigation for irregularities and corruption in various projects, including embezzling Tk 1,100 crore in Padma-Jashaldia project, embezzling Tk 1,000 crore in Gandharbpur Water Treatment Plant project, Tk 1,000 crore in Dasherkandi Sewage Treatment Plant project, and Tk 50 crore in Gulshan-Baridhara Lake Pollution Control Project.

Further allegations include inflating project costs, colluding in contractor appointments, accepting bribes, showing favouritism in contractual appointments, and transferring disfavoured employees to OSD positions.

ACC formed a committee on Monday to probe the allegations. The committee, led by Assistant Director Mahbubul Alam, has been instructed to obtain necessary information from the Local Government Ministry by August 28.

The letter to the ministry requests verified photocopies of Taqsem's appointment letters, advertisements, experience documents, job term extensions, and relevant records. It also seeks any reports or actions taken regarding past allegations of irregularities.

ACC has also imposed a travel ban on Taqsem. A letter in this regard was sent to the Special Police Superintendent (Immigration) on Monday.

In May 2023, ACC recommended filing a case against Taqsem and nine others for illegally appointing favoured individuals outside DWasa's organisational structure and paying them Tk 1.98 crore in salaries from April 4, 2018, to August 2022.

Although the case was not approved previously due to Taqseem's influence, a new recommendation for filing the case is now under consideration.

ACC Secretary Khorsheda Yasmin confirmed the development.

"The board agreed to give us 2.3 times more than the pay scale and formed a committee to discuss the dues with the finance ministry. So, we decided to end our work abstention from today[yesterday]," one of the employees said.

Meanwhile, Md Ehsanul Haque, senior secretary of the roads and highways department, visited the Secretariat Metro Rail Station yesterday and directed officials to resume operations as soon as possible.

Metro rail services have been suspended since July 18 after the Mirpur-10 and Kazipara stations were vandalised during the quota protests. After fall of the Hasina-led government on August 5, the interim government instructed DMTCL to resume services by August 17, except at the vandalised stations. However, DMTCL announced delays due to an "unavoidable situation," later revealed to be a work abstention by around 700 employees from grades 10 to 20, who began striking on August 6, demanding a pay hike to match their higher-grade colleagues.

findings, the highest number of deaths occurred on August 5, with 205 fatalities, followed by 130 on August 4 and 119 on July 19.

Of the deceased, 455 were shot to death, 79 were burned to death, while 78 others were beaten to death, the rights body claimed.

HRSS demanded that the government issue a public notice seeking information from people to create a list of those killed.

HRSS also demanded the formation of an independent commission to ensure justice for previous incidents of extrajudicial killings and enforced disappearances.

It also demanded identifying the false cases filed beforehand and taking steps to withdraw those in the quickest time possible.

ACC restarts probe against Taqsem

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Anti-Corruption Commission has reinitiated an investigation against Taqsem A Khan, former managing director of Dhaka Wasa, on charges of corruption.

The investigation has been prompted by at least five major allegations against him -- corruption regarding his own appointment, favouritism in contractual appointments, corruption in major projects, collusion in contractor appointments, and embezzlement and laundering of thousands of crores of taka.

Previously, ACC had investigated these allegations and found them credible, leading to recommendations for filing cases. However, Taqsem used his influence to suppress these investigations.

Following Sheikh Hasina's fall on August 5, Taqsem resigned from his position on August 14. After his resignation, the ACC has refocused on his alleged irregularities and corruption.

According to ACC, Taqsem was appointed as Wasa MD in 2009 and his

DHAKA UNIVERSITY

Students, teachers call for non-partisan VC

SIRAJUL ISLAM RUBEL

With growing calls for reform across various sectors, a section of Dhaka University students is advocating for a vice-chancellor who is professional, academically distinguished, visionary, and has no direct affiliation with any political parties.

The demand has not only been made by students and teachers, but the university's alumni as well as leaders of some student organisations.

After some teachers' names surfaced as potential candidates to become the next DU VC, widespread discussions have sparked everywhere, as well as on social media.

"I understand that negotiations are ongoing for the VC post. But I do not accept the process of appointing VC through political considerations," said Shakibur Rahman, a student of Physics department.

Rifat Ahmed, another DU student, said, "We all realised the importance of a student-friendly VC during the protests. If the then VC sir had not allowed law enforcers to enter the campus that day and emptied the halls, they couldn't have harmed us."

Salman Siddiqui, a DU student and president of Samajtantrik Chhatra Front, said, "We want to see the kind of VC who will work in the interests of students and teachers, not political parties. Someone with academic excellence, who stands by the oppressed."

Raquibuddin Ahmed, former president of Dhaka University Alumni Association, said, "The time is perfect for a reform. As an alumnus of the university, I hope the VC position goes to a teacher who possesses a good personality, is academically sound, student-friendly, and most importantly, is politically neutral."

During the Awami League regime, teachers loyal to the party were appointed as VCs across the universities, and in many cases, those VCs were seen prioritising party interests over that of students'.

With the VCs holding the highest power in universities, the former government appointed people loyal to the party everywhere -- from teachers to hall provosts to administrative officials -- establishing a culture of partisanship.

In many cases, party lobbying and politics were prioritised for promoting teachers.

Dhaka University currently has around 2,000 teachers, and over 800 of them belong to the blue panel, the pro-AL teachers' organisation.

Meanwhile, around 300 teachers belong to the white panel, pro-BNP teachers' organisation.

Prof Lutfar Rahman, convenor of the white panel, said, "The students' demands are reasonable. However, no one is politically neutral. The university has to be run with many considerations in mind...," he added.

Meanwhile, the University Teachers' Network on Monday proposed ending political dominance and ensuring academic and administrative accountability within universities.

They urged the government to be accommodating and to allow universities to operate autonomously, without any form of political interference.

ACC to probe two staffers of ex-PM

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Anti-Corruption Commission has launched investigation into allegations of corruption, irregularities and amassing wealth illegally against two staffers of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina.

They are: her former deputy press secretary Ashraful Alam Khokon, and former personal assistant (peon) Md Jahangir Alam.

The ACC made the decision in a meeting held at its headquarters yesterday, its press relations office confirmed.

According to ACC sources, Khokon holds dual citizenship in Bangladesh and the US, and allegedly owns a significant amount of assets, both in his name and under aliases.

Information about four private cars registered in his name has already surfaced.

In February 2021, Khokon stepped down from his position as deputy press secretary to the then premier.

On the other hand, Jahangir worked as Sheikh Hasina's personal employee after she became prime minister in 2009. He, however, introduced himself as Hasina's personal assistant, carried a licensed pistol, and went on to amass wealth worth millions in Dhaka and Noakhali through different schemes.

Ex-AL MP Bodi arrested in Ctg

STAR REPORT

Former Awami League lawmaker Abdur Rahman Bodi has been arrested by a team of Rapid Action Battalion.

A Rab team arrested Bodi, a former MP of Cox's Bazar-4 constituency, in Panchlaish of Chattogram last night, said officials from Rab legal and media wing.

He was arrested in an attempted murder case filed with Teknaf Police Station.

On May 3, 2024, Bodi was accused of shooting at a chairman aspirant ahead of the Teknaf Upazila Parishad polls. The incident allegedly took place in Moheshkhali Para area of Whykong union.

On August 16 this year, a case was filed against Bodi, and 32 others on charges of vandalism, looting and attack on businesses in Teknaf. Bodi was named as the "kingpin" of yaba trafficking on the list prepared by the Department of Narcotics Control.

826 looted arms recovered

UNB, Dhaka

Law enforcers have recovered 826 arms looted in recent times from police stations, police lines, police outposts and other places, till Monday.

Police headquarters shared this information yesterday afternoon.

Moreover, a total of 20,778 rounds of bullets, 1,482 tear gas shells, 71 sound grenades have been recovered till date, it said.

A large number of arms and ammunition were looted from the police stations and other protected zones after law enforcers were attacked before and after August 5. Members of the Bangladesh Army have also been working to recover the looted arms across the country.

UN team flies in tomorrow

According to a primary report of the UN Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights published on August 16, between July 16 and August 11, 650 people were killed in Bangladesh during the student-led protests and after the fall of the Awami League regime on August 5.

Of these, nearly 400 deaths were reported from July 16 to August 4, while around 250 people were reportedly killed following the ouster of the AL-led government on August 5 and 6, says the report.

The reported death toll is likely an underestimation, as information collection has been hindered by restrictions on movement due to the curfew and the internet shutdown, it says.

The report further says that the number of reported killings in revenge attacks since August 5 still remains to be determined. Those killed include protesters, bystanders, journalists covering the events and a number of members of the security forces, the OHCHR said.

Thousands of protesters and bystanders have been injured, with hospitals overwhelmed by the influx of patients. The majority of deaths and injuries have been attributed to the security forces and the student wing affiliated with the Awami League.

Also, there were a series of attacks on the minorities, including looting and vandalising of properties, places of worship and houses.

During a greet and meet event with the foreign diplomats and international aid agencies on August 18, Chief Adviser to the Interim Government Dr Muhammad Yunus also welcomed the UN proposal of deploying a fact-finding mission, saying the government wants an independent and impartial probe.

"All human rights violations that occurred between July 1 and August 15 will come under the purview of the investigation. However, both the UN and Bangladesh government will need to sign an agreement on the scope of investigation," the UN official said.

The agreement on the framework of the investigation will include the UN experts' access to meet the people they want, obtain documents required for the investigation and the government's commitment not to harass witnesses etc.

Based on the agreement, UN's independent fact-finding mission comprising of five respected legal experts will come to Bangladesh after one or two weeks.

"They will talk to the victims, review videos of rights violation, talk to the government officials, witnesses and whoever they need," the UN official said.

The mission will need six to eight weeks for the investigation and then submit a report including recommendations to the government.

The names of the witnesses or those accused of violence will not, however, be mentioned in the public documents of the fact-finding mission. If the government wants the names of the witnesses or those responsible for the violence, it will provide those to the government for prosecution, UN official added.

The report will put forward recommendations for the government in the prosecution process. If the government wants UN support for prosecution, including in capacity and technical expertise, evidence and even observations, it can extend the support.

"This will depend on the desire of the government," the official added.

A foreign ministry official said the UN mission may also recommend measures for reforms to the law enforcers.

Remaining HSC exams cancelled in face of protest

They said many of their classmates would not be able to sit for the tests because of injuries they received during the mass uprising that ousted the Sheikh Hasina-led government on August 5.

They demanded cancellation of the tests and urged the authorities to determine the scores of the cancelled exams based on the results they obtained in the corresponding SSC tests of each student.

Prof Tapan Kumar Sarkar, head of the Inter-Education Board Coordination Committee, said in a statement that the decision to cancel the exams was made due to "unavoidable circumstances".

He told reporters at the Secretariat that officials had yet to decide how the results would be determined.

The cancelled tests were scheduled to begin from September 11.

In the morning, Adviser Wahiduddin decided at a meeting that the HSC exams would be postponed for two more weeks and be held with half the usual number of questions.

On Monday, students demonstrated in front of Dhaka Education Board.

The HSC and equivalent exams began on June 30 across all education boards except Sylhet, where exams started later due to flooding. After eight days, the exams were postponed amid student protests across the country.

The exams were further delayed after questions papers stored at various police stations were burnt.

On August 15, authorities announced that the remaining HSC exams would resume on September 11 and were expected to conclude by October 8.

In 2020, HSC and equivalent exams were cancelled due to the Covid-19 pandemic. Students received results based on their SSC and JSC scores.

'Captors kept watch on my family'

of a Bangladeshi intelligence agency.

"They repeatedly enquired why I wrote anti-government articles on international online platforms," said Maroof.

While being held, Maroof realised that he was in a cantonment area and those carrying out duties there were from the Directorate General of Forces Intelligence (DGFI).

He got some clues such as a water bottle marked "Sena", medications, and a copy of the Holy Quran with military references.

"After I finished one bottle of water, they [captors] gave me another one with the label 'Sena'. The medicine they gave me had 'Defence Medicine, Trading Prohibited' written on the strips.

"When I requested a Quran from the person who looked after the detainees, he handed me one, which had 'Section Headquarters Library' stamped inside.

"They used the term 'Boro Bhai' to refer to senior officials for confidentiality," he said.

Maroof said he once heard someone outside his room loudly saying -- "Guard, Sabdhan".

He also heard planes and trains quite often early in the morning.

During an interrogation, interrogators hit him in the face.

"My mouth started bleeding and my teeth were damaged. They also struck me with sticks, injuring my hands and legs. They did not provide any medical treatment."

He also learned that his captors had been keeping track of his family's activities.

"One day, an officer told me that my daughter was at a restaurant on Dhanmondi-27. He said she had enrolled in a private university."

Throughout his captivity, he suffered from various ailments, including skin conditions, a hand ligament injury, and mouth sores.

Maroof's ordeal finally ended on March 16, 2019.

"I was asleep in my room when a man awakened me around 1:00am. They took me to an interrogation room and warned me not to reveal anything about the last 15 months," he recounted.

His captors returned his clothes but kept his laptops. They then drove him to near his house in Dhanmondi around 2:00am, and instructed him not to look back.

Maroof resigned as captain from Bangladesh Army in 1982. He was sent into forced retirement as an ambassador in 2013.

The former diplomat demanded formation of a commission to investigate all the incidents of enforced disappearance that occurred over the last 15 years.

'They didn't even let me drop off the milk for my child'

His captors wanted Firoz to record a statement claiming that union leaders accepted money from Grameen Telecom officials to convince workers to drop their cases.

When Firoz revealed his harrowing experience at the "Aynaghar" to The Daily Star on Monday, he said he could not open up until now for fear of reprisals and only found his voice after the Hasina-led government fell on August 5.

'HOUSE OF MIRRORS'

After Firoz was brought to his cell at the "Aynaghar", his blindfolds were removed.

His cell was very narrow. It was 3 feet wide and 6-7 feet long. Concrete walls surrounded him on three sides, and a locked iron gate led to a corridor.

"The cell was empty except for a light bulb, a fan, a water bottle, and a blanket."

Firoz said no light, sound, or air from outside reached his cell.

"The bulb was always on, and there were fans outside my cell, which were very loud. Whenever I needed to use the toilet, I had to raise my hand, and a guard would arrive. I assume they monitored me 24 hours through CCTV."

The only time he didn't have a blindfold on was when he went to the toilet and when he was inside his cell.

"I couldn't tell day from night. I didn't even hear the azaan (call to prayer). I could only tell it was morning when they brought me breakfast."

THE TORTURE

Firoz was subjected to intense interrogation and physical and mental torture.

"They beat me badly with sticks from my waist down and tortured me with electric shocks, strapping me to a steel chair and tying my hands."

They threatened that if he didn't comply with their request, his family members would be picked up and tortured as well.

"I kept thinking I would be killed any day or never see my family again."

HANDOVER TO COPS

After seven days of torture, Firoz was handed over to the DMP's Detective Branch (DB) in the early hours of July 6.

There, he came across his colleague Kamruzzaman, 39, the union president, who had also remained in detention during the same period as Firoz and underwent similar experiences.

The two were then shown arrested in a case filed over allegations of fraud and embezzlement by another union leader and subsequently placed on remand for seven days.

During the 7-day interrogation, Firoz and Kamruzzaman were forced to memorise a script, intended to serve as their confessional statement.

"A copy of the text was submitted to the court, which recorded it as my confessional statement."

Every time his lawyer requested bail in court, the court rejected it.

He was finally granted bail in April 2023 after spending nine months in jail. Even then, he continued to feel a lingering sense of insecurity and anxiety.

'It felt like living in a grave' incident, he endured heightened psychological torture and was denied proper meals for a while.

"They often served me curry that was either too salty or excessively spicy. I survived on just rice for a whole month, which led to noticeable weight loss," he said.

The psychological torment became so intolerable that Mikel begged the supervisor to end his life instead of prolonging his suffering.

"When I fell sick during the last Ramadan, doctors told them that I needed care. They then started providing proper meals."

Talking about the secret prison, the UPDF leader said the rooms would be about 77 to 96 square feet in size and contain a small bed, either iron or wooden, measuring three by seven feet.

He said there were other detainees in those detention centres, but they hardly had any interaction with each other.

During his captivity, Mikel shared a room with two other prisoners -- Saidur from Rangpur and Ershad from Kochukhet in Dhaka -- at different times. He also found out about two more prisoners in adjacent cells through overhearing discussions. However, he has no idea about their fate.

Upon hearing that Saidur would be moved to another secret prison, Mikel had Saidur memorise his sister's phone number. But he later realised that he had given Saidur the wrong last digit.

He also said that he caught glimpses of some other detainees of different ages while being taken to the washroom.

Accusing state forces of abducting him, Mikel demanded those responsible for stealing five valuable years of his life be brought to book.

He said he would take legal action following his recovery from illness.

HK press freedom sinks to record low

Says journo survey

AFP, Hong Kong

Hong Kong journalists rated the city's press freedom lower than ever in an annual survey released yesterday, citing fears of sweeping national security laws.

Published every year since 2013 by the Hong Kong Journalists Association (HKJA) and the Hong Kong Public Opinion Research Institute (HKPORI), the Press Freedom Index ranks the city's media environment on a zero-to-100 scale -- 100 being a perfect score.

It is based on a poll of over 250 working journalists and around 1,000 members of the public.

More than 90 percent of the surveyed journalists said the city's press freedom was "significantly" impacted by a new security law enacted in March which punishes crimes like espionage and foreign interference.

INDIA LANDSLIDE

Teesta dam power station damaged

THE HINDU ONLINE

A landslide damaged six houses and a building of the National Hydroelectric Power Corporation (NHPC) at the site of its Teesta-V hydropower station in Sikkim's Gangtok yesterday.

The power station, damaged by the glacial lake outburst flood (GLOF) in October 2023, has been under construction. Officials said the incident occurred at about 7:30 am at Balutar, the site of the 510 MW Teesta Stage V project.

"The landslide damaged a structure they (the NHPC) call the GIS building, and six houses, whose occupants were evacuated to safety. The Singtam-Dikchu Road was cut off but an alternative passage has been cleared for communication," Gangtok District Collector Tushar G. Nikhare told The Hindu.

Biden passes baton to Kamala Harris

Says she will be a 'historic president' of US

REUTERS, Chicago

President Joe Biden cemented the Democratic Party's elevation of Kamala Harris to lead the fight for the White House against Republican Donald Trump with a convention speech on Monday evening that praised his vice president as the best hope for preserving American democracy.

Biden took center stage on opening night of the Democratic National Convention, drawing an extended standing ovation from the party faithful and delivering a farewell speech to the party he has served for half a century - even with five months left in office.

Wiping away tears after being introduced by his daughter Ashley, Biden waved to the crowd that held signs saying, "We (heart) Biden." Beaming, he responded, "I love YOU."

"Are you ready to vote for freedom? Are you ready to vote for democracy and for America? Let me ask you, are you ready to elect Kamala Harris and Tim Walz?" Biden said, adding that she will be a "historic president". Taking multiple swipes at Trump, Biden promised to be the "best volunteer" Harris and Minnesota Governor Walz, her vice presidential running mate, had ever seen.

Biden's address in Chicago kicked off a four-day event fueled by enthusiasm for Harris and relief that Biden abandoned his own reelection bid and endorsed her to replace him. d Trump for calling the United States a failing nation. "He's the loser," Biden said with fervour.

ISRAELI POSITIONS

Hezbollah fires 'rocket barrages'

AFP, Beirut

Lebanon's Iran-backed Hezbollah group said it launched several rocket salvos at Israeli army positions in the annexed Golan Heights yesterday "in response" to Israeli strikes on eastern Lebanon the previous day.

Hezbollah fighters launched "intense rocket barrages" at two Israeli army positions in the occupied Golan Heights "in response to the Israeli enemy's attack on the Bekaa" Valley -- which a source close to Hezbollah said targeted weapons depots in the eastern region.

The Israeli military confirmed that around 55 projectiles were identified crossing from Lebanese territory. "Some of the projectiles were intercepted," the military said in a statement.

Tigers take on Pakistan on the game in the right frame of mind.

"Everyone went through a tough time in the last few days, it's really sad. Everyone struggled. No one really wishes for it. Also there is no way to live in the past, we have to move forward. But it was a tough time for everyone, every family. Hopefully, we will have better days ahead. And as players, we want to play our game with the right mind," Shanto said.

Both teams are playing their first series since the T20 World Cup. A few from the Tigers' squad have come off the back of franchise duties. Thus, the Tigers will have to get the drift of red-ball cricket early in the match in order to have hope of staging a fight. Test series against Pakistan has however not been kind for Bangladesh as they have managed just one draw in 13 Tests, losing 12.

The onus will be on the batters in terms of how they handle Pakistan's quality pace attack as Rawalpindi Test provides another test of mentality.

AL govt leaves behind

Dhaka University economics professor Dr Selim Raihan cited the government's failure to mobilise domestic resources to increase public expenditure as one of the key factors behind the rise in debt.

"The government failed to increase the revenue collection over the past one decade or so," said Selim, who is also the executive director of the South Asian Network on Economic Modeling (SANEM).

The second is corruption in activities surrounding the process of taking loans, especially for mega projects with foreign funds, he said.

"A group with vested interests exploited the foreign loan-based mega projects by massively increasing the costs multiple times."

As a developing nation, Bangladesh has to take loans, but the Hasina government had a tendency to take short-term loans as well as high-interest loans while the focus should have been on low-interest and long-term loans with favourable conditions.

This tendency grew over the years. Loans from single sources increased while borrowing from multilateral sources with more accountability and transparency was minimal.

Bangladesh's debt service-to-revenue ratio is projected to cross the 100 percent mark for the first time owing to rising loans and lower tax and export receipts, highlighting the growing risk to the country's capacity to repay.

The debt service-to-revenue and grants ratio stood at 58.7 percent in FY21 but it surged to 72 percent in FY22 and stood at 71.8 percent in FY23, according to the International Monetary Fund (IMF).

The ratio is projected to grow to 101.1 percent in the current financial year.

Debt service is defined as the sum of interest and amortisation of medium, long, and short-term debt.

"The increasing debt service-to-revenue ratio highlights the urgency of mobilising tax revenue to support much-needed spending to achieve pro-poor, green growth recovery," the IMF said in a report.

The ratio increased as the NBR missed its tax target for the 11th consecutive year in FY23, in the face of slowing growth of collections amidst economic slowdowns and ambitious goals set by the government.

The debt-to-GDP ratio of Bangladesh was forecast to cross 40 percent in the current fiscal year as the government continued to borrow to bankroll its expenditures amid the low collection of revenue.

It was 39.8 percent in FY23 and is forecast to be 41.41 percent at the end of FY24, according to a fiscal monitoring report of the IMF.

In the last decade, the debt-to-GDP ratio rose by 13 percentage points. The IMF forecast that the ratio would reach 43.5 percent in 2028-29.

Mpox not the new Covid

Says WHO official

REUTERS, Berlin

A World Health Organization official stressed yesterday that mpox, regardless of whether it is the new or old strain, is not the new Covid, as authorities know how to control its spread.

"We can and must tackle mpox together," said Hans Kluge, WHO regional director for Europe, in a UN media briefing. "So will we choose to put the systems in place to control and eliminate mpox globally? Or we will enter another cycle of panic and neglect? How we respond now and in the years to come will prove a critical test for Europe and the world," he added.

Mpox, a viral infection that causes pus-filled lesions and flu-like symptoms, is usually mild but can kill.

The clade 1b variety has caused global concern because it seems to spread more easily though routine close contact.

A case of the variant was confirmed last week in Sweden and linked to a growing outbreak in Africa, the first sign of its spread outside the continent. The WHO declared the recent outbreak of the disease a public health emergency of international concern after the new variant was identified.

Kluge said that the focus on the new clade 1 strain will also help in the fight against the less severe clade 2 variety that has spreading globally since 2022, allowing Europe to improve its response through better health advice and surveillance.

Iran cyber ops targeted Trump, Harris campaigns

REUTERS, Washington

The United States on Monday accused Iran of launching cyber operations against the campaigns of both US presidential candidates and targeting the American public with influence operations aimed at fanning political discord.

"We have observed increasingly aggressive Iranian activity during this election cycle," said a statement by the FBI, the Office of the Director of National Intelligence and the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency, which oversees the defense of government computer systems.

The statement confirmed charges made earlier this month by the campaign of Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump that Iran hacked one of its websites, triggering an FBI investigation. At that time, Trump said Iran was "only able to get publicly available information."

RAPE, MURDER OF DOCTOR

India SC orders medical safety task force

AFP, New Delhi

JUSTICE
JUSTICE DE

India's Supreme Court yesterday ordered a national task force to examine how to bolster security for health care workers after the "horrific" rape and murder of a doctor sparked medical strikes and furious protests.

The discovery of the 31-year-old doctor's bloodied body at a state-run hospital in the eastern city of Kolkata on August 9 has stoked nationwide anger at the chronic issue of violence against women.

Doctors' associations from government-run hospitals in many cities across India have launched multiple strikes that cut non-essential services, with protests in their second week.

Demonstrators marched through Kolkata yesterday, holding up signs demanding "justice", while the country's top court issued orders in the capital New Delhi. "The brutality of the sexual assault and the nature of the crime have shocked the conscience of the nation," the three-judge bench said in its order, calling the details "horrific".

on the interim government to ensure full protection of all citizens, and in particular, of minorities.

"I also strongly urge you to ensure the well-being of Rohingya refugees, especially in view of the deteriorating situation in Myanmar," he wrote.

Stating that Bangladesh stands at a crucial juncture in history, the UN chief said the UN fully supports the efforts of the interim government for an inclusive and prosperous country and remains committed to working with the interim government.

Yunus may attend UNGA

the governments of some of the member countries, including Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi, sources said.

This will be the first foreign visit for Prof Yunus as head of the interim government. He assumed this role on August 8, three days after the fall of the Awami League regime.

An official of the Chief Adviser's Office said the chief adviser is also likely to attend the UN General Assembly in New York. UNGA is scheduled to be held between on September 10 and 24.

"The date for the visit of the chief adviser to the UN General Assembly is yet to be fixed," the official told the Daily Star yesterday.

Bangladesh will be the next chair of the Bimstec -- the Bay of Bengal Initiative for Multi-Sectoral Technical and Economic Cooperation -- comprised of Bangladesh, Bhutan, India, Myanmar, Nepal, Sri Lanka, and Thailand.

The official and ministerial meetings of the group will take place from September 1-3 before the summit.

As the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (Saarc) remains largely inactive, India has put Bimstec at the centre of its neighbourhood diplomacy.

An official of Bimstec Secretariat in Dhaka said they are working to sign at least four agreements including maritime transport cooperation during the summit.

The maritime transport agreement would include every aspect of maritime connectivity among the Bimstec member countries. The details of the agreement will be shared once the member states sign the document, he said.

Bimstec adapted its charter on May 20 this year, 27 years after the founding of the regional body.

We need a strong banking commission

But its goals must be clearly defined and regularly scrutinised

We welcome the interim government's decision to form a banking commission to implement sustainable reforms in the sector. The formation of such a body has been a longstanding demand from economists, as the sector has suffered massive problems and regulatory failures for years, particularly under the Awami League regime. In 2009, when the party took office, non-performing loans (NPLs) in banks totalled Tk 22,480 crore. By March 2024, NPLs skyrocketed to around Tk 1,82,000 crore. The number would be even higher if not for the accounting frauds committed under the past regime to conceal the true picture.

Over the years, experts have underscored various institutional challenges plaguing the sector, including questionable appointment practices for bank directors, loans being granted and rescheduled ad infinitum, weak internal controls, writing off of loans for dubious reasons, etc. Regulatory weaknesses—such as the lack of independence of the central bank, political influence of habitual loan defaulters, arbitrary issuance of bank licenses, and the quasi-monopolistic power granted to a few banking oligarchs—have allowed these irregularities to occur unabated.

As a result of high NPLs, the fiscal flexibility of banks has also been seriously constrained. This has had numerous spillover effects both on the health of the banks and the overall economy. Given these realities, the country urgently needs a commission to unearth the true extent of the damage done to the sector. Without such an effort to bring transparency to the sector, it will be difficult to determine the necessary remedial solutions for it.

However, in establishing such a commission, its objectives should be clearly defined, as experts have suggested. These may include ensuring full transparency in the commission's operations, identifying the root causes that have led to the current banking problems and future challenges, determining which groups and institutions are responsible for these issues, and providing specific, actionable recommendations for reforms in the short to medium term. Moreover, the interim government should also establish a clear roadmap outlining when and how the commission's suggestions will be implemented.

To ensure that the commission is able to play its desired role, its members should not only be highly competent, experienced, and honest, but they should also engage with different stakeholders to gather their input. Regarding transparency, it is encouraging that the interim government plans to prepare and publish a report on the overall situation of the financial sector and a roadmap for reforms within the first 100 days of its tenure. However, once the commission is established, it should also provide regular updates on its progress to restore confidence in the banking sector. Additionally, to ensure its long-term health, it must be guaranteed that the commission can carry out its work without any external interference in the future.

Local govt appointees must show integrity

They should ensure smooth delivery of public services

We welcome the interim government's move to appoint administrators at city corporations and all other tiers of local government, filling a vacuum created by the large-scale abstention, desertion, and eventual termination of mostly Awami League-linked public representatives. The decision comes amid concerns over the lack of leadership in these vital institutions and resultant disruptions in public services. However, we must acknowledge that this is but a temporary measure that may not resolve all longstanding grievances surrounding these bodies.

According to a report by this daily, the government got rid of the mayors of all 12 city corporations and 330 municipalities; 61 zilla parishad chairmen; 493 out of 495 upazila parishad chairmen; and 988 vice-chairmen and women vice-chairmen at upazila parishads. Instead, additional secretaries and divisional commissioners have been put in charge of the city corporations, and additional deputy commissioners and assistant commissioners (land) in charge of the municipalities. Deputy commissioners (DCs) will run 53 zilla parishads, while divisional commissioners will run the Dhaka, Chattogram, Rajshahi, Khulna, Sylhet, Mymensingh, Rangpur, and Barishal zilla parishads. Meanwhile, UNOs will run the 395 upazila parishads. These appointees, as government officials, should already be familiar with the modus operandi of local government bodies, and thus must prioritise the areas requiring immediate attention.

For example, in cities and municipalities, dengue control is a priority at the moment. At the same time, activities that have been suspended because of the recent unrest should be resumed on an urgent basis. For instance, Chattogram city has been struggling with waterlogging because drains have not been cleaned for almost a month. The divisional commissioner of Chattogram should address this immediately and bring respite for the city dwellers. As the LGRD adviser mentioned during an interaction with reporters, the administrators at the local levels would ensure that daily activities such as birth and death registration or implementation of Food for Work projects are not disrupted. However, we must remember that UNO or DC offices are not as accessible to villagers as that of elected representatives. Government offices also have a reputation for slow service delivery. Care must be taken so that the appointment of administrators does not lead to lengthy project implementation or sluggish services.

The government must also be mindful that the delegation of authority to administrators does not create any conflict of power among various ranks of executives, as witnessed recently in civil and police administrations. We hope that government officials, entrusted with the power to work independently of public representatives, will be accountable to the public and ensure transparency in their dealings with public funds.

Our transitional political settlement and ways forward

Dr Mushtaq Khan
is a professor of economics at SOAS University of London.

MUSHTAQ KHAN

The sham election of January 2024 was a turning point for Bangladesh. In my research and teaching roles, I began to observe young people openly saying that only violence can remove the shoirachari party. If that feeling becomes widespread, all it needs is a spark. When the one-point demand emerged out of the repression of students, the mass uprising that followed was not really a surprise. The students announced the government would fall in July. They also announced, as only students can, that July would be extended if necessary. July only needed to be extended to the 36th before the regime collapsed in a bloodbath. What can we do to consolidate this hugely costly achievement?

In my view, a useful way of thinking about a social order is as a political settlement—a description of the power, capabilities and interests of the organisations in a society. Organisations and their interactions deliver the social, political and economic outcomes of a society. This social structure is ultimately held together by a distribution of power. A political consensus can support this distribution of power, or challenge it, but it cannot sustain a social order on its own. In developing countries in particular, power is partially reproduced through many rules that are informal, involving corruption, clientelism and patronage. If these informal "rules" or institutions cannot be blocked by other organisations, they are part of the political settlement. Societies, therefore, differ greatly in terms of how power is reproduced, who benefits, and the path of development. But in every case, the rules that are followed or violated depend on the power and interests of competing organisations.

New laws or even constitutions will not change the political settlement if the rules are not followed. Why do we often see people standing in an orderly queue in one part of Dhaka and the same people breaking a queue not far away from the first one? If you think about it, this cannot be explained by culture, because it is the same people, or by external policing, because it is the same country.

Over the last 10 years, power was reproduced in Bangladesh by a ruling coalition using a combination of repression, fear, and mega-corruption that allowed the enrichment of party supporters and consolidated their power. Over time, economic and political power became more and more concentrated as illicit wealth concentrated at the top. The middle was increasingly hollowed out, and competing political organisations were almost entirely destroyed. This corroded the viability of the economy, and political opposition became almost suicidal, but the political settlement remained stable, till the 36th of July. The student-led mass uprising succeeded precisely because it was not an organised force. The students did not have an organisation that could be destroyed, and despite increasingly violent attempts to reproduce fear, this time violence increased the determination of the street. The political settlement that eventually emerges will depend critically on how the force on the streets translates into new organisations.

VISUAL: ANWAR SOHEL

New laws or even constitutions will not change the political settlement if the rules are not followed. Why do we often see people standing in an orderly queue in one part of Dhaka and the same people breaking a queue not far away from the first one? If you think about it, this cannot be explained by culture, because it is the same people, or by external policing, because it is the same country. The critical factor is usually the distribution of power within the queue, and how people in the queue assess how others will react if they break the line. If everyone in the queue has similar power, the first point of enforcement comes from other people in the queue. In countries with a strong rule of law, the first point of enforcement for violators comes from their peers, because the distribution of power and capabilities creates this self-interest across organisations. Without these "horizontal checks," formal enforcement by police, courts or regulators is never very effective and the enforcers are rapidly corrupted.

The deeper problem in developing countries is that most of our organisations are not likely to fully behave like this immediately. They vary greatly in power and capabilities. Moreover, for most businesses, it is not essential to have a reputation for following rules. They can do most of their business using informal assurances to their suppliers and clients. These are characteristics of developing countries. They rarely have either the interest or the power to check formal violations by others, and are happy if they can do some violations of their own, like not paying taxes or bypassing regulations. In this context, political parties raise money from black sources, and subsequently exercise power by distributing money-making opportunities from the top, rather than collecting legal donations and delivering on a manifesto. Nevertheless, even in this adverse configuration of power and capabilities, how organisations are networked and collectively organised may result in very different political settlements and social outcomes.

During our democratic interlude in the 1990s, most economic and political organisations in the country were grouped around two coalitions. They were both corrupt, engaged in many violations, but there were some effective checks and balances. This was not an advanced country liberal democracy. I described it as a "competitive clientelism." But the checks meant that no coalition had the time to hollow out entire banks or fully destroy the police or courts. But from 2014, this political settlement radically changed. The Awami League destroyed all effective means of replacing it through elections. It began destroying opposition organisations, parties, banks, businesses and eventually even sympathisers. By allying with the ruling party, big businesses rapidly became bigger and business organisations became more concentrated. The SMEs that had driven Bangladesh's growth in the previous decade languished. No new sectors emerged. Overpriced power and infrastructure projects gave the impression that the GDP was rapidly growing. In a paper I wrote in 2017, titled "Anti-Corruption in Bangladesh: A Political Settlements Analysis," I argued that the new settlement was a "vulnerable authoritarianism," with many features similar to Pakistan in the 1960s. It was based on destroying the opposition and instilling fear in others. Ironically, it also shared the same false narrative of development first and democracy later. It was not a dominant party settlement, where a single party includes most political organisations within it. A true dominant party is less violent, more stable, and it does not collapse in a bloodbath. My analysis was correct.

Now that the authoritarian political settlement has collapsed, the vested interests within business and the administration are being temporarily held at bay by vigilance on the streets, and Prof Yunus's interim administration. The entire society is holding its breath, but we must help much more actively. This current temporary settlement is fragile. The damage done by the Awami League makes even a return to competitive clientelism difficult. Opposition parties and middle sections of business have been hollowed out. The Awami League itself is a pariah with its leadership on the run. If the economy falters, a counter-revolution based on a coup cannot be ruled out. We have to work quickly to construct viable networks and organisations that can collectively exercise power to support more progressive rules than the ones that existed. Attempting too much or too little can be dangerous.

The new political settlement will emerge out of the transitional one. The transitional distribution of power is one where the unorganised force of students and citizens is valiantly checking established vested interests. This cannot last unless some of the unorganised power is converted into organised networks: new coalitions of businesses, students, political actors. They should not promise what they cannot deliver, but they should promise what their effective power can deliver in terms of enforcing better rules and strategies. This debate must intensify and inform our leadership.

The sorry state of Dhaka's road dividers

Dr Nawshad Ahmed,
a retired UN official, is an economist and urban planner.

NAWSHAD AHMED

Most of the road dividers in Dhaka city are in a sorry state, having been deteriorating for years. Many of them have not been reconstructed for a long time—for example, in areas like Mirpur Road, Nilkhet, Azimpur, Dhaka University, Shahbag, Paltan, Kamalapur, Asad Gate to Adabor, Pallabi, Mohakhali and Tejgaon areas. In many places, the dividers have fallen apart and the trees planted in the middle of dividers are dying. The few remaining trees are being damaged by the people who cross over the dividers where there is no iron fencing.

Being a densely populated city, Dhaka has lost its greenery very fast in recent decades. Since there are hardly any trees left in some city areas, road dividers are the rare strips of space to plant trees without much hindrance. The urban planning authorities have not reserved enough areas for parks and playgrounds in the city. New residential areas that have developed over the last five decades rarely have adequate areas for parks and playgrounds, and even schools, colleges and universities have very little areas devoted to playing, gardening and tree plantation.

During reconstruction of the city's road dividers, in some areas, the city authorities cut down many fully grown trees. In their places, flower plants have been planted which require high maintenance, a difficult task for the city corporations, which is why many of these plants are also on the verge of death. Planting tall trees is a better alternative for the road dividers as well as a greenery-starving Dhaka, as they provide shade and absorb and store more carbon dioxide compared to the smaller and younger plants. Old trees especially should not be felled at will since it takes about two decades on average for a tree to grow fully.

In recent years, durable concrete road dividers have been constructed by both the city corporations of Dhaka. But the time it takes to construct them is long and the vehicular traffic is seriously disrupted during the construction period. The city corporations should take note of this and look for new approaches, such as using prefabricated slabs for the dividers. Most of the steel fences in the dividers have either fallen apart or been stolen away. I believe high concrete road dividers are more appropriate for the city, which the pedestrians cannot cross, and it is also possible to plant large trees in the middle of those dividers. These road dividers, if constructed properly, will last for decades and will not also need much maintenance.

In recent years, durable concrete road dividers have been constructed by the city corporations of Dhaka. But the time it takes to construct them is long and the vehicular traffic is seriously disrupted during the construction period. The city corporations should take note of this and look for different approaches.

Planting tall trees in the road dividers will prove to have remarkable environmental benefits, too. Trees will cool down the atmosphere, absorb pollution, and result in increased rainfall. Urban trees offer localised cooling of temperature by up to three degrees Celsius. The number of vehicles on the Dhaka roads are increasing fast and traffic congestion is severe; the passengers expect to have some shade from trees while waiting in long queues.

As we have seen in recent decades, due to environmental reasons, the winter season has become much shorter in Bangladesh and cool winter days in Dhaka city are becoming increasingly rare. Thus, the importance of tall trees in the city has become more essential, and the road dividers are appropriate for plantation of these trees. In fact, where it is still possible, the road dividers should be widened to allow planting of more trees.

The city corporations of Dhaka are responsible for the construction and reconstruction of road dividers as well as the planting of trees. These should be undertaken with some urgency and done in a sustainable manner. These trees should be planted and maintained well. Adequate funds need to be budgeted by the city corporations every year and trained manpower should be engaged for this.

Why Israel-Hamas ceasefire keeps failing

Yousef SY Ramadan
is the Palestinian ambassador to Bangladesh.

YOUSEF SY RAMADAN

Yet again, another ceasefire deal for Gaza in Doha has been rejected to pardon a sliver of misery for the Palestinians suffering through the most devastating genocide in Gaza. US President Joe Biden had touted that the latest ceasefire deal was "closer than ever" to being achieved as risks of a wider war in the region sparked fear. But if one knows Benjamin Netanyahu, and the simple fact that he faces political death if the war ends, then hopeful words regarding any ceasefire deals should always be taken with a grain of salt. It was absolutely no coincidence that Netanyahu put five new conditions on the deal and thwarted the possibility of de-escalation in the region.

Hamas has opposed a continuing presence of Israelis in Gaza, and maintained that it will not accept a deal that is not permanent. And it is well-known that Netanyahu's extremist government does not want a permanent ceasefire. Hamas has rejected the latest deal, blaming it mainly on Netanyahu, stating that he is fully "responsible for the lives of his prisoners, who are exposed to the same danger that our [Palestinian] people are exposed to due to his continued aggression and systemic targeting of all aspects of life in the Gaza Strip."

Netanyahu's efforts to smash any efforts for a truce is so blatant that Israeli citizens have been regularly protesting against him, calling for his resignation and a ceasefire deal, which seem to now be synonyms. The families of hostages, as well as the opposition, members of the army and so on, have protested, and even Defence Minister Yoav Gallant bashed Netanyahu's lack of a "post-war" Gaza plan, admitting that it is Israel who has been the disrupter of the deals so far.

For the ninth time in 10 months, US Secretary of State Antony Blinken is visiting the Middle East as talks will resume again in Cairo. All these visits have mainly been to meet Israeli ministers, and all the energy spent has led to nothing tangible except the continuation of hellish extermination of Palestinians. Former US President Barack Obama's Secretary of State John Kerry also made a record number of visits to the region, but after his realisations, he delivered a blistering speech attacking Israel's settlement policy and Netanyahu's extremist government in 2016, stating, "The policies of this government—which the prime minister himself just described as 'more committed to settlements than any in Israel's history'—are leading... towards one state." His remarks were met with criticism, as Netanyahu and the apartheid regime of Israel prevailed in the US establishment.

Netanyahu has handcuffed every mediator of ceasefire deals, especially the US, by imposing conditions that Hamas will not accept, and conditions that he knows Hamas will not accept. The US has failed time and again to exert any real pressure—under a weak president—to make Israel agree to a ceasefire deal; Joe Biden remarked in the Time magazine, as recent as in early June, that there is "every reason" to draw the conclusion that Netanyahu is prolonging the war for his own political self-preservation. Everything that has happened in the past few years has proven a fact that the US cannot deny, which is that the main weapon in Netanyahu's hand is the laxity in US diplomacy towards Israel, which has now morphed into a culture of deference.

The war, however, in many ways, is considered an "American war" with the US's involvement, backing and major backtracking from any solution proposed beforehand. But political calculations regarding the dynamics with Netanyahu suggest that it is now increasingly unobtainable for the US, under this administration, to end the war. One could argue that Blinken's efforts at so-called "peace" would have been more successful had he carried bags of rice and flour in his giant jet and given it to starving Palestinians in Gaza, instead of flying thousands of kilometres to talk and have expensive yet futile conversations.

Netanyahu knows that a ceasefire deal would grant safety to Israeli citizens as well, but it conflicts with his aim to provoke a wider war with Iran. He has been touting messianic beliefs since October 7, 2023, because he has one aim: to use this unprecedented opportunity to rebuild the Israel that Ben-Gurion created, which can only and delusionally be done through the destruction of Iran and its axis.

Netanyahu and his cabinet were very clear in their aims to deliver a multi-dimensional blow, when they decided to assassinate Haniyeh, the head of Hamas' political bureau in Tehran, right after Netanyahu's controversial visit to Washington, where he garnered shameless applause from members of Congress. Iran has maintained that it will retaliate, leaving the US in another precarious situation to deal with a wider eruption in the Middle East. Once again, the US is flexing muscle power with its fleet, sending stealthy fighters, dozens of F-22 Raptors, even a guided missile submarine along with a squadron of Marine Corps, not to mention bolstering US forces in its bases in the region—only to show its support for Israel. As the Democrats face a high-stake elections against Donald Trump where their support for Israel's genocide can play a "make or break" role for Vice-President Kamala Harris's election bid, Biden recently approved a further $3.5 billion of military aid to Israel, as Israel bombed a religious school, Al-Tabieen, and a mosque in Gaza, and parents and family members mourned hundreds of their lost ones, many of whose bodies were dismembered and collected in plastic bags—highlighting unspeakable brutality.

Anyone who has followed the biography of Benjamin Netanyahu knows that he has always held a dream of starting a war with Iran and dragging the US into it. US presidents, including Bush, Obama, Trump and now Biden, have largely never shared Netanyahu's enthusiasm. Netanyahu has long considered Iran as Israel's primary threat to security; even in his address in Congress, he called protesters calling for a ceasefire "Iran's useful idiots," and said, "When we fight Iran, we are fighting the most radical and murderous enemy of the United States." Similarly, in 2012, Netanyahu took a paper showing a graphic bomb to the United Nations General Assembly, and ridiculously made drawings on it on the podium, to demonstrate the grave threats of Iran's nuclear capabilities.

He had waged a public campaign and failed to convince former President Obama to withdraw the US from the Iran nuclear deal, which he achieved later in 2018 with Donald Trump, convincing him to also adopt a policy of "maximum pressure" on Iran, placing it under severe sanctions.

By eschewing reaching ceasefire deals in Gaza now, Netanyahu continues to feed his disturbing obsession with Iran; Netanyahu's "Iranian file is the file of life" is an age-old title by journalists in the region that he achieved for his scorched-earth policy towards Iran since becoming the prime minister of Israel. Even when Netanyahu faced trials and charges of corruption in 2021, he escalated half-covert attacks on Iran's facilities and attacks on Iranian shipping in the Persian Gulf. The political timing of the security crisis of immense "Iranian threats" came not-so-subtly with the goal of making it easier for Netanyahu to form another government under his leadership.

Netanyahu knows that a ceasefire deal would grant safety to Israeli citizens as well, but it conflicts with his aim to provoke a wider war with Iran. He has been touting messianic beliefs since October 7, 2023, because he has one aim: to use this unprecedented opportunity to rebuild the Israel that Ben-Gurion created, which can only and delusionally be done through the destruction of Iran and its axis. This warped logic is the only way to understand Netanyahu's politics.

By taking ceasefire deals off the table, manipulating the US and the West, Netanyahu may just be poised to engineer his dreams professionally. Iran is aware of the depth of the impasse and that the US carriers have been sent with the aim of messaging, not with the aim of igniting a war. But Netanyahu's actions have left Iran with very little options: to respond or not to respond. The wolf has managed to trap everyone in his sadistic quest to become a historical wartime figure. As invincible as he might think he is with a crown on his arrogant head, Iran and Hezbollah are significant powers, and no one knows the scale of Russia's involvement if Israel were to use "unconventional" weapons. Netanyahu is venturing into dangerous territories, putting Israel, the US, and the world on the brink of catastrophe.

Echoes of colonialism in Bangladesh

Shagufe Hossain
is a Bangladeshi advocate dedicated to justice, equity, and youth leadership based in Canada.

SHAGUFE HOSSAIN

In 1757, on the plains of Plassey, a battle reshaped the destiny of Bengal and the Indian subcontinent. The British East India Company, through a mix of military might and betrayal, wrested control from the Nawab of Bengal. This marked the start of British colonial dominance in India, with East Bengal becoming a jewel in the British crown. Exploited for its wealth and strategic importance, Bengal's story continued into 1971 when the people of East Pakistan, now Bangladesh, fought for independence from West Pakistan. This struggle was not just about severing ties with an oppressive regime but reclaiming a suppressed identity. India, with its own colonial scars, played a crucial role in this liberation, but new dynamics began to emerge as the dust settled.

Colonialism in the region did not end with the lowering of the Union Jack in 1947. It's important to note that colonialism, by definition, is the policy or practice of acquiring full or partial political control over another country.

The legacies of British imperialism persisted, with the British dismantling Bengal's traditional industries and redirecting its wealth, leaving behind a fractured society marked by economic disparity, social divisions, and a controlling political system. Throughout recent history, Bengal has been colonised. Whether it is remnants of British imperialism, or the thirst for power, or the threat of regional instability—for one reason or the other—Bangladesh has been subjected to entrenched colonialism and colonialist practices.

Under West Pakistan, and even now, as Bangladesh grapples with the aftermath of dictatorship and threats of Western and regional imperialism, Bangladesh's sovereignty is repeatedly questioned and disrespected. Today, as Bangladesh navigates a new political landscape following Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's resignation and the appointment of Nobel Laureate Dr Muhammad Yunus as interim head of government, the echoes of colonialism still linger as we experience some semblance of hope.

Over the last 15 years, Sheikh Hasina's government has apparently allied herself with regional powers, aligning herself with the so-called "Emerging World Order." With deepening ties with China, through the Belt and Road Initiative (BRI), a delicate dilemma with competing interests from China and India in the Teesta project, and with Russia as the primary investor in the Rooppur Nuclear Power Plant—Sheikh Hasina seemingly positioned herself as almost an antidote to imperialism.

Meanwhile, with claims of backing Sheikh Hasina to stay in power, India's controversial position has been repeatedly highlighted during the "India Out" campaign that launched after the January elections in Bangladesh and is even echoed now.

Since Sheikh Hasina was ousted in a mass democratic uprising against her government's brutal handling of student protests, she has been sheltering in India. A recent report by The Washington Post, revealed that Indian officials had in fact lobbied to their US counterparts to stop putting pressure on Hasina for jailing thousands of rivals and activists before the election in January. Ultimately, the US substantially softened its criticism and "shelved further threats of sanctions," according to the article. However, US officials claimed the decision was calculated, not only borne out of mere lobbying by India, though some did consider the "downside of antagonising India," as the relationship between the two nations deepened in their shared position against China. However, the fact that Bangladesh was a topic of lobbying between the US and India also highlights the downsides of the "balance of power" that Sheikh Hasina sought, which did not serve the people of Bangladesh in the geopolitical sphere.

FILE VISUAL: SALMAN SAKIB SHAHRYAR

Western actions in light of recent developments—visas revoked for the former head of government, cautious diplomacy and the EU's postponement of its Partnership and Cooperation Agreement with Bangladesh—highlighted the continued influence of the West in Bangladesh, reminiscent of colonial powers, which has raised suspicion among some sections of the public.

But truthfully, much of the sanctions—both Rab and the visa sanctions—and denial of asylum to the ousted prime minister may have been responses to human rights violations. Thousands of diaspora members across the globe have campaigned for justice and showed solidarity with the hundreds of lives that have been lost in the weeks preceding Sheikh Hasina's resignation. With movements such as those for Palestine, conversations around justice are changing. There is greater awareness now, and the gradual shift of power dynamics suggest the era of unchecked imperialism may be ending.

Amidst this, India's position, with repeated propaganda in the media over rising Islamist militancy, painting Bangladesh in a broad stroke and trying to control the narrative—by embracing the Awami League's narrative—on Bangladesh's second revolution has been telling. With the swearing in of the interim government, Bangladesh's powerful neighbour and principal ally of the Awami League, India, stands to lose the most, unless there is a quick strategic shift to recognise the new Bangladesh as a people's one. Though conversations have taken place between the chief advisor and India's prime minister, the tense aura over the two nations' relations has not lifted, and whether India will truly commit itself to the people of Bangladesh remains to be seen.

In navigating colonialism, we have to ask ourselves, who is striving for control. India is seen by other countries in the region as a meddling influence; five citizens from Sri Lanka, Nepal, and Bangladesh issued a letter in the wake of Hasina's ouster, published in The Wire, demanding "that the government of India desist from interfering in our respective polities." India's blatant support for Sheikh Hasina's regime to maintain control over its neighbour's political trajectory, reeks of colonialist strategies. When one looks at the history of British colonialism in the region, it often seems that the oppressed tend themselves to become oppressors.

During Sheikh Hasina's regime, like many others, Dr Yunus also suffered judicial harassment. The US showed significant support for Dr Yunus. In an open letter dated August 27, leaders, including former US President Barack Obama, former UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon and more than 100 Nobel laureates, said they were deeply concerned by threats to democracy and human rights in Bangladesh specifically citing the case of Nobel laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus.

As a globally respected personality, Dr Yunus is welcomed by many—including the youth—who are seeking change. Yunus's leadership will be crucial in determining whether Bangladesh can navigate this world order, where realpolitik and imperialism persist, and preserve its sovereignty. But as the nation struggles with collective post-traumatic stress, the question that comes to mind is: can Dr Yunus remain steadfast in the face of international pressure and navigate Western imperialism with the same grace as he is doing with our most influential neighbour?

The political landscape in South Asia is fast evolving. Though in turmoil, Bangladesh—due to its size, location and economy—is well positioned to be a key player in this new world order. And how India adapts to the new change, will determine whether it can unlearn its colonial legacies to embrace a future of mutual respect and cooperation. The challenge for Bangladesh's leaders will be to assert sovereignty and resist external control, whether from former allies or new global powers. For now, Bangladesh stands as a reminder that echoes of colonialism, though faint, still resonate in New Delhi.

FILM INDUSTRY AT A STANDSTILL

How long till cameras roll again?

ZAHID AKBAR

The film industry has been in a slump ever since the anti-discrimination student movement took centre-stage. The release of new films and shooting schedules has been on hold for quite some time. With the formation of the interim government, there's a slow but cautious move toward planning new film productions. However, many scheduled shoots are still indeterminate, with no clear timeline for when filming might fully resume.

Industry insiders point to one major cause: The reluctance of production companies. In the current political climate, investors are hesitant to back new films. Producers prefer to wait until the situation in the country stabilises before committing to any major projects.

According to industry experts, it could take up to six months for things to return to normal. The ongoing political uncertainty has created a sense of caution among producers, who are choosing to steer clear of new ventures for the time being.

As a result, the cameras remain idle, with no new films entering production. The industry remains in a state of uncertainty, waiting for a more stable and favourable environment to bring back the magic of cinema.

One of the most anticipated films set to begin production is the big-budget project Borbaad, starring Shakib Khan. Initially slated to start shooting at the end of September, the film has now been delayed. The production company has yet to confirm a new date, leaving the schedule in limbo. Directed by Mehedi Hasan Hridoy, the film pairs Shakib Khan with Kolkata actress Idhika Paul.

In addition to Borbaad, another Shakib Khan starrer Sher was set to begin filming in December. However, that project has also been pushed back for the foreseeable future. With two major productions now on hold, it's clear that the uncertainty in the industry is affecting even the biggest stars and their high-profile projects.

Local famed director Saif Chandan's upcoming project Shaheb was set to be shot in September this year. Starring Sariful Razz and Idhika Paul, the film is now postponed until further notice due to the ongoing industry crisis. For now, there's no clear timeline for when production might resume, reflecting the broader uncertainty gripping the film industry.

Similarly, Saikat Nasir's Masud Rana, starring Puja Chery, is another film on the list, however, the director remains optimistic, hoping to get the cameras rolling again in the coming months, despite the setback.

Another film starring Puja Chery and Ador Azad titled Dorodiya was announced earlier this year. There is no update for the film's shooting yet.

Several directors have spoken about the resumption of shooting for new films.

Shaheen Sumon, the general secretary of the Bangladesh Film Directors Association, recently told The Daily Star, "Currently, no new film shoots are happening at the BFDC. Filmmakers from outside may be working on projects, but for now, it seems the next few months will remain quiet. We anticipate that directors may resume shooting new films after this period. A clearer picture of when new shoots might begin should emerge within the next month."

Filmmaker Anonno Mamun remarked, "All the shoots that were planned have been postponed for the time being. Those who used to produce films are taking some time off. There was a plan to shoot the film Sher starring Shakib Khan, in December, but that too has been put on hold. Production companies have stepped back a bit. It seems that we might start shooting this film sometime next year. It's unfortunate that, just as the Bangladeshi film industry was experiencing a resurgence in recent years, we now find ourselves in this situation. I hope things will get back on track soon."

Director Saikat Nasir shared "We had originally planned to shoot the film Masud Rana abroad this August. Unfortunately, those plans have been put on hold for now. We're hopeful that we can resume shooting within the next two or three months. Given the current economic challenges in the country, addressing people's fundamental needs—such as survival, healthcare, and education—must take precedence. I believe things will improve soon; we just need to be patient a little longer."

Filmmaker Saif Chandan believes that the current situation is not suitable for shooting, rather, it's time to focus on nation-building. "My big-budget film Shaheb was set to start shooting in September. Unfortunately, the shoot has been postponed, and there's no clear timeline for when it might resume. The production company is currently hesitant to proceed. While there's hope that filming might happen in the future, the exact timing remains uncertain."

'Mother of Democracy': Movie to be made on Khaleda Zia

A filmmaker has expressed interest in making a movie about BNP Chairperson Begum Khaleda Zia, now that Sheikh Hasina's regime has ended.

Director MK Zaman is set to direct a film titled Mother of Democracy. The title has been registered with the Bangladesh Film Directors Association.

Akhond Entertainment PLC is producing the film, with the script already completed and pre-production currently in progress. Filming is planned to begin next month, on September 25.

The director refrained from disclosing the cast at this time, suggesting that there will be surprises in the announcement.

James denies political ban on 'Bangladesh' song amid rising rumours

Nagarbaul James's iconic patriotic anthem Bangladesh, created by Prince Mahmud, has sparked new controversy. The song names key figures in the nation's formation, including Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman and former president Ziaur Rahman.

After the fall of the Awami League government, a rumour claimed James hadn't performed Bangladesh for eight years due to its mention of Ziaur Rahman, alleging a political ban.

James, however, has finally addressed the issue, clarifying that he never made such a statement.

James' manager Robin Thakur explained, "James is a professional artiste solely focused on connecting with his audience through music. He has no political aspirations. The statements attributed to him are completely false."

take place across two venues in the UAE – Dubai and Sharjah.

With the BCB going through a sea of changes following the change of government, a number of directors of the board as well as the board president Nazmul Hassan Papon have refrained from office duties. Compounded with travel advisories on citizens of four participating countries and the ever-evolving security situation in Bangladesh, it was a matter of time before the ICC made the final call over the tournament.

"It is a shame not to be hosting the Women's T20 World Cup in Bangladesh as we know the Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) would have staged a memorable event," ICC chief executive Geoff Allardice said in a statement.

"I would like to thank the team at the BCB for exploring all avenues to try and enable the event to be hosted in Bangladesh, but travel advisories from the governments of a number of the participating teams meant that wasn't feasible. However, they will retain hosting rights. We look forward to taking an ICC global event to Bangladesh in the near future."

They said the previous government left the country in ruins. They said deep reforms and restructuring were needed in the banking sector, revenue administrations, education, and industry.

"We are a witness to what happened over the last 15 years. The Bangladesh private sector is with you 100 percent," said Mahbubur.

Yunus asked the delegation "to think outside the box to achieve greatness as a nation".

Senior business leaders, including FBCCI President Mahbubul Alam, Tapan Chowdhury, Kutubuddin Ahmed, AK Azad, Simeen Rahman, Khandoker Rafiqul Islam, Naser Ezaz Bijoy, Fazlul Hoque, and Mohammad Hatem, attended the meeting.

Meanwhile, financial crackdown on Awami League ministers, lawmakers and leaders continued yesterday with the freezing of more bank accounts of the officials of the past regime. Financial regulatory bodies also took other restrictive measures against several more officials.

The National Board of Revenue (NBR) yesterday sought details of all types of bank accounts and transactions of Sheikh Fazlul Karim Selim and his family members to check if they have been paying their taxes properly.

Selim, a former member of parliament and one of the Awami League's presidium members, is also a cousin of Sheikh Hasina.

Meanwhile, the BFIU instructed all banks to freeze accounts of former education minister Mohibul Hassan Chowdhoury Nowfel and his family members.

It also issued a similar instruction regarding former state minister for power Nasrul Hamid and his family members.

Banks were also asked to block the transactions of any business account of Nowfel and their family members, including his parents, for a period of 30 days.

Citing a provision of the Money Laundering Prevention Act, 2012, the agency also ordered banks to block the locker services of the persons, if there is any, for 30 days.

The BFIU also sought an update of the accounts within five working days since the issuance of the letter.

In another instruction, the anti-money laundering agency ordered banks to lock the accounts of Biplab Kumar Sarker, joint commissioner of Dhaka Metropolitan Police, for 30 days. The BFIU also asked banks to provide transactions and other details of Biplab.

Meanwhile, the BFIU also has asked banks to freeze accounts of former BSEC chairman Shibli Rubayat Ul Islam and his family members.

Banks have also been asked to suspend locker facilities extended to Islam and his family members for 30 days. The BSEC chairman resigned from his post on August 10 citing health reasons.

"Ensuring every citizen's right to vote is the main tool of the people's political empowerment," he said.

"Let us play our responsible role from our respective positions to ensure effective state reforms and establish the discrimination-free democratic state desired by the youth, shunning the path of revenge and vengeance," Tarique said.

He described the deposed Awami League government as "the fallen anti-people forces" and called for bringing them to book to uphold the spirit of the student-led uprising.

The BNP acting chief credited the "ally force of the movement", alluding to his party, for "timely steps" to prevent the Sheikh Hasina government from making the situation worse.

He welcomed the interim government's initiative to prepare a list of the victims of violence during the uprising and extend necessary support to their families. They should be given a state reception and honour, he added. The BNP acting chairman also backed the demand for observing August 5 as a national day.

He slated Hasina for "grasping the freedom of the press" and called on the media to question her activities.

"The people expect the newspapers to write fearlessly that 'Hasina fled'. If any media adopt any evil strategy to use different words instead of 'Hasina fled', it will make your freedom of conscience questionable to the people," he said.

He said the media should also broadcast special programmes on the suffering of the victims of enforced disappearance, murder and abduction in the last 15 years.

"Ask why the investigation into the case of Sagar-Runi murders has not been completed even in one era," he said.

Continuous reporting on Hasina's wrongdoings will stop people from taking the same path in future, according to him.

EXTRADITE HASINA: FAKHRUL

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday asked India to extradite Hasina for her trial as per the people's demand.

"It is our call to you that you should hand her over to the government of Bangladesh in a legal way," he said after paying tribute to party founder Ziaur Rahman in Dhaka.

"Staying there, she [Hasina] has started various plots to thwart the revolution that happened in Bangladesh," he alleged.

unruly people chanted slogans demanding their execution. They continued their protest inside the courtroom until the hearing was completed.

The incident happened despite the presence of a huge number of law enforcers on the court premises.

The remands were granted after Mohammad Tofazzal Hossain, officer-in-charge (investigation) of Mohammadpur Police Station and investigation officer of the case, produced them with a 10-day remand appeal.

In the remand appeal, Tofazzal said both accused were aware of the violence and killing of the victim on July 19 during the violence centring the quota reform protests.

So, they need to be remanded to find out the masterminds and instigators behind the murder and their whereabouts, he said.

Dipu Moni was arrested from the capital's Baridhara DOHS area on Monday while Arif Khan Joy was arrested from Dhanmondi area yesterday.

On August 13, Amir Hamza Shatil, a resident in Mohammadpur area, filed the murder case against former prime minister Sheikh Hasina and six others with a Dhaka court.

In this case, the names of Dipu Moni and Arif Khan Joy were not included in the first information report (FIR), but later they were shown arrested.

This was also the first case lodged against former prime minister Sheikh Hasina after she resigned and fled to India amid a mass uprising on August 5.

U-20 footballers pay tribute to martyrs

Bangladesh's young footballers dedicated their first goal against Sri Lanka in their first match of the SAFF U-20 Championship in Kathmandu yesterday to the martyrs of the student protesters, who laid down their lives during the recent quota movement which eventually culminated in the ouster of the Sheikh Hasina-government. Mirajul Islam scored the opening goal of the game in the 17th minute of the match, and soon pulled on a t-shirt over his jersey with the words: "In memory of Mughdho and Abu Sayed; Remember the fight and the bloodshed for our country." Piash Ahmed Nova later scored a second goal late in the second half to wrap a comfortable victory for the young Bangladesh team, who picked this occasion to pay their respects to the fallen. Sayed and Mir Mugdho were two of the earliest martyrs of the movement, allegedly killed by rubber bullets fired by the police, in Rangpur and Dhaka, respectively.

Tigers out to prove a point

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh will be out to prove a point against Pakistan with an eye on improving on their past performances as the first match of the two-Test series against the hosts commences in Rawalpindi today.

Bangladesh have never beaten Pakistan in Tests, having played 13 Tests against them, losing 12 and managing only one draw in 2015 in Khulna.

The last time the Tigers played a Test in Rawalpindi was back in 2020, where they suffered an innings and 44-run loss.

Bangladesh captain Najmul Hossain Shanto, however, claimed the players are not feeling the burden of the poor record and are intent on breaking new ground in Pakistan.

"Records can be changed. It's not going to be easy, but as I said we have a balanced side. We believe we can do some special things this time. The players are really excited to play here," Shanto said at the pre-match press conference yesterday.

The wickets in Rawalpindi have historically been batting friendly but the presence of four seamers in the Pakistan eleven, which was announced on Monday, suggests there will be some help available for the quicks.

On flat decks, batting becomes key in order to get a positive outcome but the lack of application from the batters' has been the biggest concern for the Tigers in red-ball format in recent times.

Unlike Pakistan, Bangladesh have chosen to employ the traditional way of announcing the playing eleven on the day of the match after having a look at the wicket, said Shanto, and he also expressed optimism about his sides' chances against Pakistan.

"I felt we had a good series against New Zealand, we didn't play well against Sri Lanka. We have a good opportunity this time against Pakistan."

Bangladesh played on flat surfaces in the home series against Sri Lanka in March this year, but the batters looked out of their depths against the Lankan pacers' well planed attack in both Tests.

Inadequate preparation was argued as one of the key factors behind the batting debacle against Sri Lanka and although the bowlers have been doing well, Shanto knows the batters will have to come to the fore.

"We all know our batting hasn't been good in the recent past. But we've had a good preparation this time. Players tried to prepare well in the time they had. Everyone has the belief that our batting unit will do well this time," Shanto said.

Veteran batter Mushfiqur Rahim is fit to play according to the skipper but all eyes would be on other veteran Shakib Al Hasan, who was a member of parliament from Awami League, which fell from power in the face of a student-led people's movement.

Shanto said that Shakib will be able to put politics behind and focus on cricket.

"He has played this game for so long so he knows his role, he knows how to prepare himself. I'm not thinking about his political career. I hope he will do something special in this series," Shanto said.

» Bangladesh are yet to win a Test against Pakistan. The Tigers have played 13 matches against Pakistan and have lost 12, managing to draw a solitary match at the Sheikh Abu Naser Stadium in Khulna in 2015.

» Babar Azam is 102 runs away from reaching 4000 Test runs.

» Amongst active players, Shakib Al Hasan has scored the most runs, 508 at an average of 63.5 in five matches, in Bangladesh-Pakistan Tests.

» Pakistan, currently sixth on the World Test Championships standings, have won two and lost three matches, while Bangladesh, with a solitary win and three losses, are eighth - one place ahead of bottom-placed West Indies.

BCB set for major shake-up

SPORTS REPORTER

The much-anticipated meeting of Bangladesh Cricket Board's (BCB) directors will take place at the Ministry of Youth and Sports today, where major decisions are likely to be made, including the resignation of long-standing board president Nazmul Hassan Papon.

Despite repeated attempts to contact CEO Nizamuddin Chowdhury -- who called the meeting on behalf of the BCB boss -- he could not be reached yesterday. However, BCB director and Game Development Committee chairman Khaled Mahmud Sujon later confirmed to The Daily Star that the meeting is scheduled to begin at 11:00 am.

"I think the decisions taken in the last board meeting and how to run the board will be discussed during the board meeting," Sujon informed.

Since the fall of the Awami League government following a student uprising on August 5, most of the BCB directors have gone into hiding, including the BCB president, leaving many positions inactive.

Papon, who is reportedly in London, is expected to join the meeting virtually alongside some other directors who also left the country, while others will attend the meeting in person.

According to the BCB constitution, if the board president resigns, the existing directors of the cricket board will decide on their next course of action to choose the next president from the directors' panel.

There has been discussion about the venue for the BCB board meeting, which is usually held at the BCB office or in hotels but will now take place at the ministry. It has been confirmed that no ministry officials will attend, as their participation contradicts the protocol.

"The Youth and Sports adviser [Asif Mahmud] isn't authorised to attend the meeting. If anyone pays a courtesy visit later after the meeting, that's a different matter," said a National Sports Council (NSC) official, adding that the adviser has urged BCB officials to follow constitutional procedures and has refrained from enforcing any decisions.

It has been learnt that NSC has already completed their framework ahead of the meeting, as they are set to nominate former national team captain Faruque Ahmed -- the frontrunner for the role of president -- and veteran coach Nazmul Abedeen Fahim as two of their directors on the board, replacing Jalal Yunus and Ahmed Sajjadul Alam Bobby.

While Yunus resigned from his position on Monday, Bobby has yet to step down; though both were asked to do so by NSC.

When contacted, Sajjadul told The Daily Star that he had not even received any notice about today's meeting. On the other hand, Fahim confirmed that he has recently been contacted by NSC officials and expressed his willingness to join BCB.

"They have contacted me recently, but until I receive a document, I can't confirm anything," said Fahim, who had contested in the BCB election in 2021 in Category C against former skipper Mahmud but lost.

Pope ready to lead England his way

AFP, Manchester

Ollie Pope is prepared to "do his own thing" as England Test captain but accepts he is in caretaker charge of what is still effectively Ben Stokes' side.

Pope will become the 82nd man to take up the captaincy when he leads England out in the first Test against Sri Lanka at Old Trafford starting Wednesday.

The 26-year-old Surrey batter was promoted from vice-captain after Stokes was ruled out after suffering a torn hamstring playing in The Hundred.

Stokes is set to miss the three-match series against Sri Lanka. Pope's elevation caps a rapid rise for a cricketer who was not certain of his place when Stokes took charge two years ago alongside coach Brendon McCullum.

Stokes first led England in 2020, deputising for father-to-be Joe Root who left a message reading, "do it your own way".

Pope has no qualms about sticking with the basic 'Bazball' approach and will also be able to call directly on Stokes, who will be with the England squad for all three Tests.

"It's a great opportunity for me, one of the greatest honours in English cricket," Pope told a pre-match press conference at Old Trafford on Tuesday. "But I think it's still Stokesy's team.

"That's probably the difference. I've had no message in my locker but I'm sat next to him in the changing room!

"It's going to be great to have him around. If I want to lean on him, I can lean on him and I think he's going to let me do my own thing for the course of this Test series as well.

"I've picked his brains a little bit on that moving forward. It's a lot of the same messages but from a different voice and in my own way.

"He's obviously going to be watching, chatting, so I can have those conversations in the intervals if I think anything needs to change and we can bounce a few ideas off each other.

"We've got some great coaches and obviously he's just another brain in the changing room."

Meanwhile, England have opted to include an extra fast bowler in Matthew Potts to replace the injured Stokes when they named their eleven for the first Test against Sri Lanka today. Also, Dan Lawrence earned a recall for his first Test appearance in more than two years with regular opener Zak Crawley nursing a finger complaint.

Veteran striker Jamie Vardy celebrates his equaliser that earned newly-promoted Leicester City a 1-1 draw at home with a profligate Tottenham Hotspur in their Premier League season opener on Monday. Spurs dominated the first half but Pedro Porro's opener in the 29th minute was the only time they could make one of a host of good chances count before Leicester skipper Vardy headed in his team's only goal with 57 minutes gone.

UN ready to help restore democracy

Says Guterres in letter to CA

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

UN Secretary General Antonio Guterres has written a letter to the Chief Adviser to the Interim Government, saying that his leadership will be crucial in bringing an end to violence, ensuring accountability and charting a course towards democratic elections.

In the letter issued on August 16 and shared by the chief adviser's Press Wing last night, Guterres offered his best wishes to Yunus and welcomed his efforts to restore calm and to organise elections in Bangladesh.

"It is my hope that your government will take an inclusive approach, including by taking into account the voices of the youths and women, as well as that of minority and indigenous communities," the letter says.

GRAFT ALLEGATIONS

ACC to probe 2 ex-ministers, 3 former MPs

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Anti-Corruption Commission yesterday decided to launch probes against five former members of parliament, including two former ministers, for allegedly amassing wealth illegally.

According to an ACC source, the lawmakers who will be investigated are former minister of shipping Shajahan Khan (Madaripur-2 MP), former minister of primary and mass education Mostafizur Rahman Fizar (Dinajpur-5 MP), Awami League Cultural Affairs Secretary Asim Kumar Ukil (Netrokona-3 MP), Jannat Ara Henry (Sirajganj-2 MP) and former general secretary of Jubo Mohila League Apu Ukil (lawmaker from reserved seat).

Meanwhile, ACC also launched probes against Ashraful Alam Khokan, a former deputy press secretary to former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, and Md Jahangir Alam, a former personal assistant to the ex-PM, over corruption allegations.

ACC sources said the decision came after allegations were made against Khokan, who holds dual citizenship of Bangladesh and the United States, that he amassed a vast amount of wealth through corruption.

Khokan held the post of PM's deputy press secretary from 2013 to 2021.

Meanwhile, Jahangir Alam, who served the former PM for a long time, has many graft allegations against him, said a senior official of ACC.

On July 14, the Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit (BFIU) ordered banks to freeze accounts belonging to Jahangir and his wife Kamrun Nahar.

Help the govt carry out reforms

Tarique tells BNP rank and file

STAR REPORT

BNP acting chairman Tarique Rahman yesterday urged party leaders and activists to ensure effective state reforms and said he believes the interim government will hold elections in due time.

The exiled politician made the remarks in a video message from London, state-run BSS news agency reports.

Tarique also said that a government accountable to the people "must be established by their vote to ensure their participation in the desired state reform to make the democratic rules and regulation sustainable".

So, it is the time to establish accountability-based democracy in the country, he said.

The BNP acting chief said political changeover does not mean only the handover of state power, but the qualitative change of state and politics, for which people's political and economic empowerment is a must.

Israeli air strike hits Gaza school

12 Palestinians killed; Blinken takes ceasefire push to Egypt, Qatar

AGENCIES

Gaza's civil defence agency said an Israeli strike hit a school in Gaza City yesterday, killing at least 12 people, while top US diplomat Antony Blinken was in Egypt for talks on a Gaza ceasefire.

The bodies of ten men and two children were pulled out of the building "after an Israeli plane dropped a bomb on the second floor of the (Mustafa Hafiz School) building housing thousands of displaced people," agency spokesman Mahmud Bassal told AFP.

He said 15 people were wounded in the strike. The Israeli military said the school was targeted because it housed a Hamas command and control centre. It said it carried out a "precise strike on terrorists who were operating" inside the school.

In recent weeks, the military has struck several schools across Gaza, primarily in Gaza City, accusing them of housing Hamas command centres, which Hamas denies. Tens of thousands of displaced people have taken refuge in schools since the Israeli offensive in Gaza broke out on October 7.

The health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said yesterday that at least 40,173 people have been killed in the Palestinian territory in more than 10 months of offensive. The toll includes 34 deaths in the past 24 hours, according to ministry figures.

Blinken flew to El Alamein, the Mediterranean city famous for a World War II battle, yesterday and held talks with Egyptian President Abdel Fattah al-Sisi at his summer palace. Sisi warned of the risk of the Gaza offensive expanding regionally in a way "difficult to imagine".

The International Cricket Council (ICC) yesterday decided to move the Women's T20 World Cup from Bangladesh to the United Arab Emirates, owing to the uncertain situation in the country following the month-long student-led protests which unseated the Sheikh Hasina-led Awami League government on August 5.

The highly-anticipated ninth edition of the tournament, which was scheduled to be held in Bangladesh from October 3 to 20, will now take place in the UAE with Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) continuing as hosts, confirmed the game's global body following a virtual meeting yesterday.

Besides, seven more cases were filed against Hasina yesterday and another one the day before over the killings that took place during the recent unrest.

With these cases, Hasina is now facing 31 cases, including 26 for murder, four for crimes against humanity and genocide, and one for abduction.

White paper on state of economy in the offing

Debapriya to lead panel

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government will prepare a white paper on the state of the economy so that strategic steps can be taken to stabilise the economy, reach the SDGs, and mitigate the challenges after Bangladesh graduates from the LDC grouping.

Economist Debapriya Bhattacharya will be the chief of a panel of economists and eminent citizens, who will come up with the white paper.

Debapriya, convener of the Citizen's Platform for SDGs and a distinguished fellow of the Centre for Policy Dialogue, will choose the members of the committee after talking to the chief adviser.

He said, "It [the white paper] will be a very pertinent transparency exercise to establish the benchmark of the economy. It will inform the future reform measures. I am grateful to the chief adviser that he has recognised its necessity and has taken immediate action."

The panel was given 90 days, starting yesterday, to submit the paper to Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus, said a statement from his office.

Bangladesh's economy has been suffering for a decade and a half due to mismanagement, corruption, capital flight, and unnecessary projects, said the statement.

"In this situation, the interim government should have a clear picture of the economy and [an outline of] the way out of the challenging situation. So, it decided to form a committee to prepare the white paper," it read.

The focus of the white paper will be on public finance management, inflation, food management, external balance, energy and power, private sector assessment, and employment.

Bangladesh to sign int'l convention to protect people

MOHIUDDIN ALAMGIR and BAHARAM KHAN

The interim government is planning to formulate an ordinance to establish a commission to ensure justice for the victims of enforced disappearances and their families.

Bangladesh may sign the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance by August 30, chief adviser's Press Secretary Shafiqul Alam said yesterday evening.

The matter was discussed at a meeting of the advisers to the interim government.

Briefing reporters at the Foreign Service Academy, Shafiqul said as the interim government is committed to investigate each and every case of enforced disappearances, a National Security Adviser will be appointed soon.

The international convention is the first universally legally binding human rights instrument of the UN intended to prevent forced disappearances.

The Ministry of Home Affairs has started preparing a draft of the "Enforced Disappearance Commission Ordinance". The government is considering whether the commission should be able to exercise its power retrospectively, said an official.

A person with the rank of a High Court judge will be head of the commission. Those with experience in working on prevention of enforced disappearance will be members of the commission.

Islami Bank finally rid of S Alam

BB to confiscate S Alam's shares; reconstitute board

MD MEHEDI HASAN

ISLAMI BANK'S S ALAM ERA

- Holds 82pc stakes in the bank
- Took out loans amounting to Tk 74,900cr
- Irregularities found in most cases

After seven years, S Alam Group's control over Islami Bank ended yesterday after the Bangladesh Bank decided to dissolve the board of the country's largest private sector bank that was heavily dominated by individuals linked to the conglomerate.

"They have looted whatever is there to loot -- we now have to rescue the bank from this shattered state," said BB Governor Ahsan H Mansur yesterday in a press briefing.

The existing board, whose chairman since June last year is S Alam group chairman Mohammed Saiful Alam's eldest son Ahsanul Alam, will be dissolved in a day or two and a new board will be formed with BB-appointed independent directors.

The central bank will take over all the shares of S Alam against its liabilities as per law, Mansur said, adding that the Chattogram-based business giant can get back the shares if it repays the amount it owes the Shariah-based bank.

"But I don't think they intend to," Mansur said.

S Alam Group owns as much as 82 percent stakes in Islami Bank, documents show, but the conglomerate maintains it has 32 percent stakes.

The move to dissolve the board comes after a group of Islami Bank officials, former chairman of the board of directors and clients requested the BB governor to do so.

Once a well-run, profitable bank, its financial health took a turn for the worse after S Alam started exerting its influence following ownership change.

Between 2017 and June this year, the Chattogram-based conglomerate and its associates' companies took Tk 74,900 crore, which is 47 percent of Islami's total outstanding loans as of March.

The loans were taken in the name of Mohammad Saiful Alam, and his wife, daughter, relatives and other officials,

An investigation by The Daily Star last year found that S Alam built a US $1 billion empire in Singapore.

ACC sources said all relevant records regarding the allegations will be collected, including how much money he borrowed from banks, what assets he might have acquired illegally, and in which sectors the money was invested.

Feni, Noakhali worst hit; vast areas inundated due to incessant rains, rise in water levels of rivers

STAR REPORT

The overall flood situation in Feni, Noakhali, Cumilla and Noakhali worsened yesterday due to downpours and swelling of many rivers.

A pregnant woman in Brahmanbaria's Akhaura upazila died after being swept away as floodwater rushed into her home.

Vast tracts of land in Habiganj and Moulvibazar and parts of Brahmanbaria and Chattogram have gone under water.

The flooding in the eight districts has left over three million people stranded. Feni and Noakhali are the worst-affected districts.

In Feni, Parshuram, Fulgazi, and Chhagalnaiya upazilas have been badly affected. Besides, large areas under four unions of Feni Sadar and Daganbhuiyan upazilas have been inundated due to rise in the water level of the Chhota Feni river.

Many areas of the district have been without electricity since Tuesday night. The Feni-Parshuram regional road became impassable as floodwater submerged it. One person was reportedly missing in Parshuram.

The Muhuri, Silonia and Kahua rivers swelled further yesterday.

Locals said they did not see such massive flooding in the last 37 years.

Mohammad Selim, a former member of Anandapur union parishad, said Fulgazi and Parshuram upazilas experience floods every year due to onrush of water from upstream, but severe flooding like this year's did

Papon's exit a signal of new era?

BISHWAJIT ROY

Nazmul Hassan Papon's long reign at Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) came to an end yesterday when he resigned as president of the country's most coveted sports body, paving the way for former captain Faruque Ahmed to assume the lead role.

For the past 12 years, Papon -- a lawmaker from the Bangladesh Awami League and former Managing Director of BEXIMCO Pharmaceuticals -- was in the spotlight as BCB president but, unfortunately, mostly for the wrong reasons.

Papon had earned the tag of 'Mr. Interferer' during his tenure as he involved himself in all cricketing matters, undermining the independent functioning of the board's departments and committees.

His resignation predictably saw Faruque -- nominated by the National Sports Council (NSC) as one of its two new directors on the board alongside veteran coach Nazmul Abedeen Fahim -- elected as the new BCB president during an emergency meeting of the board of directors at the Ministry of Youth and Sports yesterday.

"He [Nazmul Hassan Papon] has resigned as president but he still remains as a director and councillor," a board director told The Daily Star on condition of anonymity.

There had been uncertainty surrounding BCB's activities following the ouster of the Sheikh Hasina-led Awami League government on August 5, as Nazmul and many other board directors went into hiding since then.

With the election of the new president, BCB is set to start a new chapter under ex-chief selector Faruque, who is the first to take on the role of board president as a former captain.

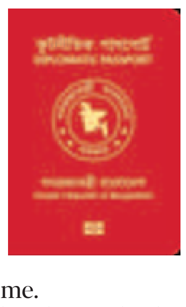
Red passports of former PM, ministers, MPs to be scrapped

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN

The government has decided to cancel all diplomatic (red) passports, including those allocated for the former ministers, members of parliament, and their family members.

It has already started the process of taking necessary steps in this regard, said Md Mashiur Rahman, senior secretary of the home ministry's Security Service Division.



A discussion was held recently at the ministry in this regard, and an order will be issued within the shortest time.

"We have already directed the Department of Immigration and Passports in this regard. They already started the process and hopefully, the order will be issued soon," the secretary told The Daily Star yesterday.

The move comes over two weeks after the fall of the Hasina-led government on August 5.

Along with MPs, their family members also carry diplomatic passports.

Help us get back laundered money

CA asks UK envoy; meets Japanese ambassador

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus yesterday sought UK support as Bangladesh wants to bring back the money laundered abroad over the years.

He sought the cooperation when British High Commissioner to Bangladesh Sarah Cooke called on him at his office in State Guesthouse Jamuna, said Chief Adviser's Press Secretary Shafiqul Alam at a briefing at the Foreign Service Academy.

"The high commissioner assured him [Prof Yunus] of looking into it."

In a statement, the UK high commission said Prof Yunus and Sarah Cooke discussed how the UK government can support the interim government, as it charts a new inclusive and democratic future for Bangladesh.

"Discussions also covered the importance of youth engagement to navigate the challenges that lie ahead," said the statement.

It said the UK is a longstanding partner and friend of Bangladesh and the two countries share a strong and enduring relationship, solidified by their deep people-to-people links and shared Commonwealth values.

Earlier in the day, during a call on by Japanese Ambassador Iwama Kiminori, Prof Yunus sought Japan's financial assistance to reconstruct and rebuild the country.

The chief adviser mentioned that huge funding will be required for this, said Shafiqul, reports UNB.

Islami Bank

according to central bank officials with knowledge of the matter.

Documents pieced together by The Daily Star show that most of the loans were taken by bypassing banking rules and regulations, in a testament to how the Chattogram-based conglomerate exerted its influence on the country's banking sector.

Founded in 1985 by Alam, a relative of former Awami League politician Akhtaruzzanan Chowdhury Babu and former Land Minister Saifuzzaman Chowdhury, S Alam Group has grown into one of the largest conglomerates in Bangladesh.

The amount given to S Alam and its associate companies has left the bank with a deficit in its current account balance with the central bank for more than a year.

To plug the deficit, the central bank provided special liquidity support to the lender without any collateral on the orders of former BB governor Abdur Rouf Talukder.

The liquidity support was stopped after Mansur took charge last week.

Islami Bank started its banking activities in 1983 with 71.50 percent capital from Middle-eastern investors and 28.50 percent from local investors.

Until 2015, S Alam Group had no stake in the bank. In 2016, the business group started buying the bank's shares through seven shadow companies, documents show.

After taking charge in 2017, S Alam Group appointed 7,240 employees-officials violating the rules and regulations. Most of them hailed from Alam's hometown of Patiya in Chattogram.

A day after the fall of the Sheikh Hasina government, a group of officials and staff of the Shariah-based bank started a demonstration at the bank's head office demanding the resignation of S Alam-appointed employees.

On August 11, a clash broke out between the two factions resulting in gunfire that left six injured.

Later on August 19, the bank terminated the contracts of eight top officials -- including an additional managing director and deputy managing director -- who were considered close allies of S Alam Group.

not occur since 1988.

He said floodwater entered almost every house in Parshuram, Fulgazi, and Chhagalnaiya upazilas.

In Noakhali, the flood situation deteriorated yesterday due to incessant rains and tidal surges.

Flooding has left over 1.9 million people stranded in eight upazilas, including Kabirhat, Senbagh, Companiganj and Begumganj, and several municipalities, said Dewan Mahbubur Rahman, deputy commissioner of Noakhali.

Among them are over one lakh people in the municipalities.

In Cumilla, the Gumti and the Muhuri swelled yesterday, thanks to incessant rain and the opening of a sluice gate at the Dumber Lake in Tripura, India. The flooding has affected over 50,000 people.

Floods have hit Adarsha Sadar, Burichang, Brahmanpara, Debidwar, and Muradnagar upazilas, according to the Water Development Board.

The death toll from floods caused by incessant rains and landslides has risen to eight in Tripura, according to Indian media reports.

In Brahmanbaria, the Akhaura land port went under water due to onrush of water from upstream in Indian's Tripura. At least 15 villages near the port have been affected by floods, leaving around 3,000 people stranded.

Traffic on the Akhaura-Agartala road was suspended yesterday morning after a Bailey bridge over the Kalundi canal collapsed.

In Akhaura upazila, a pregnant woman died after being swept away by floodwater.

The deceased was identified as Subarna Akhter, a resident of Birchandrapur village, said Lutfur Rahman, resident medical officer of Akhaura Upazila Health Complex.

Quoting locals, Jalal Uddin, chairman of Akhaura Dakkhin Union Parishad, said the onrush of water from Tripura broke the dam of Howrah river yesterday morning, inundating at least 15 nearby villages, including Birchandrapur.

As the floodwater suddenly entered Subarna's house, she tried to leave the house hurriedly to save herself, and fell into the strong current, he said.

As she was pregnant, she failed to swim ashore, he added.

The overall flood situation in Habiganj and Moulvibazar worsened yesterday as the Khowai, the Kushiyara, the Manu, the Dhalai, and the Juri were overflowing at many points.

More than 80,000 people were stranded as 208 villages in Moulvibazar went under water.

The flood situation in Chattogram's Fatikchhari upazila and its nearby areas deteriorated yesterday due to incessant rain. The Halda was flowing above the danger level.

A part of a dyke at the mouth of Shikder canal in Sitakunda upazila's Banshbaria area was damaged yesterday.

"A portion of the dyke was damaged due to onrush of water from upstream," said SM Tarek, sub-divisional engineer of the Water Development Board.

The interim government has taken adequate preparation to tackle the floods in the country.

"We have adequate preparation," Chief Adviser's Press Secretary Shafiqul Alam told reporters yesterday.

Briefing reporters at the Secretariat yesterday afternoon, KM Ali Reza, additional secretary of the disaster management and relief ministry, expressed concern that more areas may be flooded in the next few days.

He said they have already sent relief materials and dry food to the affected districts.

"The local administration is working in coordination with the deputy commissioners of the flood-affected districts, the coordinators of the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement, the army and volunteers," he added.

BB appoints administrator at Nagad decision like appointing an administrator. We believe this will be a significant step forward in the country's cashless journey."

Earlier, the government had also appointed administrators to several major institutions of the country's financial sector, including some banks and top mobile operators, Mishuk said.

"We think that the decision of Bangladesh Bank will stop the conspiracy of a circle of people against Nagad. Nagad believes it will remain on top in providing service to customers as it was in the past five years," he added.

Nagad, which entered the market back in March 2019 as the digital financial services arm of the Bangladesh Post Office (BPO), is still running on a temporary licence from the BB.

In June, the central bank extended the tenure of its temporary licence for the seventh time. The licence will expire in June next year.

The post office, however, does not have any ownership of Nagad and only gets a share of Nagad's revenue, documents show.

"We used to know that Nagad is a digital financial service provider of the Bangladesh Post Office and the central bank issued an interim licence to the Directorate of Posts to run the MFS," said BB spokesman Md Mezbaul Haque.

The central bank extended the deadline for Nagad to transition into a company in accordance with regulatory requirements to operate as an MFS, Haque said.

"But it has not been able to do it yet despite getting the extended time. We heard that the Directorate of Posts has a profit-sharing agreement with a company named Third Wave Technologies. But they have yet to send the details of the agreement," he added.

Third Wave Technologies, which is owned by Mishuk, was later renamed as 'Nagad Ltd'.

Mishuk maintains that Nagad Ltd has a revenue-sharing agreement with BPO, under which BPO receives 51 percent of revenue. Nagad has provided Tk 14.60 crore as revenue share to BPO.

"This partnership has been instrumental in extending our services to a wider population across Bangladesh, particularly in remote and underserved areas," he added.

The central bank though has been accommodating to Nagad all along.

For instance, in February 2022, the central bank issued a new MFS regulation 'Bangladesh Mobile Financial Services Regulations, 2022' replacing the Bangladesh MFS Regulations, 2018 issued in July 2018.

The new regulation allowed non-bank financial institutions (NBFIs) and government entities, alongside banks, to run MFS. Previously, only banks could run MFS services, which made Nagad ineligible for a full-fledged licence.

A month later, Nagad Ltd applied to the BB for an NBFI licence. A year later, the BB issued an NBFI licence for Nagad Finance, removing any licensing ambiguities for Nagad's MFS operations.

However, Nagad surrendered the NBFI licence less than three months later as its backers manoeuvred to gain regulatory legitimacy by way of a digital bank licence.

In June last year, the central bank invited applications for digital bank licences.

The BB got 52 applications and but only two got the licence: Nagad and Kori.

Nagad also got preferential treatment from various other ministries during the Awami League regime, which helped boost its customer base.

For example, the government's stipend for secondary and higher secondary students was initially distributed through payment methods such as bKash, Nagad, Rocket and various banks chosen by the beneficiaries.

However, in January 2024, without following any tender or competitive process, the Secondary and Higher Education Division of the Education Ministry issued a directive granting Nagad exclusive rights to disburse the stipends.

At that time, 5.4 million beneficiaries were receiving stipends through their preferred channels, with Nagad serving only 20 lakhs. However, the division stated that the remaining 34 lakh beneficiaries would have to convert their MFS accounts to Nagad.

In the directive's headline, the division mentioned that it has approved the disbursal of stipends through Nagad, which had 'signed a deal' with BPO.

Despite this, Nagad failed to disburse the stipends properly and was given multiple time extensions until the end of June.

Eventually, the government directed that the stipends for 19 lakh beneficiaries be disbursed through other MFS providers out of the current 65 lakh beneficiaries.

Meanwhile, the Bangladesh Securities and Exchange Commission (BSEC) in 2021 found some anomalies when Nagad applied to raise capital through zero-coupon bonds.

The company's liability for digital money increased unexpectedly from Tk 447.1 crore in June 2020 to Tk 858 crore in April 2021. At that time, Nagad's losses stood at Tk 147.6 crore while its paid-up capital was Tk 3.5 crore, as per its audited financial statements as of April 30 that year.

The BSEC report said that the company's main function is providing mobile financial services but as per the submitted memorandum of articles and the articles of association, it is not clear whether the company can provide MFS or can act as a payment services provider.

"There were few clarifications requested by the BSEC and we have provided those clarifications and it was fully convinced with those clarifications," Mishuk said, adding that Nagad adheres strictly to all regulatory guidelines and maintains robust financial controls to ensure accuracy and compliance in all our operations.

Papon's exit a signal of new era?

Faruque began his tenure yesterday with a huge task ahead, as the country's premier sport has struggled to progress in the right direction during Papon's tenure.

Bangladesh saw some sporadic success since he took charge in 2012, and he was credited with uncovering the darkest chapters of the country's sporting history, such as the franchise-based Bangladesh Premier League (BPL) match-fixing scandal in 2013.

However, under his leadership, domestic cricket lost its charm and credibility, and alleged corruption further hindered the game's progress.

Papon was elected board president three times, but these elections were marred by fraud and manipulation, with no competition due to the interference of his supporters who manipulated the process to ensure their own councillorship. As a result, the board was filled with 'yes-men' who came through the influence of Papon's allies.

Over time, competitiveness in domestic leagues evaporated due to manipulation by the core group in the board. On the other hand, the first-class tournaments were far from competitive, resembling 'picnic cricket'.

Also, the cash-rich BPL, the lone domestic T20 competition, gradually lost its credibility, which adversely affected the national team's development. Moreover, BCB had never been transparent about the BPL's financial issues.

While Papon had repeatedly promised after every election to implement the long-desired regional cricket associations to decentralise the game, he failed to execute these plans.

He apparently focused all his efforts on interfering with national team issues, where the new president was also a victim, while his selected group allegedly dealt with all corruption matters.

There was no accountability or transparency in the functioning of the board, which was essentially a one-man show. Under these circumstances, everyone will be watching to see whether Faruque can reform the board's activities.

There have been widespread allegations of corruption within the board, and Faruque's first duty will be to take proper measures to uncover the truth.

The new BCB boss will need to focus on domestic cricket if he wants to set things on the right track. He must create an environment where genuine organisers feel comfortable.

Faruque was most successful as a chief selector, but he is now embarking on a much bigger role. He must ensure that the right people are in the right positions and that every committee can perform its duties with freedom.

It's worth remembering that despite the presence of a number of former cricketers at BCB, their presence made hardly any difference to the progress of the game in the country.

Can Faruque make a difference now, with reform being the buzzword in the country following a historic student-led mass protest?

could have investigated the money laundering allegations against S Alam before. Given the current circumstances, starting the investigation now is a positive step."

On August 13 last year, the ACC began investigating the money laundering allegations against S Alam after The Daily Star on August 4 last year published a report titled "S Alam's Aladdin's Lamp".

The report said S Alam built a business empire in Singapore worth at least $1 billion, although there was no record of him taking any permission from Bangladesh Bank to invest or transfer any funds abroad. It said S Alam bought at least two hotels, two homes, one retail space, and other properties over the last one decade, all the while seeking to remove his name from the paper trails.

On August 6 last year, the High Court directed the authorities to investigate the allegations of him owning businesses abroad without Bangladesh Bank's permission.

On February 5 this year, the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court scrapped the HC suo moto rule that had ordered an investigation.

However, the apex court said the ACC, the CID, and Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unity (BFIU) can take legal steps on the matter on their own.

On August 18 this year, the ACC received a copy of the Appellate Division's order. Following the order, the ACC reopened the case on Tuesday.

concentrate on domestic resource collection, public expenditure (public investment, annual development programme, subsidies and debt), and financing of budget deficit.

To get the picture of inflation and food management, it will analyse production, public procurement, and food distribution.

For understanding the challenges of external balance, the committee will focus on export, import, remittance, foreign direct investment, foreign exchange reserves, foreign finance flow and debt.

The panel will also delve into power demand, supply, pricing, costs and purchase agreements to get a clear idea of the problems in the energy and power sector.

Regarding private investment, it will focus on access to credit, electricity, connectivity, and logistics. It will also emphasise on employment at home and overseas, formal and informal wages, and youth employment issues.

The committee members will work for free. The committee will have its office at the Planning Commission and have secretarial support from the General Economic Division of the commission.

The chief adviser's office in the statement said the Hasina-led government left a loan burden of Tk 18,36,000 crore. The government borrowed from internal and external sources to meet its budget deficit without driving hard to raise tax collection.

Although the government's plan was to raise the tax-to-GDP ratio to 14 percent in the current fiscal year, it is now 8 percent. This is an example of economic mismanagement, it said.

In general, people are suffering mainly due to corruption, opportunity of capital flight, and syndication in the market.

Inflation was around 12 percent in July while food inflation was above 14 percent, according to the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics.

The economy lost its path during the regime of the previous government, it added.

Govt mulls over commission

The steps come following the release of many victims of enforced disappearances from secret detention facilities, known as "aynaghar". Chilling details of the torture and inhuman living conditions are now emerging as the victims begin to speak about their distress.

The authorities under the Sheikh Hasina regime have for years denied the existence of such secret prisons.

On August 13, Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus met the activists of Mayer Daak, a platform of the families of victims. He expressed deep concern after hearing the accounts of the families.

"It is uncertain whether some of the victims are alive. Therefore, the government is working to draft the ordinance," said an official.

Mayer Daak coordinator Sanjida Islam Tuli told The Daily Star that the family members of victims are eagerly waiting for the government to form a commission.

She added that an adviser to the interim government assured them that the ordinance will be finalised soon.

Rights activist Nur Khan Liton lauded the step, adding, "We have to ensure the implementation of the legal framework."

"Different state agencies are behind the enforced disappearances; it is the responsibility of the state to save the victims," he said, adding that state agencies must be transparent and accountable.

"Intelligence agencies are above accountability and they get indemnity. This must stop. There should be independent authorities to monitor them," he said.

Ratification of the international convention is also a major step because it will make "Bangladesh answerable to the international forum."

Constitution expert and Supreme Court lawyer Arif Khan said the cases of enforced disappearances could be dealt with the existing laws.

"Courts can take assistance from international laws if they feel it is necessary. We need a localised law in line with international conventions."

According to rights organisation Odhikar, at least 708 people were victims of enforced disappearances between 2009 and June 2024.

The US in December, 2021, imposed sanctions on Rab and seven of its top officers, over serious rights abuses.

It said Rab and other Bangladeshi law enforcement forces are responsible for more than 600 enforced disappearances since 2009 and nearly 600 extrajudicial killings since 2018.

Red passports

Asked about cancelling those passports, the senior secretary said, "As we are cancelling the diplomatic passports of the primary passportholders, automatically their family members' passports will also be scrapped.

"If anyone [holding a diplomatic passport] wants to take a new passport, the person has to surrender the diplomatic passport first and then an ordinary passport will be issued as per law," he added.

Home ministry sources said once the red passports are cancelled, former ministers, and MPs who have been accused in criminal cases or have been arrested may have to go through a legal process to get ordinary passports.

In that case, they can apply for a general passport only after getting a court order.

Along with the MPs, the officials of Bangladeshi missions abroad also get red passports. Those with red passports do not need a visa to travel abroad. They get a visa on arrival after landing in a particular country. Red passports or diplomatic passports are red in all countries.

Once the cancellation order is issued, former MPs or ministers who are currently abroad have to surrender their red passports to the DIP office in the respective countries or after coming back to Bangladesh.

According to ministry sources, former prime minister Sheikh Hasina was a red passport holder. In the face of a mass uprising against her government, Hasina took refuge in Indiaon August 5 after the fall of her government.

Several former ministers and MPs of the AL government have already been arrested. Some fled abroad before the fall of Hasina's government to avoid arrest.

However, there were no reports of anyone fleeing abroad after the fall.

Many former ministers and MPs are still hiding in the country, and law enforcement agencies are conducting drives to arrest them as over two dozen cases have already been filed against them.

According to the passport department, the ministers and MPs get diplomatic passports for five years of the tenure of parliament after the formation of a new government.

When the term of parliament ends, the validity of the passport also expires.

BANNED FOR FORGERY

Contractors pressurise RHD to withdraw ban

TUHIN SHUBHRA ADHIKARY

A group of contractors who were banned by Roads and Highways Department (RHD) over the last year for indulging in forgeries to secure contracts are now putting pressure on the authority to withdraw their ban.

They have even threatened to besiege the RHD headquarters unless the authority withdraws the ban, which has debarred 47 contractors in the past year and demanded that RHD halt all ongoing work until their demands are met.

These contractors were among the highest beneficiaries under the Sheikh Hasina-led government.

On Sunday, under the banner of RHD's Affected Contractors' Coordination Committee, the group submitted a memorandum to the RHD chief engineer, incorporating 10 demands.

In this situation, the chief engineer yesterday held a meeting with the contractors to discuss their demands.

According to RHD sources, 44 contractors were banned between February and July this year for different periods for indulging in different kinds of forgeries to secure contracts. They will not be allowed to participate in any RHD bidding processes during the ban period.

Thirteen contractors, upon filing a writ with the High Court, got a stay against the debarred order, meaning the debarred order is still valid for 31 contractors, they said.

According to sources, the banned contractors had allegedly engaged in malpractice in collusion with a section of unscrupulous officials of the RHD.

Khaleda Zia back home from hospital

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

BNP Chairperson Khaleda Zia returned to her residence in Gulshan yesterday after more than a month's treatment at the capital's Evercare Hospital.

Having been under house arrest for the past five years, she finally went home as a free person following a presidential pardon earlier this month.

She was acquitted of all charges against her following the fall of the AL government on August 5.

Party activists and senior leaders escorted her home as she left the hospital around 7:00pm, said Shayrul Kabir Khan, a BNP media cell member.

Suffering from various ailments, including liver cirrhosis, arthritis, diabetes, and issues related to kidney, lungs, heart, and eyes, the 79-year-old former prime minister was admitted on July 8.

RECOGNISING DIPLOMAS

Doctors protest BMDC decision

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Hundreds of doctors and intern doctors staged a demonstration at the Central Shaheed Minar in Dhaka for five hours yesterday, raising a nine-point demand against the recent decision of Bangladesh Medical & Dental Council (BMDC).

BMDC has decided to recognise medical assistants with Diploma in MATS (Medical Assistant Training School), DMF (Diploma in Medical Faculty), and LMF (Licentiate of Medical Faculty) qualifications as "Diploma Medical Practitioners".

The demonstration, titled "March to BMDC," began at 10:00am, with doctors from various healthcare institutions participating.

At the programme, Prof Nurul Amin, principal of Sapporo Dental College and Hospital, said, "Doctor is not just a matter of identity; it is a matter of qualification. Those who do not have this qualification cannot identify themselves as doctors. Technologists are helpful but are not doctors by any means."

The protesters also voiced grievances about the non-payment of salaries and allowances by some medical colleges and demanded that such institutions be held accountable, with the possibility of closure if necessary.

Among their nine demands are restricting the title of "Dr" to individuals who hold MBBS or BDS degrees, curbing the prevalence of healthcare service providers that lack qualified doctors, and enforcing stricter regulations on pharmacies that sell medicines without prescriptions.

AUGUST 21 ATTACK

Awami League doesn't hold programme

STAR REPORT

The Awami League did not hold any programme marking the 20th anniversary of the August 21 grenade attack on an AL rally in Dhaka that killed at least 24 people.

On this day in 2004, during the BNP-Jamaat alliance government's tenure, the attack targeted an anti-terrorism rally organised by the AL, with the then opposition leader Sheikh Hasina the apparent target.

Every year, the AL placed floral wreaths at the Martyr's Altar in front of the AL's central office.

However, the party did not announce any such programme this year. The AL has been in disarray since party president Sheikh Hasina resigned from her post as prime minister.

2 AL leaders among 3 on remand for murder

Around 380 other party members sued in separate murder cases

STAR REPORT

Two Awami League leaders and a former government official were placed on remand yesterday on charges of murder and violence.

Also, around 380 AL men, including two former lawmakers, have been sued over murder charges.

Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Mohammad Jashim placed AL organising secretary Ahmad Hossain and Chattogram Port Authority's former chairman Mohammad Sohail on four-day remand each after they were produced with a 10-day remand prayer.

Ahmad and Sohail were arrested from Rampura and Banani respectively on Tuesday night in a case filed over the murder of a shop owner, Nabin Talukder, who died after getting injured in Dhaka's Paltan on July 19 during protests.

Nabin's wife, Ruma Akhter, filed the case against unnamed persons on July 20.

Also, a Brahmanbaria court placed Captain (retd) AB Tajul Islam, former state minister for Liberation War affairs, on nine-day remand in a case filed over attacking police and snatching firearms from law enforcers.

Tajul was arrested from Dhaka's Gulshan on Tuesday night.

Police opened fire at a group of BNP men in Banchharampur upazila on November 19, 2022.

Rafiqul Islam Nayan, the then president of Jatiyatabadi Chhatra Dal's Sonarampur union unit, was injured in the incident and later died.

A day later, a sub-inspector of Banchharampur Police Station filed a case accusing 117 people, mostly BNP men, of an attack on police and snatching of firearms from police.

AB Tajul was shown arrested in this case, police said.

Nayan's father had filed a murder case with a local court accusing the then senior police officials of Brahmanbaria, but the court later dismissed the case.

way. Students genuinely want good governance, and we must restore the relationship between students and teachers," he added.

Regarding resuming activities in universities, the adviser said, "We will try to reopen the universities as soon as possible. We will appoint the right people to the highest positions there. We want to hear from the students about their needs and expectations."

"They do not want a partisan administration; they want real governance. Those who assume these positions must have high educational standards and should not be heavily affiliated with any political party," he added.

Speaking on the recent cancellation of HSC and equivalent exams, Wahiduddin Mahmud said there was room for further consideration without cancelling the remaining exams.

He said, "The protesting students expressed that they were mentally distressed. After such an uprising, sitting for an exam would be a mental burden. We later considered that the situation was such, as we haven't been able to restore peace and order yet."

The government on Tuesday cancelled the previously postponed Higher Secondary Certificate and equivalent examinations after several hundred students staged protests at the secretariat.

The process of preparing the results would be decided later, according to the education ministry.

Meanwhile, a meeting of examination controllers of the education boards was held yesterday to decide how to publish the results after the cancellation of the postponed HSC and equivalent exams.

According to sources at the meeting, the education boards are primarily preparing to publish the results, aligning with the students' JSC and SSC exam results, similar to the approach used during the pandemic.

Due to the pandemic, HSC exams were not held in 2020. At that time, the results were published based on an average evaluation of their SSC, JSC, and equivalent exam results.

RHD documents show 41 out of 44 contractors secured 40,231 contracts amounting to Tk 83,178.5 crore during the last 13 years (fiscal years 2011-12 to 2023-24).

On Sunday, the memorandum submitted by the Coordination Committee was signed by nine contractors.

Contacted, RHD Chief Engineer Syed Moinul Hasan said they have asked the contractors to settle the debarment issue with the court.

However, meeting sources said RHD officials expressed discontent over the language of the memorandum submitted by the contractors.

RHD will scrutinise the demands and see if they are logical. Then the points will be taken to the ministry, said one participant, requesting anonymity.

The Daily Star could not contact any of the signatories to the memorandum.

Additionally, a cultural event will be held at the Shaheed Minar on September 1 to commemorate the party's anniversary.

During the briefing, Fakhrul Islam Alamgir said around 198 members of BNP and its affiliated organizations have been killed during various movements over the years. These facts need to be publicised, he added.

Fakhrul further emphasised, "If anyone tries to engage in terrorism, extortion, or any other harmful activities, our political leaders must stand up and resist them."

Local BNP men said Babul was supposed to hold two road meetings in Nagarkanda yesterday.

Shama Obaid's supporters broke two arches made to welcome Babul around 2:00am on Wednesday, and chased away his supporters.

Tension prevailed since then as sporadic chases and counter chases followed between the rival groups, eventually ensuing the clash. Some shops of Babul's supporters were vandalised and looted.

Contacted, Babul alleged that Awami League activists have infiltrated BNP to create chaos within the party.

Shama Obaid did not receive her phone.

Confirming the matter, Aminur Rahman, officer-in-charge of Nagarkanda Police Station, said the situation was later brought under control.

Somoy TV broadcast

Earlier in the day, Ahmed Jobaer, a director of Somoy Media Ltd, submitted the petition to the Appellate Division seeking a stay on the HC order.

The HC, on August 19, also issued a rule asking the respondents to explain in seven days why they should not be directed to allow Somoy Media Ltd and its managing director to broadcast and transmit news impartially and fairly through Somoy TV without any threat and coercion.

Secretary to the ministry of information and broadcasting, chairman of Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission, chairman of Bangladesh Satellite Company Limited, and Ahmed Jobaer, who holds 17.75 percent share of Somoy Media Ltd, were made respondents to the rule.

Lawyers AM Mahbub Uddin Khokon and Saqeb Mahbub appeared for Ahmed Jobaer while lawyer Ashsanul Karim argued for Shampa Rahman during hearing yesterday.

Meanwhile, in Narayanganj, a murder case was filed on Tuesday night against AL leader Shamim Osman and 122 others on charge of killing Manir Hossain, 56, during the recent protests.

Manir's younger brother filed the case with Siddhirganj Police Station.

Manir had suffered bullet injuries during a clash in the Mizmizi area of Narayanganj on July 20 and died two days later.

Moreover, in Habiganj, a murder case was filed on Tuesday night against 261 AL men, including former Habiganj-3 lawmaker Md Abu Zahir, on charge of killing a youth named Mostak Ahmed.

Mostak's brother filed the case with Habiganj Model Police Station. Of the accused, 111 were named.

In Lalmonirhat, at least 200 AL men, including the district unit AL general secretary Matiar Rahman, were sued over vandalising and torching BNP office on July 5. A local BNP leader filed the case with court yesterday.

UN reiterates call for accountability

US stresses human rights, ties with Bangladesh

UNB, Dhaka

The United Nations has reiterated its call for accountability for the recent violence, loss of life, and human rights violations in Bangladesh.

"We've been speaking about accountability since the beginning of this particular crisis," said Spokesperson for the UN Secretary-General Stéphane Dujarric at a regular briefing in New York on August 20.

"There will need to be accountability for the violence, for the loss of life, and for all violations of human and political rights," he said.

Meanwhile, the United States has stated that they look forward to working together to support their shared values and interests, such as a free and open Indo-Pacific.

"We do have a defense relationship with Bangladesh," Pentagon Press Secretary Maj Gen Pat Ryder said while responding to a question during a press briefing recently. "As it relates to the Bangladesh government, of course, you know, we would expect human rights to be observed and there to be an avoidance of any type of violence," Ryder said.

AB Party gets EC registration

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Amar Bangladesh Party (AB Party), founded by some former leaders of Jamaat-e-Islami, yesterday got its registration with the Election Commission, with "eagle" as its electoral symbol.

The EC issued a gazette notification in this regard as per the Representation of the People Order, 1972, following a High Court order.

AB Party was among a total of 80 political parties that had applied for registration with the EC since October 2022.

Earlier on August 19, the HC bench of Justice Naima Hayder and Justice Kazi Zinat Haque ordered the commission to register it as a political party as per the Representation of People's Order, 1972 and Rules of Registration of Political Parties, 2008.

After the EC earlier rejected the party's application for registration on July 24, 2023, the party submitted the writ petition on August 23 of the same year upon instruction of its convener AFM Sulaiman Chowdhury.

Later, on August 2023, a divisional bench of HC consisting of Justice KM Qamrul Qader and Justice Md Shaukat Ali Chowdhury issued an interim rule, which was made absolute by the HC bench on August 19 this year.

Somoy TV broadcast to remain suspended

SC chamber judge passes order

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Broadcasting of Somoy TV, a private channel, will remain suspended till further notice, according to an order passed by the Supreme Court's chamber judge yesterday.

The order came in response to a petition seeking a stay on a High Court order on August 19 that asked the authorities concerned to stop the channel's transmission for seven days following a writ petition filed by Shampa Rahman, managing director of Somoy Media Ltd.

The broadcasting of the channel remained suspended since that night.

Justice Md Ashfaqul Islam, chamber judge of the SC's Appellate Division, passed the order after hearing arguments from the counsels for both the parties of the case, and sent the petition to the full bench for hearing on August 25.

IRREGULARITIES IN TEACHER RECRUITMENT

Politicisation of edn instts to blame: adviser

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Many teachers across the country have been dismissed or forcibly removed for political or trivial reasons, which is both inappropriate and tragic, said Education Adviser Wahiduddin Mahmud yesterday.

He made the remarks during a press briefing at the Secretariat in the afternoon.

Wahiduddin said the politicisation of private colleges and other educational institutions has led to widespread irregularities in teacher recruitment.

"We are aware that people across the country are angry about this matter. We will address these injustices. But how these dismissals occurred is highly unjust. I have received thousands of complaints about this. These issues cannot be resolved without principled decisions," he said.

"However, the important thing is that we must maintain decorum in educational institutions. No one should use force or humiliate individuals personally. Regardless of the seriousness of the wrongdoing, it should be resolved peacefully, systematically, and from a neutral position," Wahiduddin emphasised.

"Authorities have started addressing these issues at the highest levels of administration, and this is also happening in schools and colleges, but change will not occur overnight. However, it is unacceptable to use force in any
